REJECTED LOVER KILLED BRIDEGROOM

Young Bride is Dying and Murderer Will Not Recover

ARNPRIOR, Ont., July 17—Bruce M. Leitch, aged 25, a returned soldier of Montreal, is dead, his bride of a week is dying at a hotel in Sand Point and Wm. Bennett, aged 25, of 375 Notre Dame Street, Montreal, is dying in a Renfrew hospital, Leitch, who was on leave from a Toronto convalescent home, was spending his honeymoon with his bride at Sand Point, near here. Bennett, who had been rejected by the girl, who was a Miss Gertrude Lillian Standring, of Montreal, learned of their whereabouts, and arriving in Arnprior yesterday, waylaid them on a lonely road and killed Leitch in cold blood, then shot Mrs. Leitch through the right lung and face, and himself through the head. The three were found lying in the roadway by a hotelkeeper of Sand Point, at whose place Mr. and Mrs. Leitch had been staying.

Switzerland Police Arrest German Spies

PARIS, July 17.—According to a despatch to the Matin from Lugano the Swiss police arrested the correspondents there of the Berlin Tageblatt and the Budapest Az Est, charging them with complicity in an espionage plot. The plot, which is said to have had wide ramifications, has just been unearthed. The correspondent reports it as being against Italy in favour of Germany.

4 U-Boats Were Sunk By American Warships

LONDON, July 17.—Four of the largest and most modern German submarines were destroyed by American warships which were convoying the first instalment of American troops to France, according to a report from German sources, as contained in a Berne despatch to a Rome news agency and forwarded from Rome by Central News.

Will Change Title Of Royal House

King Calls Meeting of Privy Council to Discard German Name.

LONDON, July 17.—King George has called a special meeting of the Privy Council to be held to-day, for the purpose of proclaiming a change in the title of the Royal House.

King George is of the house of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha, whose German name suggests the reason for the pending change in title. Changes have been made recently in the titles of a number of peers who bore names wholly or in part of German origin.

Gang Of Gypsies Travel In Autos

NIAGARA FALLS, Ont., July 17.—A gang of gypsies, who travelled in six automobiles, were driven out of the city yesterday by the police when they began to circuate among the stores, offering to read palms and tell fortunes. They went in the direction of Welland. Chief Welch said he had ordered them out of the city on receiving complaints about them in Niagara-on-the-Lake.

Abandon Zeppelins To Build Aeroplanes

LONDON, July 17.—It is reported in an Exchange Telegraph despatch from Lausanne that no more Zeppelins are being constructed at Friedrichshafen. Thousands of workmen who hitherto have been employed in building airships are now said to be engaged in the construction of a large number of aeroplanes.

RAIN NEEDED BADLY FOR WESTERN CROPS

Condition Which at Present Exists in Three Prairie Provinces

WINNIPEG, July 17.—That conditions in the Canadian prairie West, in so far as this year's crop is concerned, are on a par with those at the same time in 1915, when the prairies reaped their record-breaking crop, is the feature of the fourth report of the season, published by the Manitoba Free Press.

From 190 points in the three provinces heard from, it is gathered that 75 per cent. of the crop is in head in Manitoba and Alberta, and a little better than 50 per cent. in Saskatchewan. Apparently all the damage from the heavy frosts and cold weather of June has not been fully overcome by recent precipitation.

Rain has been fairly plentiful in Saskatchewan, but 14 points out of the 78 points heard from state that rain is badly needed. Fifteen points report the wheat crop below the average, and no district reports a crop above the average, but a number qualify this by saying that with rain soon it will be a good average. Quite a few report a three-quarter crop, and several declare that 50 per cent. is all that can be hoped for. Of 21 points heard from in Alberta ten report an insufficiency of rain. The reports as to the condition of wheat are: Four points, below the average; three points, 50 per cent. of a normal crop. One point indicated a fifteen-bushel crop, and the remainder a fair to good average. Oats and barley do not show up well. One point reports a fair crop, one a good one, and another, crop doing well, while the others are: "Backward," "irregular," "standing still," "short and patchy," etc.

TIME YET FOR IMPROVEMENT

In Manitoba the eighty points heard from with the exception of two, report rain since the last Free Press crop report, but it has been mostly showers; only one or two reporting plenty of rain, while twenty-three report that rain is badly needed. Eighteen points report a crop of wheat below the average, while a number report a fair average crop, this being contingent on rain coming within a few days. With regard to coarse grains, the reports generally are that they are improving, but late, damage from hail has been very slight throughout the West, only one point in Saskatchewan reporting any considerable damage, while in Alberta only three points report slight damage and on eight-mile strip hailed out at another point; in Manitoba, but four points report slight damage from hail. Only three points of the 190 heard from in the Prairie West report indications of rust, being one in Manitoba and two in Saskatchewan.

In summing up general conditions, throughout the West, the commercial editor of the Free Press says:

"It must be remembered it is as yet only July 17, and there is still time for much recovery and improvement, granted proper and favourable weather.

"It is not likely that any condition of weather which prevails from now on can make a bumper crop for us this year, for the reason that so much wheat was seeded on stubble land, and is not as well stooled nor as heavy a crop as that of 1915. The chief difficulty for the present year is that while there have been many good rains in localities, the country as a whole has never once been thoroughly soaked down. A general rain of this calibre within the next week would doubtless put a very different appearance on the situation."

PUT UP TO BAR WOMEN.

Grille in House of Commons May Be Taken Down After Fifty Years.

LONDON, July 17.— The grille in the house of commons which impedes the view of occupants of the women's gallery, probably will be removed in the near future. The question was considered by members recently, one describing the grille as a discreditable and medieval anchronism. During a discussion it was stated that for many years women were allowed to go into the house and at times there were such throngs that they pressed into the seats occupied by members.

On one occasion they were so interested in the debate that they took possession of several seats and it required two hours to remove them. This resulted in the exclusion of women for fifty years. The present grille was erected to prevent a repetition of such scenes and to prevent women from talking to members.

Dyspepsia Man's Greatest Enemy

Is Most Prevalent of All Present-day Diseases, Declares L. T Cooper—Victims Are Whimsical and Melancholy, and Sulfer Great Mental Depression—Disease Can Be Cured, He Says.

Explaining the record-breaking purchase of Tanlac by The Warne Drug Co., Ltd., Lyman Bros. Co., Ltd., Toronto, and the leading wholesale and retail druggists throughout the United States and Canada, Mr. E. G. Harris, representing the Canadian distributor of Tanlac, stated last night that the hundreds of questions now being asked all over Peterborough make it imperative that some explanation be made to satisfy public interest.

Speaking of Tanlac, he said: "Thousands of prominent people—in fact, people representing all walks of life—in the larger cities of the country, where the celebrated medicine has been accomplishing such remarkable results, are even more enthusiastic over Tanlac than Mr. Cooper himself.

"In explanation of this, it should be stated that Tanlac is believed to be the first actually direct specific for catarrhal inflammation of the mucous membranes and the complications which follow them.

"Catarrh of the stomach is one of the most frequent causes of dyspepsia and catarrhal inflammation of the nose and throat leads to inevitable complications, such as kidney and liver affections, rheumatism, etc.

"Show me a man whose eyes are inflamed, whose sense of smell and hearing are affected, and I will show you a man who is suffering from catarrh. Frequently the lungs become involved by the extension of the catarrhal inflammation or germs to the lung substance. Specialists concede this but it has remained for Tanlac, the new formula, to provide the remedy, as has been so conclusively and convincingly proven by the hundreds of thousands, who have been relieved by its use."

At this point Mr. Harris quoted from one of Mr. Cooper's recent lectures, in which he said:

"Of all the distressing conditions that afflict humanity, catarrh of the stomach, or what is more commonly known as chronic dyspepsia, is probably the most prevalent. This most universal malady has baffled the medical profession for years, and the most skilled specialists have been unable to cope with it successfully.'

"Hours might be consumed in describing the sufferings, mental and physical, of the sufferers of chronic dyspepsia and their failure to heretofore get relief. A morbid, unreal, whimsical and melancholy condition of the mind, aside from nervousness and physical suffering, is the usual condition of the average dyspeptic, and life seems scarcely worth the living.

"Dyspepsia, or indigestion, as the case may be, is caused by the taking of too much food, or unsuitable food, and the mucous membrance of the stomach becomes irritated, and there is set up an acute or subacute gastric catarrhal condition which prevents the proper digestion of the food.

"This food is apt to ferment and decompose, and as a result of the familiar distressing symptoms of dyspepsia may arise. In mild cases there is nothing more than an uncomfortable feeling in the stomach, with a certain amount of depression, headache, loss of appetite, perhaps belching of gas and occasional vomiting. There may be also accompanying intestinal symptoms, such as pains in the back, colic, etc. There may be only the familiar heartburn, due to the inflammation of the stomach from excessive gases of fermentation of putrefaction.

"In the most severe cases—those that last over a day or two—the symptoms enumerated may be much more intense. The distress may be marked and the general constitutional symptoms more evident. When this stage is reached the loss of appetite, the mental depression and the general uncomfortable feeling in the stomach are more pronounced. This is particularly true in acute gastritis.

"It frequently occurs from continued errors in diet that this condition becomes chronic, and the symptoms persist for an indefinite period; the appetite is very apt to be varied, although at times very good. Heartburn is frequent if not constant. The stomach is painful on pressure; the tongue is coated, there is a bad taste in the mouth and there are changes in the amount of salivary secretion.

"Most cases of dyspepsia can be cured if the diet is properly looked after and with the proper treatment. Proper eating and the proper amount of food are the most important features of the treatment. Most need to eat too fast and eat too much.

"There is not a single portion of the body that is not benefitted by the helpful action of Tanlac, which begins its work by stimulating the digestive and assimilative organs, thereby enriching the blood and invigorating the whole system. Next, it enables a weak, wornout stomach to thoroughly digest the food, promoting the assimilation of the nourishing products to be converted into blood, bone and muscle."

Tanlac is now sold in Peterboro by the Warne Drug Co.

Press On Speech Of Britain's Premier

"MUST BE A HAPPY MAN."

Brooklyn Eagle: "Great Britain's Premier, despite his enormous tasks, must be a happy man. Almost for the first time he sees the British Empire doing the things he was put in power to have it do, and in the doing of those things, in co-operation with the Entente Allies, Lloyd George has a right to proclaim that victory is assured."

"REITERATING A DETERMINATION."

Pittsburg Sun: "Lloyd George's speech at Glasgow, in which the declaration is made that the end of the war can come only with the unqualified success of the Entente Allies, is merely reiterating a determination that was manifest from the moment Germany mobilized her forces on the western front."

"HOLDS UP A TEMPTING OFFER."

Boston Globe: "It is the Germans who are entertaining the idea of peace. Lloyd George's speech is for them. When the British Premier speaks of the democratization of the German government as the best guarantee of future peace he holds up a tempting offer to the weary Germans.

"WILL BE WIDELY DISCUSSED.

Rochester Union and Advertiser: "This speech will be widely discussed, and will probably be considered a final pronouncement on the war and its outcome and on the manner in which peace shall be made. Certainly it does not set forth anything to which Americans cannot give unqualified adhesion."

"SHOWED MODERATION."

Omaha World-Herald: "Lloyd George's Glasgow speech on the possibilities of peace is marked by good temper and sound common sense. The British Premier in what he said, in what he implied, and in what he failed to say showed a moderation that to many will seem surprising."

"MEANS A CHANGE IN ALLIES' POLICY."

Wheeling Register:—"The Glasgow speech of Premier Lloyd George in which he declared the latest war aims of Great Britain, is the fairest that has so far emanated from English sources. The change in Lloyd George means a change in the Allies' policy. It is a step nearer the realization of a world again at peace."

"SPEECH OF GREAT IMPORTANCE.

Springfield Republican: —"England's reply to the growing demand for a restatement of war aims, a restatement made reasonable and almost necessary by the Russian revolution and the entry of the United States into war, is given by the Prime Minister in a speech of great importance and on the whole of reassuring character."

"It's confidence that does it."

Red Cross Society's Thanks To All Who Helped On Saturday

Tag Day. No one will object, if in tendering its most hearty thanks to all who helped to make our Tag Day a success, the office bearers and executive head the list with the "Press." Over and over again both the Examiner and the Review have placed the Society under a debt of deep gratitude for the kind and sympathetic way in which they have lent their generous aid. Of course the Red Cross Society stands on a different footing to any other society that is endeavouring to serve its country and empire, and newspapers all over the continent have recognized this, but at the same time we doubt if any newspapers have given such generous support to its local Red Cross Society, as the Peterborough papers have done; so once more we tender cordial and hearty thanks to them.

Others whom we wish to thank are the Captains and ladies who helped in the various districts; one and all stuck to their posts in spite of rain and storm, and did not weary in well doing.

To Mr. Peck, President of the Children's Aid Society, for lending collecting boxes.

Mr. Stinson, for the use of the Tit-It Theatre for headquarters.

To all those who so kindly lent their motors and to Mr. John Edgar for twine, (two dozen balls).

THE PIG.

"This pig went to market,
While others stayed at home;
This one was sold for Red Cross,
Oh, don't leave him alone."

We are not applying for the Poet Laureate's laurels, but in acknowledging the splendid and unique manner in which Mr. David Breckenridge of Asphodel Township, Westwood, has shown his interest in our Society, we felt we simply had to point the moral and involuntarily we burst forth into poetry.

This pig was christened the "Red Cross," one when selected by Mr. Breckenridge, and undoubtedly such a name added greatly to the pig's sense of importance, it would consider itself as of a higher caste than the other pigs and carry itself accordingly.

In the human race a feeling of importance and weight sustains one wonderfully and causes one to wax fat and flourish, and the same applies to the pig-race.

This pig, which brought $56.10 into the Red Cross Exchequer, had this sense and so became "some pig." Will some others of our farmer friends follow Mr. Breckenridge's example, if they will pick one out for the Red Cross, not only will it flourish, but good luck will be with all the others also, and our farmer friends would enjoy the privilege of helping a Society which has practically no expenses, and which works to restore the fallen, cheer the sick and comfort the lonely men who are fighting our battles.

Who will be the next to follow the fine example set by Mr. Breckenridge?

Mr. Greene Returns From Convention

Local Music Dealer Was the Only Canadian on the Programme

Mr. J. M. Greene of the Greene Music Store, who returned on Monday from the annual Edison Dealers' Convention, enjoys the distinction of being the only Canadian on the programme of the convention. Mr. Greene's paper on "How I use 'Along Broadway'," met with great approval and Mr. Greene was highly complimented by both the press in New York and the 1,600 Edison dealers who attended the convention.

The Programme.

The programme opened on Thursday, July 12th in the ball room of the Waldorf Astoria with the general business on hand and several interesting papers by prominent dealers were heard, after which the Edison Company gave a complimentary banquet to the visitors at which 1,500 sat down. In the evening several of the leading Edison artists were heard, including Marie Rippold, Alice Berlett, Thomas Chalmers, Ciccolini, and Lyman the flutist in a flute solo.

General Business.

On Friday the general business was resumed and on Saturday a special train took the visitors to the Edison factory, where they met Edison at Orange, N.J. The visitors inspected the factories and were given a thorough insight into the manufacture of the gramaphone. On returning to New York the Edison Band entertained the delegates to what Mr. Greene, after 25 years of experience with bands, considered one of the best band concerts he has ever heard.

On Saturday afternoon the visitors spent their spare moments in touring New York and sight-seeing.

Heard Dr. Chapman.

On Sunday the twenty-eight Canadians who were at the convention attended Broadway Tabernacle (Congregational), where they heard the celebrated evangelist, Dr. Wilbur Chapman.

Mr. W. B. Wilmott, of Fall River, was chairman of the convention.

LONG BREAD LINES IN GERMANY.

STOCKHOLM, Sweden, July 17. — Long lines of persons waiting for articles of food, common sights in the streets of the cities of Germany, now are seen in Sweden. The Gothenburg police estimate that more than 10,000 persons, mainly women and children, formed a line to get their share of some potatoes bought by the city and sold in small quantities to residents of Gothenburg.

HOMES FOR MEXICAN WOUNDED.

MEXICO City, July 17.—Several soldiers' homes for crippled members of the army wounded in the campaign of the last six years will be established in several parts of the republic if plans now under consideration by high army officers are approved. The building formerly used as a National Soldiers' home is totally inadequate it is said, to house the soldiers entitled to entry.

RESULTS OF THE ENTRANCE EXAMINATIONS THROUGHOUT COUNTY

At the High School Entrance Examination this year, 175 candidates presented themselves at the different county centres. Of these, 106 were successful, 13 passing with honours. In addition, 39 candidates made application for Entrance standing on account of farm employment. These have been considered by the board and 32 of them will be recommended for certificates when they have complied with the requirement in regard to work on the land. The county prize goes, this year again to a rural school, being captured by Miss Stella Huston, of No. 16, Otonabee. The winner is only 12 years of age.

Following is a list of the successful candidates with the schools at which they trained. Statements of standing will be mailed at once to those who have failed. The certificates of candidates from the village schools will be in the hands of the principals at the opening of school. Others will be mailed in few days:

Firemen Ready To Try Flushing Once

It was stated to-day that the firemen have expressed a willingness to give the street flushing idea a "once over." They have not changed their attitude that street work is beyond their duties, but at the request of the Chief they decided to try it once Thus they have notified the Committee that they are prepared to perform the work for the present, and propose to take in group turns of four men each. After they have all had a taste they will then decide whether to continue it or not. Only the business section of George street will be watered.

Judgment Reserved In Havelock Case

Magistrate Langley heard the argument this morning in the case of Archie McIntyre of Havelock, whose trial took place on Friday. He was charged with having liquor in his possession in a place other than his residence. Mr. G. N. Gordon appeared for the defendant, and Crown Attorney Hatton for the prosecutor, Inspector Stewart. Judgment was reserved.

Haying Season Is Well Under Way

Farmers in Peterborough County are well into the haying season. Help is scarce in some places, but as a general thing very little of the crop will have to suffer for want of help. A more serious handicap is the weather. Up till Sunday it had rained nine successive days. Yesterday was dry and to-day has all the earmarks of more rain. Another week or two and a portion of the grain crop will be ready for the harvesters.

OXEN $1,600 A YOKE.

About Only Means of Transportation in Belgium Now.

HAVRE, July 17.—The price of a yoke of oxen in Brussels is now the equivalent of $1,600, according to information received in Belgian official circles here. Besides a few donkeys oxen are about the only means the Belgian population has for the transportation of goods and merchandise. Even these are being requisitioned by the Germans.

Food continues to grow scarce. Flour is made of 97 per cent. of the whole wheat and the rations of the Royal Dutch Relief committee are being reduced. Industry is practically suppressed, the Germans having ordered that all factories employing more than a dozen men must work for the German army or close their doors.

NEW CANDIDATES ARE INITIATED

Woodmen of the World Wound Up Campaign—Mr. Plowman Honoured

The final campaign meeting in connection with the Woodmen of the World was held last night in their hall with a large attendance. The initiation ceremony was put on, and some sixty-five new members have already been added to the strength of the local camp, thanks to the vigorous efforts of the organizer, Mr. Jas. Plowman, and the united efforts of the members who have certainly given him great support.

When the business part of the evening was over the meeting was thrown open for a social time.

A PRESENTATION.

Here, Mr. Plowman was asked to come on to the platform and receive a small token in appreciation of his good work in our city during the past five weeks. An address was given by Sov. A. Graham and the presentation made by Sov. J. W. Worth, which consisted of a smoking outfit, and both the members voiced the opinion of the camp in wishing him every success in the future, and hoped he would live long and enjoy many smokes and the remembrance of Peterborough Camp.

Mr. Plowman suitably responded in a short and characteristic speech, but owing to the late hour his time was limited, and several musical items were to be given, he thanked every one present, and the public in general, for the kindness shown him during his visit to Peterborough, and assured them he would return and eventually may make Peterborough his home town. (Cries "We hope so").

A good musical tune was then staged, and such good talent, including Sov. Robt. Beach with the drums, accompanied on the piano by Sov. J. W. Worth; Mr. James Liddell, the well-known Scotch entertainer, and Mr. Fred. Hartshorn, principal of the Greek Slave Company, taking part.

A glorious meeting wound up after midnight with the singing of "Auld Lang Syne" and the National Anthem.

Water Consumption Is 3,100,000 Gallons

The average pumpage of water last week at the Utilities Commission's station was 3,100,000 gallons. The wet weather has curtailed the demand for lawn and garden service, but with the first signs of a dry spell the figures may be expected to mount to the midsummer heights of six million gallons that have been recorded in former years. The present average corresponds with the figures of a year ago which was followed, however, by exceedingly warm weather and a dry spell that registered a new mark in water consumption.

officers and warrant officers in recognition of their gallantry and devotion to duty in the field:

Lt. Vincent McCarter Eastwood.

Can. Inf.: For conspicuous gallantry and devotion to duty when in command of a raiding party. He carried out several valuable reconnaissances previous to the raid. During the operations, he, with a few men, entered the enemy's trenches, personally shot two of the enemy, and bombed his way along the front line, inflicting several casualties before withdrawing.

Mrs. Frank Leether whose husband, Pte. Leether, formerly of the 93rd Battalion was reported dangerously ill on Saturday, received a cable from her brother, Pte. A. Pagett, stationed at Ashford, England, saying that he visited Pte. Frank Leether on Sunday and was pleased to say that he has had a slight change for the better.

NEW YORK, July 16.—Mayor Mitchell came into town this afternoon long enough to greet the 160 men and 11 officers who compose the recruiting contingent of the 48th Highlanders, Toronto, and who arrived in New York to-day to help in the British recruiting programme arranged for the week. The Mayor greeted the Kilties at the City Hall.

An enormous crowd gathered about City Hall Park and all along the line of march as the Kilties, with their weird bagpipes, stirred the militant spirit of the populace as they paraded to the city hall.

Mayor Mitchel made a short address of welcome, in which he expressed the hope that their work at the front would be as effective as was the gallantry of their fighting brothers in France.

Brig.-Gen. White of the British Recruiting Mission here responded to the address.

Mayor Mitchel referred to the splendid achievements on the part of the Canadian troops in France.

"I hope and I feel that your record will be as brilliant and as full of accomplishments as that of other regiments of your countrymen now on the other side," said the Mayor. "And I hope, too, that your efforts for the recruiting campaign here will be met with good results."

General White declared the presence of Canadian troops on the soil of the United States, and of American troops on French soil a "happy augury."

United in a Common Purpose.

"We are now united in a common purpose," said the British officer, "and soon our men will be backing up those on the other side of the water."

As soon as Gen. White had finished, the Highlanders gave "three cheers for the Mayor," while the drums of the band rolled out a deeper tone Then Glengarry bonnets were replaced, and the Highlanders and the escort from the 71st New York Infantry formed to continue the march.

This movement afforded an unusual opportunity to see the difference between the close order drill of the United States and Canadian troops. After the escort had executed the familiar "squads right," the Canadian commander shouted an order, whereat his men, by a manoeuvre strange to American methods, alternately stepped one pace to the rear, and right-faced into squad formation, practically the same position as our "squads right."

Brig.-Gen. White and his officers of the British Recruiting Mission were on hand at the station to meet the Highlanders when they arrived at 9.25 this morning. Officers from the New York Scottish societies were also present. The Highlanders were under the command of Lieut.-Col. C. W. Darling.

Will any members of the Peterborough branch of the Great War Veterans' Association who have not yet secured their due books, please report to the Secretary, Room 204, Barrie Building, as soon as possible.

Pte. Mann Home.

Pte. G. Harry Mann, who went overseas with the 93rd Battalion, reached Peterborough this morning, having been invalided home from overseas. Pte. Mann, whose home is at 198 Dublin street, originally enlisted in the 33rd Battery, but was transferred to Lieut.-Col. Johnston's unit.

Urges Greater Aid of Science

Briton Says England Can Grow all Food Needed.

VITAL TRUTHS AWAIT FINDING

Scientific Men Should be Encouraged, Asserts Sir Oliver Lodge, and Official Parsimony Loosened.

LONDON, July 17.—Sir Oliver Lodge, in an appeal for greater state aid of scientific research, declares his belief that England can grow all the food necessary for feeding her people if proper scientific methods are employed. He says:

"People state that the area of the British Isles is too small to feed the inhabitants. The effort has never been made. The area is certainly inadequate if in the twentieth century we use the methods of the twelfth.

"But it must be known that of late years discoveries of the utmost importance have cropped up in sporadic manner through individual enterprise and at private cost, though application of these discoveries on large scale has still to be made. And no one can doubt that a multitude of other vital truths are awaiting discovery at the hands of biologists and chemists.

ONE OF TWO THINGS NEEDED.

"Either we must grow our own food, or we must labour at other things to provide the wherewithal to purchase it from abroad. How dependent we are on other lands the war has shown, but the mistake of thus depending on them is a continuous folly.

"Let scientific men be encouraged, not stingily but lavishly, to attack the problems connected with the fertility of the soil, and the best means of utilizing solar energy in the production of the right kind of vegetation, and good results are bound to follow. What the nation chiefly lacks in this matter is faith.

"The satisfactory promotion of scientific discovery is an affair of millions of pounds sterling. The nation can afford to be lavish. The young energy and the brains are ready; the means and equipment are lacking.

OFFICIAL PARSIMONY TIGHT.

"Even now, in war time, the ancient stranglehold of official parsimony is tight in many instances, and not even now is official expenditure authorized which would enable schemes to move in the right direction. Private purses have to be appealed to, or we have to take refuge in other work of a less expensive character.

"So it has always been in the history of science. Poverty and self-sacrifice are writ large on the portals of every scientific and educational establishment.

"Has the nation learned that it can afford a great deal more in these directions than it thought it could If it has, the result will be brilliant beyond all expectation."

THE FATE OF PTE. JOHN JINKS

Nothing Has Been Seen of Peterborough Boy Since April 9th

Mrs. John Jinks, Brownton has received the following letter in connection with the fate of her husband, Pte. John Jinks, formerly of the 93rd Battalion who has been missing since April 9th. Pte. Jinks went overseas with the 93rd Battalion. The letter is as follows:

France, June 19.

Dear Madam,—In reply to your letter of May 24th with reference to your husband, No. 105614, Pte. John Jinks, 1st Canadian Battalion, I deeply regret to inform you that no further news has been obtainable up to now concerning his fate. All that can be gathered from the men who last saw him is that during the advance on April 9th a shell landed amongst several men near the spot where he was last seen and it is believed that he was hit, but nothing was seen of him afterwards.

Under the circumstances and considering the fact that this unit lost no prisoners that day, if you have had no further news of him I am afraid there can be very little hope of tracing him.

I did not know him personally, but he is well spoken of by his comrades and bears a fine record as a soldier in this battalion. If, as it appears, he has made the supreme sacrifice, he would, I feel sure, have preferred no nobler fate the Empire can ill afford to lose such men as he. Kindly accept by deepest sympathies in your sad loss. Believe me.

Yours faithfully,
F. A. Rogers, Lieut.
O. C. D Company

UP A TREE.

A Man in the Midst of an Explosion —Alive, but as Naked as a Worm.

Would you rather be in a collision or an explosion? asks Punch; and somebody says, "Why in a collision. In a collision, There you are; in an explosion, Where are you?" Well, a French officer has found out "where you are" in an explosion.

He was a gay-hearted French officer who went out to an observation post to spy out the position of some 8-inch German guns which were causing the French annoyance. The little platform on which he stood in the tree-top began to go to pieces under the influence of concussion from bursting shells, so having seen all he wanted, the captain secured himself to the tree by his belt and began to carefully lower himself down the trunk.

At that moment an 8-inch shell exploded beneath him. He was in the centre of the explosion, yet escaped quite unhit by the shell. But as to the concussion that was quite another story. The sudden displacement of air stripped him. It took his trousers, vest and tunic, and left him as he says, as naked as a worm! There were notes representing 800 francs (about £33) in his tunic, but they, with the clothes, vanished into thin air. Except for shock the gallant captain was unharmed, and picking up an overcoat, he cold himself afresh and crawled back to his trench.

THE NEW MAGIC CARPET.

A special lens for microscopic work was urgently needed the other day in a hospital at Calais. A wire was despatched to the Red Cross headquarters in London. The lens was there, and a train was ready to carry it to the English coast. But how to get it across the stormy sea? There was no ship crossing at the time. No matter! There are always aeroplanes nowadays, and by aeroplane it went, faster than the wind. The magic carpet of Bagdad could have done no better.

STATE MILITARY UNITS MARK TIME IN READINESS FOR CALL FROM NATION TO MOBILIZE

First Step Toward Transfer to Federal Service is Taking Place Now—Negro Regiment at War Strength, Ready to Go Into Service at Camp Whitman.

UNITS SUMMONED BY NATIONS

NEW YORK, July 18.— Not since the days of the Spanish-American War has New York seen so many khaki dressed fighters in the streets as to-day. On the eve of mobilization day it seemed that every member of every unit of the National Guard was on parade.

The New York boys will not leave for their camp in Spartanburg, S.C., much before August 1.

Many of the minor details of mobilization have been arranged. At the headquarters of the Third Ambulance Company, Sixty-sixth street and Columbus avenue, the 120 members reported to Captain John S. Mader and were inoculated with typhus serum by Lieutenant A. G. Russel. The corps is still fifty men below war strength. The First Field Hospital, with headquarters in the same building, reported to Major Moses A. Stivers that all were ready to respond to the colours. The corps numbers seventy-five men —the full war strength.

At the armory of the Twelfth Infantry, at Sixty-second street and Columbus avenue, the 1,700 members reported early Monday morning to Colonel Reginald Foster. The regiment is many than 200 below the required war strength, but the men are making an eleventh hour drive and expect to recruit up to the standard within two days.

Negro Regiment Ready for Camp.

Colonel William Hayward was on hand at Sulzer's Harlem River Park to greet the Fifteenth Infantry regiment, composed of negro troops. The regiment is at full war strength and the men spent Monday afternoon seeing that everything was in readiness for their transportation to Camp Whitman on Tuesday. It was said that in proportion to race in the city the percentage of negro volunteers was two times greater than the whites. If the whites had volunteered in the same percentage there would be 100,000 white troops in the city.

Units Summoned by the Nation.

The following New York State units are mobilizing now for United States service:

Infantry — First, Seventh, Tenth, Twelfth, Fourteenth, Fifteenth and Sixty-ninth regiments.

Cavalry.—First regiment, less one squadron, Squadron A.

Field Artillery.—First and Second regiments (three-inch field pieces); Third regiment (4.2-inch howitsers.)

Coast Defence Commands.—Eighth, Ninth and Thirteenth.

Military police and trains.

Supply train.

Ammunition train.

Division Headquarters troop.

Signal Battalion.

Field Bakery.

Sanitary Troops. — First, Second, Third and Fourth Ambulance companies; First, Second, Third and Fourth Field Hospitals.

In preparation to be mustered into the federal service the Ninth Coast Defence command, Colonel John J. Byrne commanding, was busy overhauling equipment. Identification cards were filled out and the soldiers were finger printed. The destination of this command has not been announced.

At the armory of the famous "Fighting Sixty-ninth," Lexington avenue and Twenty-sixth street, there was a patriotic demonstration. Lieutenant Colonel Latham G. Reed was on hand and the entire regiment, eighteen hundred strong, gathered. Thousands of friends and relatives were present and the cheering was incessant.

CONDITION OF FIELD CROPS IN CANADA

Revised Summary of Conditions Issued by the Government—Areas Sown to Field Crops—Condition of Grain and Hay Crops—Spring Wheat Registers a High Percentage.

IN THE WESTERN PROVINCES

OTTAWA, July 18.—A press bulletin issued by the Census and Statistics Office to-day gives (1) the usual second or revised estimate of the areas sown to spring grains, (2) an estimate of the areas under later sown crops; (3) the condition of all field crops at June 30 and (4) estimates of the numbers of farm live stock in Canada at the same date, the whole being based upon the returns of crop correspondents.

AREAS SOWN TO FIELD CROPS.

For wheat, oats, hay and clover the areas now reported are somewhat higher than the figures of a month ago when the seeding had not been completed; but for other crops, including barley, rye, peas and mixed grains, they are less. For wheat the acreage sown is now placed at 13,549,650 acres, as compared with 14,897,900 acres the area sown and with 12,900,500 acres, the area harvested in 1916. Thus the area sown to wheat, whilst 9 per cent. less than the area sown for 1916, is 5 per cent. more than the area harvested for 1916. Of the total area under wheat 909,250 acres were sown last fall and 12,740,400 acres were sown this spring. In the three prairie provinces the total area sown to wheat is 12,604,550 acres, comprising 2,448,850 acres in Manitoba; 7,689,700 acres in Saskatchewan and 2,466,000 acres in Alberta. The acreage for all Canada now estimated as sown to other early grain crops, as compared with the harvested areas of 1916, are as follows: Oats 11,806,000 against 9,875,346; barley 1,819,900 against 1,681,180; rye 153,900 against 147,179; peas 151,850 against 150,980 and mixed grains 409,140 against 397,770. Hay and clover estimated to occupy 7,894,000 acres as compared with 7,222,932 acres, and alfalfa 86,500 acres as compared with 89,472 acres. For later sown cereals and hoed crops the estimated areas, as compared with the areas harvested last year, are as follows: Buckwheat 336,400 acres as against 341,500 acres; flax 695,750 acres against 605,700 acres, corn for husking 173,600 acres against 173,000 acres; beans 43,000 acres against 32,500 acres; turnips, etc., 152,100 acres against 156,200; sugar beets 14,000 acres against 15000 acres and corn for fodder 310,465 acres against 297,100 acres. Every province shows an increase in the area planted to potatoes, and the total area under this crop is estimated at 502,400 acres as compared with 448,800 acres, the area harvested in 1916, an increase of nearly 12 per cent. The acreage under potatoes for 1917 is larger than in any previous year, and is 18,400 acres larger than the previous record of 484,000 acres in 1913.

CONDITION OF GRAIN AND HAY CROPS.

In the three Atlantic provinces, conditions at the end of June were generally satisfactory, nearly all grain crops being reported as over 90 per cent. of the standard representing a full crop in Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia and between 85 and 90 per cent. in New Brunswick. Quebec also shows a condition of about 80 per cent. and over. In Ontario fall wheat has still the low condition of 67 per cent, but spring wheat is as high as 96. Oats are 94, barley is 91—and other crops range from 85 to 97. In the prairie provinces the late spring, followed by cold and dry weather, has kept all crops backward; but prospects at the end of June were reported to be improving, as beneficial rains had fallen over considerable areas. In Manitoba and Saskatchewan the percentage condition of

Premier Asks For Extension To Avoid War Time Election

Sir Robert Borden Claims Only Discord and Dissension Would Result From Appeal to the People—Sir Geo. P. Graham Moves An Amendment to Conscript Wealth.

OTTAWA, July 17.—The extension of the life of Parliament resolution was moved by Sir Robert Borden before a representative House this afternoon. Sir Robert was applauded by his followers when he rose to speak.

He recalled that on February 8, 1916, he had moved a similar resolution which had been passed unanimously in the House and adopted In the speech from the Throne this session reference had been made to further extension proposals. The resolution had been placed on the order paper at the end of May.

"In my judgment," said Sir Robert, "the reasons for extension are quite as strong to-day as they were in 1916 and perhaps stronger. These are fairly set forth in the speech which I made on that occasion. I need only summarize them. In my opinion an election at this time would mean dissension and discord. There has been at least a seeming unity outside and inside the House in the past without regard to race or creed. Politics and political questions have not worried the minds of the people during the past three years."

Would Distract People.

With an election the thought of the people would be distracted. Thus minds would be controverted and turned from consideration of the war to issues altogether insignificant. Time now given by members and Ministers to thoughts of the war would be devoted to campaigning. Members of the Government could not be expected to remain silent under attack. They would be obliged to speak. They would have to take one or the other course, either to carry on a campaign or let the campaign look after itself and devote their attention to their war duties as in the past.

Soldiers Could Not Vote.

Moreover, Sir Robert said, there were 300,000 men in uniform voting. Their power to do so would depend altogether on the character of the operations in the field at the time. They constituted the best elements of the country. "What right have we," said Sir Robert, "to undertake to create a new Parliament in the election of which these men can have no say?"

Another Voluntary Effort.

Sir Robert Borden then came to the important announcement of his address, namely, his willingness to consider a trial of voluntary recruiting. "There is another consideration," he said. "Eloquent appeals have been made, chiefly from the other side of the House, that before this bill shall be put into force there shall be a united and earnest effort by all parties and their leaders to endeavour to obtain reinforcements by voluntary enlistment. I have listened with interest, and given my very attentive consideration, and I am willing to give them every consideration with the providing of reinforcements. But I do not know how it is possible to have a united appeal of that kind under the imminence or during a general election. I hope that hon. gentlemen in considering this resolution will bear that in mind. If an election is forced upon the country, that proposal must come to naught."

Precedents Quoted.

Sir Robert Borden went on to quote precedents for extension of Parliamentary term. Britain had done this on three successive occasions. New Zealand has extended the term to December 19, 1918. Australia had been prevented by disturbed conditions. In Britain in 1716 the Parliamentary term had been extended from three years to seven.

In every self-governing nation since the war began it has not been found possible to give the same regard to constitutional conventions as in peace. Extraordinary powers have been conferred on Governments. In Canada itself the Governor-in-Council had been given wide measures previously held by Parliament.

Sir Robert quoted Sir Wilfrid's speech made when extension was passed last year, when Sir Wilfrid said that an extension would not alter the principle of the constitution. It was not necessary to dwell upon the seriousness of the present situation. In February of 1916 he had mentioned that Canada had sent 156,000 men overseas. To-day her casualties were fast approaching that figure and since May 19 last, when he first announced conscription, the casualties had numbered 12,000.

Facing Supreme Test.

"We must realise," he said, "that our country is undergoing the extreme test. Civilization itself is in danger. It would be impossible to overstate the considerations hanging in the balance."

Sir Robert continued by saying that he would ask Sir Wilfrid Laurier if, in so terrible and unprecedented a situation, technicalities of the extension of Parliament should be considered. "I desire to make it perfectly plain, however," he said, "that this Government does not come to the House as a suppliant. Whenever it is desirable or necessary that our record should be pronounced upon, we are quite willing to abide by the verdict of the electors. In three years we have fulfilled our duties to the best of our abilities, no regard has been had for any consideration but the conscientious performance of our duty. I admit that mistakes have been made. Members of the Government are human, and, therefore, not infallible. There have, however, been as few mistakes in Canada in the conduct of the war as in any part of the Empire.

Sir Robert again appealed for extension "for the purpose of avoiding the distraction, bitterness and strife of an election." Political questions certainly had no place in the minds of those who are pressing back the enemy in France and Flanders, he said.

It was with a feeling of appreciation of the great responsibility which rested upon him that he appealed for sanction to the resolution. He fully appreciated also that a great responsibility devolved upon the leader of the Opposition. He had spoken of himself in 1916 as a servant of the State and the people, who owed duties to the State somewhat different to those of the Government, but not of an inferior character. In coming to the last consideration of his speech, Sir Robert declared that he had received numerous letters and communications from almost every part of the country advising him as to the course which he ought to take with regard to the passage of this resolution. He had urged upon him the desirability of avoiding a war-time election by passing the resolution with a majority of the House.

Withdrawal Hinted At.

"I am fully aware of the disadvantages and evils of a war-time election," said the Prime Minister deliberately, "but there are some things worse than a war-time election. I have given my most careful consideration to this question, and have arrived at a definite and, I believe, a wise conclusion. Speaking on February 8, 1916, I said that if any opposition came from the other side I would withdraw the resolution. My right honorable friend on the same occasion also dealt on the necessity of unanimity on the question. If the resolution should not be adopted unanimously, he said, I might take it to the foot of the throne, but the British Parliament would never grant the powers sought.

"It is quite apparent from the views expressed then that if this resolution should pass the House by a majority the controversy would not end here. It would be taken up beyond the seas and the Parliament of the United Kingdom now in the midst of a great struggle would be confused and distracted with conflicting cries from the two political parties of the country.

Hon. Geo. P. Graham replied to the Premier instead of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, and moved an amendment to the resolution calling for a conscription of wealth.

Iron For the Blood and Phosphorus For the Nerves

Weak, anaemic, run-down, nervous persons will be glad to know that they can be restored back to their youth vigor by the discovery of this new drug called Sanitol Phosphorus with Iron.

It is spring time now and every person needs something to build them up. How you know as well as any doctor will tell you, the curse of spring time is impure blood. It takes many people to their grave, ruins health, makes you weak, runs you down and finally you are a physical wreck.

This new drug is a combination of iron and phosphorus. The iron acts directly on the blood while the phosphorus soothes and strengthens the nerves. You start today and take two or three tablets of Sanitol Phosphorus with Iron after meals and in 5 to 10 days you will be 100 per cent. stronger.

This drug does not act like other iron tonics you have taken, but instead, it does not blacken the teeth, upset the stomach or make you constipated. This new drug is dispensed by one druggist in each city. F. C. Walker Sanitol is for Peterborough.

"The Postmaster's Daughter"

By LOUIS TRACY

"As a study in contrasts, that would be hard to beat," he said, after a long pause.

"Contrasts?" she echoed.

"Well, yes. Even an uncontentious man like myself can hardly fail to compare Sunday afternoon with Tuesday morning."

"Why not Monday night?" she flashed.

"Monday night, in part, remains a mystery yet to be unveiled. I blot Monday night from my mind. I have no alternative, being on the jury, which has to arrive at a just verdict. Now, if Fred Elkin were here, he would foam at the mouth."

"Happily, Fred Elkin is not here."

"Ah, I am glad, glad, to hear you say that. You don't like him?"

"I detest him."

"He makes out, to put it mildly, that you are great friends."

"You will oblige me by contradicting the statement. Or—no. One treats that sort of man with contempt."

"I agree with you most heartily I am sorry that I ever mentioned him."

Yet Doris was well aware that the chemist had dragged in Elkin by the scruff of the neck, probably for the sake of getting him disposed of thoroughly and for all time. Rather on the tiptoe of expectation, she awaited the next move. It was slow in coming, so again she looked wistfully at the distant tea-drinkers. She found slight difficulty in carrying out this portion of the stage directions. Truth to tell, she would gleefully have gone and joined them.

Siddle was not altogether at ease. The conversation was too spasmodic to suit his purpose. Though slow of speech he was nimble of brain, and knowing Doris so well, he had anticipated a livelier duel of wits. In all likelihood, he cursed the tea-party on the lawn. He had not foreseen this drawback. But, being a masterful man, he tackled the situation boldly.

"I seized the opportunity of a friendly chat with you to-day, Doris," he went on, leaning over the fence to inhale the scent of a briar rose. "The story runs through the village that you and your father dined at The Hollies on Friday evening. Is that true?"

Now, Doris had it on reliable authority that Siddle himself had been the runner who spread that story, and the knowledge steeled her heart against him.

"Yes," she said composedly.

"It was kind and neighborly of you to accept the invitation, but a mistake."

She turned and faced him. His expression was baffling. She thought she saw in his sallow, clean-cut features the shadow of a confident smile.

"You mean that this horrid murder should make some difference in the friendship between ourselves and Mr. Grant?" she cried.

"Yes. To you, though to no one else, would I speak so plainly. I have no hesitation in saying that Mr. Grant is, far, very far, from being clear of responsibility in that matter. Three days from now you will understand what I mean. Evidence will be forthcoming which will put him in a most unenviable light. I am not alleging or even hinting that he may be deemed guilty of actual crime. That is for the law to determine But I do tell you emphatically that his present heedless attitude will give place to anxiety and dejection. It cannot be otherwise A somewhat sordid history will be revealed, and his pretense that relations between him and the dead woman ceased three years ago will vanish into thin air. Believe me Doris, I am actuated by no motive in this matter other than a desire to further your welfare. I cannot bear even to think of your name being associated, in ever so small a degree, with that of a man who must be hounded out of his own social circle. If no worse fate is in store for him."

"Good gracious!" cried Doris genuinely amazed. "How do you come to know all this?"

"I listen to the words of those qualified to speak with knowledge and authority. I have mixed in varied company this past week, wholly on your account. Don't be led away by the mere formalities of the opening day of the inquest. The coroner deliberately shut off all real evidence, except as to the cause of death. On Wednesday the situation will change, and you cannot fail but be shocked by what you hear, because you will be there."

"I am given to understand that, even if I am called, my testimony will be of no importance."

"Such may be the police view. Mr. Ingerman will press for a very different estimate."

"Has he told you that?"

"Yes."

"So, although foreman of the jury, you have not deigned to hob-nob with a man who is avowedly Mr. Grant's enemy?"

"I would hob-nob with worse people if, by so doing, I might serve you."

Grant, "fed up," as he put it, to Hart, with watching the tete a tete between Doris and the chemist, sprang to his feet and went through a pantomime easy enough to follow save for one or two signs. Doris held both hands aloft. Well knowing that anying in the nature of a pre-arranged code would be gall and worm-wood to Siddle, she explained laughingly:

Mr. Grant signals that he and Mr. Hart are going for a walk; he wants me to accompany them. But I can't unfortunately. I promised dad to help with the accounts."

"If you really mean what you say, my warning would seem to have fallen on deaf ears."

Siddle's voice was well under control, but his eyes glinted dangerously. His state was that of a man torn by passion who nevertheless felt that any display of the rage possessing him would be fatal to his cause.

But, rather unexpectedly, Doris took fire. Siddle's innuendoes and protestations were sufficiently hard to bear without the added knowledge that a ridiculous convention denied her the companionship of a man who she loved, and who, she was beginning to believe, loved her. She swept around on Siddle like a wrathful goddess.

"I have borne with you patiently, because of the acquaintance of years, but I shall be glad if this tittle-tattle of malice and ignorance now ceases," she said proudly. "Mr. Grant is my friend, and my father's friend. In the first horror of the crime which has besmirched our dear little village, we both treated Mr. Grant rather badly. We know better to-day. Your Ingermans and your Elkins, and the rest of the busybodies gathered at the inn, may defame him as they choose, or as they dare. As for me, I am his loyal comrade, and shall remain so after next Wednesday, or a score of Wednesday. I am going in now, Mr. Siddle, and shall be engaged during the remainder of the evening. Your shop opens at six, and I am sure you will find some more profitable means of spending the time than in telling me things I would rather not hear."

Siddle caught her arm.

"Doris," he said fiercely, "you must not leave me without at least learning my true motive. I——"

The girl wrested herself free from his grip. She realised what was coming, and forestalled it.

"I care nothing for your motive," she cried. "You forget yourself. Please go!"

She literally ran into the house. The chemist, unless he elected to behave like a love-sick fool, had no option but to follow, and made his way to the street by the side door.

The only other happening of significance that Sunday was an unheralded visit by Winter to the policeman's residence.

He popped in after dusk, opening the door, without knocking.

"You in, Robinson?" he inquired.

"Yes, sir. Will you——"

"Shan't detain you more than a minute. At the inquest you said that you personally untied the rope which bound Miss Melhuish's body. Here are a piece of string and a newspaper. Would you mind showing me what sort of knot was used?"

(To Be Continued.)

An Alphabetical Atrocity.

"An American aeroplane," asserted Adam arrogantly, "always ascends."

Admiring Adam, as an amateur always admires an authority among aeronauts, Anna acquiesced and acquired an American aeroplane, as Adam advised.

Arabella abandoned an antagonistic attitude, although angry at Anna's act.

Adam, annoyed at Arabella's antagonism, advocated an afternoon ascension.

Anna agreed.

Afternoon arrived, as also artists, amateurs, Anna and Arabella.

Assuming an animated attitude, Anna and Arabella attracted admiring attention as Anna's American aeroplane airily arose.

Adam arrived as Arabella and Anna alighted.

Adam," acknowledged Arabella afterward, "although arrogant, always advises aright. American aeroplanes always ascend, and amateurs ardently admire an air annihilating aeroplane."—Youth's Companion.

Laughter and Crying.

Why do we laugh when a man slips on a banana peel?

The latest answer to this ancient question comes from Dr. George W. Crile in "The Origin and Nature of Emotions." It may be summed up briefly in the words of the Journal of Heredity, "Laughter and crying are two forms of the same mechanism—a human safety valve to prevent the results of emotion from injuring the body."

According to Dr. Crile, "the muscular action of laughter clears the system of the energizing substances which have been mobilized in various parts of the body for other actions." Your first impulse is to rush to the aid of the falling man. When he picks himself up unhurt there is no need to help him, so your system relieves itself in laughter. If he breaks his skull you help him and thus consume the energy in Summer means clogged liver and sluggish brain; too little food means flabby muscles and starved nerves. The man on the job must keep his brain clear and his muscles responsive. The way to do this is to eat Shredded Wheat Biscuit, the food that contains everything in the whole wheat grain prepared in a digestible form, including the outer bran coat which is so useful in keeping the alimentary canal clean and healthy. Two or three of these crisp, little brown loaves of whole wheat with milk make a nourishing, strengthening meal. Ready-cooked and ready-to-serve.

THE TONIC THAT BRINGS HEALTH

"Fruit-a-tives" Builds Up The Whole System

Those who take "Fruit-a-tives" for the first time, are often astonished at the way it builds them up and makes them feel better all over. They may be taking "Fruit-a-tives" for some specific disease, as Constipation, Indigestion, Chronic Headaches or Neuralgia, Kidney or Bladder Trouble, Rheumatism or Pain in the Back. And they find when "Fruit-a-tives" has cured the disease, that they feel better and stronger in every way. This is due to the wonderful tonic properties of these famous tablets, made from fruit juices.

Second Base Play.

Second base is called the "pivot position of the infield." This is because most of the plays center around second base. Many double plays read "short to second to first; third to second to first; second to short to first; first to second to first," and so on. Records show teams strong on double plays are usually teams well up in the race. Generally speaking, ability to make double plays speaks well for a team's defense. A good defense means few runs for the opposition, provided the pitching is of the proper kind. Since second base is the pivot position, much of the team's success depends upon the way that base is played. If the shortstop and second baseman work smoothly it usually has the effect of balancing the rest of the team. A club that is constantly running up plays around the second sack never causes much trouble for the opposition.—Billy Evans in New York World.

Scandinavian Politeness.

Two points which attract the attention of travelers in Sweden are the punctilious honesty and truthfulness of the inhabitants. When asking for places at a theater, for instance, the ticket clerk never fails to inform the applicant if owing to a crowded state of the house a better position would be secured with a cheaper ticket than the one asked for. Again, when parcels are taken by steamer from Stockholm to country places in the neighborhood they are just placed on to the quay, where they frequently remain half a day without being claimed. It never seems to occur to any one that they could possibly be taken by anybody but their rightful owners. On a canal trip of any length a little book lies in the saloon of the steamer, in which each passenger keeps his own account of the number of meals, coffees, etc., he takes during the journey.

The Clever Brahman.

Speaking of the great power the Brahmans in India possess in localizing thought, a prominent Brahman once said: "We would consider a game of chess as played in this country mere child's play. An ordinary Brahman chess player could carry on three or four games at a time without inconvenience. The usual game played by the Brahmans consists in checkmating with one pawn designated when the play begins. I have seen a man perform a long problem in multiplication and division, at the same time noting the various moves and discussions going on about him in the room. I have seen a man compose a triple acrostic in Sanskrit in a given meter, at the same time having three well versed men trying to overthrow him in his argument on religion."

Or Supervised Hockey.

"I see they are going to teach swimming in the public schools."

"Happy days. Spithall throwing will be legitimate before they get through."—Kansas City Journal.

But That's Real Money.

Start of a Big Fire.

How a terrible fire that gutted an entire New York tenement house was caused by a combination of a milk bottle, a lamp and a peaceful tabby cat is told by Charles T. Hill in St. Nicholas. The cat in question was reposing in an open back window of a first floor flat in the tenement occupied by a spinster who was called into the front room just at the moment when an irate lodger in the house at the rear, exasperated by the nocturnal concert of two undomestic tabbies on the rear fence, shied a milk bottle at them, which landed wide of its mark and crashed against the tenement window sill. The spinster's tabby, dazed with fright, gave one fearful leap, clutched at the table cover and overset the lamp; whilst the open door into the front room created a perfect draft for the flames. A more summary destruction of an immense building has seldom been known to the New York fire fighting force than this one, which is described in the official records simply by the curt phrase, "Explosion of a lamp."

Nest of a Turtle.

The manner in which a turtle constructs her nest is both interesting and suggestive, it being one of the most expeditious operations ever performed by that slow moving creature. After selecting a suitable spot she begins digging out a hole with her hind legs by moving slowly in a circle and throwing the excavated sand in a rim all around it. When that is about eighteen inches in depth and twelve in circumference she drops her eggs into it, pulls the rim of sand over them and, rising on all four legs, lets her body drop heavily on the covering sand until she has made it as compact as any part of the surrounding beach. She then makes a few false demonstrations on the shore to mislead inquisitive enemies and hastens to the sea as fast as she can travel.

Vindicated Self Esteem.

"The Woggses seem to have a high opinion of themselves."

"Yes. You see, the same cook has consented to remain in their employ for three or four years. So they feel entitled to think that they are rather nice people."—Washington Star.

An Agile Member.

"Is Smithers an active church member?"

"I should say he is; so active that the finance committee can never find him when subscriptions for the pastor's salary are due."—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Contentment.

"Pa, what is contentment?"

"Contentment, my boy, is the art of being happy with what you've got even if your neighbor has a little more."—Detroit Free Press.

Alkali in Shampoos Bad For the Hair

If you want to keep your hair looking its best, be careful what you wash it with. Don't use prepared shampoos or anything else, that contains too much alkali. This dries the scalp, makes the hair brittle, and ruins it.

The best thing for steady use is just ordinary mulsified cocoanut oil (which is pure and greaseless), and is better than anything else you can use.

One or two teaspoonfuls will cleanse the hair and scalp thoroughly. Simply moisten the hair with water and rub it in. It makes an abundance of rich, creamy lather, which rinses out easily, removing every particle of dust, dirt, dandruff and excessive oil. The hair dries quickly and evenly, and it leaves the scalp soft, and the hair fine and silky, bright, lustrous, fluffy and easy to manage.

You can get mulsified cocoanut oil at any pharmacy, it's very cheap, and a few ounces will supply every member of the family for months.

HOME DEFENCE

The safeguarding of your home and all it means to you is not a matter of armies and ships alone. The comfort and happiness of your family are exposed to the attacks of enemies much nearer to them than the marauding Huns of Central Europe.

What will become of your home and your wife and your children, if you be suddenly stricken down as thousands of others have been?

Will there be any bulwark of defence to keep the home and the family from destruction?

You can most easily provide such a line of defence by means of a life assurance policy. Home Defence is its purpose and it fulfils that purpose as nothing else can.

THE HOUSE AND GROUNDS

Late Season Garden Points

IF you are in any doubt about what you can plant with hopes of success in your garden at this late hour write to the Emergency Food Garden Commission, No. 210 Maryland Building, Washington, D. C. The commission will send you free the garden primer and any other information that you may wish. It will give you the same service in regard to canning.

The commission recommends that navy beans be planted on a light soil or on meadow or blue grass that is to be put under cultivation. They may be planted as late as the middle of this month. Late potatoes may be planted up to July 1 if the seed bed is in good shape and the seed sound. Sweet potatoes can be grown with success on sandy land.

Sweet corn of short season variety may be planted up to July 15 or even a little later. Late cabbage may be set as late as July 1. String beans may be planted as late as July 15. As late as July 1 cucumbers may be planted. Good tomato plants of the short season variety may be planted any time in June. Squashes and pumpkins may be planted in June among sweet or field corn or, if room, separately in hills about eight-tenths of a foot apart. Lettuce grows best if planted in early spring or fall. Late or winter radishes may be sown early in August. Table beets to be pickled, canned or stored for winter use may be planted in June.

In the cultivation of beans the general rules for the care of garden crops should be adhered to and frequent shallow stirring of the soil practised. For a constant supply of bunch or snap beans successive plantings should be made, the final planting being made about eight weeks before time for frost in the autumn.

For the production of bunch dry beans, such as red kidney, white kidney or white marrow, plantings may be made almost any time during the first half of the summer. This class of bean is generally planted as late as possible to have the crop ripen just before early frost in the autumn. Bunch beans usually are planted in rows thirty inches apart and the plants allowed to stand singly three or four inches apart, or they are planted in hills of three to five plants each, twelve to fifteen inches apart. Good results may be obtained from planting kidney or marrow beans in the cornfield alongside the hills after the corn has been cultivated once or twice.

Pole beans require a somewhat richer soil than the bunch type and should be planted in hills 3 by 4 or 4 by 4 feet, and, as the name implies, they require a pole or some similar support. Plant the seed during the early summer. Several varieties of climbing bean may be planted in the cornfield and allowed to climb upon the hills of corn. The old fashioned corn bean belongs to this type.

Upper Cut—Tomatoes trained to trellises and small vegetables between.

Lower Cut—Miss Jackie Saunders dons overalls for garden work.

The Lima bean, both pole and bush, forms one of the most desirable products of the garden. This crop thrives best when the soil is quite rich; in fact, good Lima beans cannot be grown in poor soil. They should not be planted until the soil becomes thoroughly warm. Place the seed in hills, eight or ten to the hill, and after the plants become established thin to four or five. The hills should be four or five feet apart for the pole varieties and two or three feet apart for the dwarf or bunch varieties. It is a good idea to make up the hill with a little additional manure well mixed with the soil. Cover the beans about one and one-half inches, placing them with the eye downward.

When planting beans of any kind, the seed should not be covered to a greater depth than two inches when the soil is moderately dry, and if the soil is wet the covering should be very slight.

More Uses for Tomatoes Than Any Other Vegetable

OUTSIDE of such staples as potatoes and beans there is probably no vegetable that is more prized and more generally used all the year round in one form or another than tomatoes.

There is still time to put out strong, well grown tomato plants. If the plants are to be trimmed and tied to stakes they should be set in rows three feet apart and from eighteen inches to two feet apart in the row. A certain back yard is planted in rows of this sort running north and south, to get the advantage of the sun, and leaving room for smaller vegetables between.

Probably the best of the early tomatoes is the Bonny Best. This matures in eighty-eight days and has smooth fruit of a rich scarlet color. It is not as large as some others, but it is uniform and abundant. For the main crop, and especially for canning, there is nothing better than the Stone, which requires 125 days for maturing. The fruit of this variety is smooth, large, free from rot and ripens evenly.

Tomatoes grow easily, but they have an enemy that you must be on the watch for—a large green worm so nearly the color of the plant he feeds upon that it is hard to detect it in spite of its size. This must be knocked off and destroyed or sprayed with arsenate of lead.

Tomatoes can be used in more ways than any other vegetable. For canning one must choose perfect fruit in good condition. Dip them in hot water for a few minutes and then remove the skins, cut them up and place them in an aluminum or porcelain lined kettle and add a level teaspoonful of salt for each quart. Bring slowly to a boil, stirring frequently, and boil for at least half an hour.

If you are using the screw top type, immerse the jars, tops and rubbers in boiling water. Remove the jars one at a time, place a rubber around the neck and fill with the boiling hot tomatoes. Take the top of the jar from the boiling water, being careful not to touch the inside with the fingers for fear of introducing spores into the jar, and screw it on tightly. Invert the jar and let it stand in this position until cold. Have everything sterile that is put into the jar. When using a spoon, fork or cup with the tomatoes first immerse it in boiling water.

Another method of canning tomatoes is to take off the skins and drop the tomatoes, as nearly whole as possible, into wide-mouth jars. Pack them in until the jar is full and add one level teaspoonful of salt to each quart. Put on the rubber and top and fix the spring to leave the top loose and allow the steam to escape during the boiling.

In the wash boiler or steriliser set as many jars upon the false bottom as the boiler will conveniently hold and pour in enough cold or tepid water to come about two inches up on the jar. It is not necessary to have the jars completely immersed during the boiling; the steam does the cooking. Put the top on the boiler and set it on the stove; bring to a boil and sterilize for one hour. Remove the top of the boiler, allow the steam to escape and press down the spring at the side of the jar. This will clamp on the top and prevent any outside air from getting in.

In the vast majority of cases this one sterilization is all the treatment that is necessary, but it is not always safe to rely on it.

As relishes and flavorings there are numerous ways in which tomatoes may be used. This year it is not recommended that the green tomatoes be used for chow-chow and other pickle combinations, as it is better to let everything mature and ripen so that the supply will go further to meet the great demand.

To Control Waste

"OUR responsibility does not depend upon peace or war," says Mrs. John Dickenson Sherman, chairman of the conservation department of the General Federation of Women's Clubs. "If peace were declared to-morrow the conditions would be the same. Famine threatens a large part of the world. America's responsibility is just the same. We must feed ourselves and our allies till normal conditions return."

She suggests that all women keep the pledge:—

"I will use only those amounts of food required for adequate nourishment. I will endeavor to control waste in all kinds of materials in the household and to live simply. I will begin now."

Mrs. Sherman says that half the responsibility rests with the women of the country and that the work ahead is no child's play or a summer pastime. Every State chairman of conservation in the federation received suggestions as to how to proceed for an efficient campaign.

"The work that confronts us women is no mere pastime for summer months. It will be a long and hard struggle. Haphazard methods and spasmodic methods will not do. The work must be intelligent and persistent.

"Take stock. What is your bit? Will you promote boys' and girls' clubs or put up a dozen glasses of jelly or dry five pounds of vegetables? Decide what you can do, and begin now."

Food Campaign

ONE of the most practical helps to the campaign for dealing with the food question is the Central Depot and Kitchen which has been established at Hicksville, Long Island.

Its object is twofold—to furnish instruction to all who apply for it in the practical details of canning, drying, salting and preserving and in general thrift, and to collect, preserve and store for future use all surplus farm and garden products.

On the first three days of the week these products will be preserved under competent instructors, stored and sold under the Long Island Food Reserve Battalion, the needs of the community being considered first. Women who volunteer for work on these days will not only be helping a good cause but will be receiving the personal benefit of free instruction.

On Thursday, Friday and Saturday of each week the kitchen is open for use, under competent instructors, to all women who wish to preserve their own vegetables, a nominal charge being made for gas and water.

Those who have gardens are asked to donate any surplus vegetables, also jars, bottles, tins with covers, cracker boxes, pails, crocks, anything that is not being used.

Another use for the surplus of gardens is that of supplying those who have none and who have little money with which to buy.

Help the Country By Preserving the Surplus Summer Food for Next Winter's Use

THERE have been two distinct phases of the movement to increase the food supply of the country which have been aided by women of all ranks of society. The first started the demand that more acreage should be put under cultivation, that the byways and back yards should be spaded and planted; the other took up the importance of conserving and preserving the food we raise.

It was primarily in support of the movement to put by as much as possible of the food that we raise this summer for the lean days of next winter that the first train carrying inspiration and instruction was sent over Long Island two weeks ago by the Woman's Food Battalion. Mr. Ralph Peters, president of the Long Island Railroad, has advocated the tillage of more land ever since he came to the island. This year he has seen a realization in large part of his hopes. Land that has lain idle for many years has been turned over and planted. In spite of the discouraging season and the failure of many first plantings to come up enthusiasts replanted and went on hoping and working.

If the hopes are realized and the work crowned with bountiful harvests there will be more food than can be eaten before it spoils. Nothing is to be wasted and, that this may be carried out, arrangements are being made for the distribution of a part of the surplus and the preserving of the remainder. Unless this is done many persons will suffer from hunger and high prices next winter. A way should be found to preserve everything that is not eaten fresh. It was to this end that the special train set forth with the food crusaders. At every village where it stopped they preached the gospel of food production and conservation and gave practical instruction in methods. One car was fitted up in laboratory fashion with fruits and vegetables that had been put up by Mrs. H. B. Fullerton and had kept well, some of them for as long as three and four years. Then there were the boilers, cookers and other apparatus for sterilizing and treating fruits and vegetables according to the most approved modern methods. On another table were the various styles of jars and tins recommended for the putting up of fruits and vegetables. This year tin is more expensive than glass, so that it probably will be used less than ever before, and, indeed, it is far more economical at all times to use the glass, as it can be used over and over, while tin has to be discarded after the first year and is not always dependable even for that.

But there are cheaper and equally good methods of preserving food than by canning it. Salt brine, for example, will keep green beans and many other vegetables quite well without sealing. Take a stone jar and make a brine strong enough to float an egg. In this put the green string beans, and when the jar is nearly full put an inverted plate on the top and press down with a weight. Another way is to put a layer of salt and a layer of beans alternately until the jar is filled. By this method the beans may be added, a few at a time.

There were also instructions about drying fruits and vegetables and putting up fruits without sugar.

Receipts distributed at various stations included these used by "Uncle Solomon," an old house servant of Mr. Richard Peters, of Atlanta, Ga., in 1900:—

To Dry Okra.—Cut in rings, half inch thick; dry in sun; put in bags when dry and hang up.

Beans and Okra (in Brine).—Make a brine strong enough to float an egg. When gathering the beans or okra pick with a short stem; put in a stone jar, cover with brine. To keep vegetables well under brine fill a bag the size of large part of jar with clean oat or wheat straw and lay on top of vegetables; press down as often as you add vegetables; when ready to use soak vegetables over night in cold water before cooking.

To Keep Worms Out of Dried Peas or Beans.—Spread in a biscuit pan, place in a warm oven until hot through, then sack and tie up carefully and hang in the air.

To Keep Green Corn on the Ear.—Leave the inner shuck on, also cut off stem; stand ears upright in a stone jar, pack tightly when layers are next the top cover with brine strong enough to float an egg. Tie over mouth of jar cloth dipped in melted paraffine.

To Keep Green Peppers.—Pack in jars and cover with strong brine.

To Dry Green Corn.—Place corn, cut, cobby picked, cut in inch pieces, cob in a pot of water, cook a short while, packed tightly in glass jars and placed under the cold water faucet. Let the water run into the jars for twenty minutes. Place rubbers and covers on jars and seal. Cranberries may be put up the same way.

Rhubarb makes one of the best and cheapest marmalades. Place four pounds of rhubarb, cut and washed, in a preserving kettle in layers with four pounds of sugar and bring to the boiling point very slowly. Simmer for several hours, stirring frequently. To test when done put a little on a plate and when it will stand without running it is sufficiently cooked. Fill sterilized jars and cover with melted paraffine.

If you have a strawberry bed or live near some one who has and who will sell you fresh berries, put up some for next winter. Berries which are bought at the stores are too often unfit for canning.

Pick over the berries and hull them; wash and drain; pack in a jar without crushing. Pour hot syrup over the berries to the top, then put on the rubber and top and partially tighten. Sterilize twelve minutes in a hot water bath, six minutes under five pounds of steam, eight minutes in water-seal outfit, or five minutes in pressure cooker. The syrup should be made with 1½ quarts sugar to one quart water boiled to medium thick.

Another way is to crush berries for one quart natural juice, add one quart sugar and boil to medium thick syrup.

For fig preserves, place the berries in a shallow platter in a single layer; sprinkle sugar over them; pour over them 40 degrees syrup. Cover with glass and leave in hot sun eight to twelve hours. Put in jars and cover with paraffine or paper.

To can peas, blanch from five to ten minutes in boiling water, then plunge in cold water and use level teaspoonful of salt to each pint. Place rubber and top and partly tighten top. Sterilize in a boiler for an hour a day for three days, tightening the jar each time after removing it from the boiler.

"The great secret of canning or preserving lies in complete sterilization," says a pamphlet issued by the Department of Agriculture. "It is necessary, in order to completely sterilize a vegetable, to heat it to the boiling point of water and keep it at that temperature for about one hour upon two or three successive days, or else keep it at the temperature of boiling water for a long period of time—about five hours. The process of boiling upon successive days is the one that is always employed in scientific work and is much to be preferred. The boiling on the first day kills all the moulds and practically all of the bacteria, but does not kill the spores or seeds.

"As soon as the jar cools these seeds germinate and a fresh crop of bacteria begin work upon the vegetables. The boiling upon the second day kills this crop of bacteria before they have had time to develop spores. The boiling upon the third day is not always necessary, but is advisable in order to be sure that the sterilization is complete. Among scientists this is called fractional sterilization, and this principle constitutes the whole secret of canning. If the housewife will only bear this in mind she will be able with a little ingenuity to can any meat, fruit or vegetable.

"Even after sterilization is completed the work is not yet done. The spores of bacteria are so light that they float about in the air and settle upon almost everything. The air is alive with them. A bubble of air no larger than a pea may contain hundreds of them. Therefore it is necessary after sterilizing a jar of vegetables to exclude carefully all outside air. If one bacterium or one of its spores should get in and find a resting place, in the course of a few days the contents of the jar would spoil. This is why the exclusion of air is an important factor, not because the air itself does any damage, but because of the ever present bacteria.

"While there are many patented sterilizers, a tin clothes boiler with a false bottom made of wire netting cut to fit will serve satisfactorily. The netting is made of medium sized galvanized wire with one-half inch mesh. A false bottom is absolutely necessary, as the jars will break if set flat upon the bottom of the boiler. Narrow strips of wood, straw or almost anything of this nature may be used for the purpose, but the wire gauze is clean and convenient.

"There are several varieties of patent steamers or steam cookers in common use. These have either one or two doors and hold a dozen or more quart jars. They are ideal for canning, but they are somewhat expensive and can be easily dispensed with. A common ham boiler or clothes boiler with a tight fitting cover will answer every purpose."

Tracked by a Human Weakness

By WILLARD BLAKEMAN

One morning the quiet town of Silver Waters—named for a stream running through it—was horrified at the announcement that Leonard Marston had been found murdered in his bed. Silver Waters was a summer settlement of wealthy persons who were not there in winter, but Marston had remained beyond the usual time, and the tragedy occurred late in November.

The house had evidently been entered for the purpose of plunder. It was generally known that Mrs. Marston, who was in the city at the time of the murder, had a great deal of valuable jewelry. Some of this was at the country house, and it was all taken by the robbers, as were her husband's studs, sleeve buttons, scarfpins, etc.

When the police, who were called in at once, came they took possession of the premises, allowing nothing to be touched till the arrival of Dempsey, a detective, who was to make a thorough examination.

Dempsey had a reputation of being one of the most skillful probers of crimes in America. When he arrived he began his search for something the criminal or criminals had left as a possible clew. There were no footprints, which are usually considered the most important pointers. Indeed, after an hour's methodical investigation Dempsey had discovered nothing. Then his eye caught a small object under a dresser from which Mr. Marston's belongings had been taken.

Drawing an electric lamp from his pocket, he flashed it upon the object and revealed a stud. Taking it up, he saw that it was a mosaic and recognized it as one that must have been made in Italy. Evidently in taking it from the box in which it and other articles of like character had been kept the thief had dropped it and it had rolled under the dresser.

This was the only clew that was found. Dempsey inquired of Mrs. Marston how many studs of the set her husband had possessed, where they had been procured and any other information the lady might give. He was told that there were three studs in the set, with a pair of sleeve buttons to match. She had brought them from Rome with her after her last visit there during the previous summer. The design was the same on all the studs and the sleeve links, a copy of the head of a statue in the Vatican called the Apollo Belvidere.

"That will do," said Dempsey. "It may be a long chase, but if persisted in the thief and murderer will at last be found."

Dempsey did not begin to probe the matter till a month after the robbery, when he got up a circular, a copy of which he sent to every pawnbroker and manufacturing jeweler in America. He gave a description of the mosaic stud and a picture of it. He got nothing from any pawnbroker, but from a jeweler he received a letter stating that two studs answering the description in his letter had been made into a pair of earrings in his shop. Dempsey responded to the letter in person and learned that the work had been done for a woman. She was well remembered by the clerk who took the order and was described as about twenty-eight or thirty years old, large, rather flashy in her dress, and her face and neck had been "calcimined."

From this point Dempsey worked with a large corps of assistants, whom he employed to go to public places of amusement, dining places, cabarets—indeed, such places as are frequented by the floating population of cities. Nevertheless a year passed with no results.

At last one of Dempsey's assistants, a girl about sixteen years old, reported that a friend of hers had told her that she had sat next to a woman at a movie show who wore mosaic earrings representing "the head of a man with curly hair." The assistants were instructed to follow the person if met with and note the residence. But the woman with the earrings could not be found. So the game was lost.

But Dempsey went at once to the city where the discovery had been made, hired a special corps of assistants and went about himself where pleasure loving people go.

One evening after dining at a cabaret he was lighting a cigar and about to move on when a woman entered, brushed past him and took a seat at a table with her escort. Dempsey's eyes were out for earrings, and he thought those the woman wore were mosaics. He took a seat at a table near the one at which the couple sat, but not near enough to get a close view of her earrings. The man ordered drinks, after which the couple danced. While they were dancing Dempsey took a seat within a few feet of the one the woman had left, though his back would be toward her. When she returned she took the seat she had occupied before. Dempsey turned around and, seizing one of the earrings in his hand, brought it to within a proper focus for his eyes.

When Mrs. Marston was going to bed that night she received a telephone message from Dempsey stating that he had found the stolen studs, the wearer had revealed the thief and murderer and he had been arrested.

"How did you do it?" asked the widow.

"It came through a human barbarism—a passion for adornment—which civilization has not eradicated," was the reply.

FORMIDABLE WEAPON IS THE MACHINE-GUN

French Soldier, with its Aid, Alone Accounted for Eight Hundred Germans

Emile Alexandre Bigorne, a simple machine-gun operator, awarded the Legion of Honor, the highest military decoration that France can give to an ordinary soldier, repulsed, single-handed, with his machine-gun, a German counter-attack. No fewer than 800 Germans were killed, wounded or put to flight. Bigorne's exploit demonstrates to some extent the role which the machine-gun has come to play in the war, where it is, without question, the most formidable weapon now known. Its death-dealing effects far exceed those of heavy artillery. Following one of the French advances in the early part of a great offensive, Bigorne found himself holding down a German trench in company with a dozen other machine-gun men of his company. The Germans had kept them isolated all night by a barrage fire, and early in the morning gave indications of preparing a counter-attack. With the gradual increase of the morning light the German fire became more accurate, with the result that one by one Bigorne's comrades were killed. They had orders to hold the trench regardless of cost. When Bigorne found himself the sole survivor, with a heavy German counter-attack preparing a few dozen yards in front of him, he gathered together the machine-gun belts of his dead comrades. Altogether he found himself in possession of about 1,000 cartridges. Adjusting his machine gun, and placing the cartridge belts near, where he would be able to feed them in himself, he waited till the first Germans were close in before opening his deadly fire. The Germans began falling first one by one. Then, as they crowded to the attack, by fives, tens, twenties, and fifties. Bigorne never wasted a shot. Yet, as the Germans went down by the score, still other scores leaped up in their place. In the end Bigorne found himself with a last cartridge belt, and a whole column of Germans still swarming to the assault. He fed the belt in and then took a last long sweep across the entire front of the approaching Germans. It was his last cartridge, but it proved sufficient, for, under his deadly aim, the entire column broke and dashed back to its trench. For two hours Bigorne continued his position absolutely without ammunition, waiting to see what the Germans would do. Finally he was relieved before another attack could be launched, and upon being conducted to the rear, mighty thankful that he had got out alive, he was greeted, to his amazement, by his general. He announced that he was to be recommended for the Legion of Honor. On the day Bigorne got his cross with his citation signed by General Nivelle he was also given six days' permission to visit his aged mother, who, since the beginning of the war, had been held by the Germans, but finally allowed to return to France. As he boarded the train at Paris for home, after getting his cross of the Legion of Honor, he declared that he did not know which of the two recompenses he really preferred.

EQUATORIAL AFRICA GERMAN AMBITIONS

How It is Proposed to Use Hordes of Trained and Equipped Black Troops

Why is General Smuts anxious about the future of Equatorial Africa? Because the war has brought the surprising revelation that the African negroes can be transformed into some of the finest fighting material in the world. General Smuts confesses that his eyes were opened by his East African experiences. He realised then for the first time that it would be possible to organize among the African blacks "one of the most powerful armies the world has ever seen." Commander Wedgwood said the same thing in Parliament. He declared that the Askaris in East Africa who fought under German leadership were "the most formidable forces of black troops that I have ever seen." (The term "Askari" is the East African equivalent for "sepoy," but has an Asiatic derivation.) For strength and brute courage, for insensibility to pain, for ability to endure fatigue and short commons, for docility under orders, for fearlessness of death, some of the black races of Central Africa are almost unequalled. Commander Wedgwood believes that a mighty black army could be created which would "walk through Africa." General Smuts told the essence of the German plan, which is to create "a great Central African Empire" stretching from the Indian Ocean to the South Atlantic Ocean. Their project, which was first disclosed in 1912 under the direct inspiration of the German Government, is to acquire Portuguese East and West Africa and the Belgian Congo, and to link these territories with Kamerun. In conjunction with a reinvigorated Turkey, they hope to seize Egypt and the Sudan. They would hold the Sues Canal, and by means of naval bases on both sides of Africa they would command the sea routes to the East and to Australasia. And their main instrument would be hordes of black troops trained and equipped in tropical Africa, all of which is of course contingent on the impossibility of Germany winning the war.

General at Twenty-Eight

New Zealand has reason to be proud of Brigadier-General V. C. Freyberg, V.C., D.S.O. At the age of twenty-eight he attained, through sheer ability and brilliance, brigade rank—an achievement which is unprecedented in the annals of the British Army. General Freyberg fought at Antwerp, where his hand was severely damaged by live-wire entanglements, and also in Gallipoli, where he gained the D.S.O. for swimming ashore in the Gulf of Saros and lighting flares, which led the Turks to believe that a landing was contemplated. His adventure was declared by those who witnessed it to be the bravest deed of the war.

WALKERVILLE MAN GAINED 10 POUNDS

Unable to Work For Seven Months —Now Operates a 36-inch Lathe Every Day Without Tiring

Hundreds of Canadian people, both men and women, are now taking Tanlac with the most astonishing and gratifying results, and numbers have testified in the past few days to the benefits they have derived from its use. Among the number is James Robb, 103 Ontario street, Walkerville, Ont., who has been machinist in the Canadian Bridge Company, one of the largest concerns of its kind in North America, for the past four years.

Mr. Robb is a man of unquestioned integrity, and is highly esteemed by the people of both Walkerville and Windsor. He is also well-known among the machinists of Detroit, Mich, U.S.A., where at one of the Cunningham Drug Stores he first bought Tanlac. In relating his experience with the medicine Mr. Robb said:

"I have only taken three bottles Tanlac so far, but have already gained ten pounds in weight, and am now able to operate a thirty-six inch lathe steadily every day. I had suffered from catarrhal trouble for over a year, and kept getting worse because nothing did me any good. I had no appetite, and what I did manage to eat failed to give me any nourishment. My liver was sluggish and inactive, black specks would come before my eyes, and I was very dizzy at times. I had intense pains in the pit of my stomach, nausea, bloating, and in fact all the symptoms of catarrh of the stomach, and suffered more than I can describe. I was all run-down generally. My sleep was badly broken, and I fell off in weight and simply felt terrible.

"I certainly was in bad shape and had been unable to work for seven months when I found out about Tanlac. I read so many testimonials given by people who had gotten relief from troubles like mine by taking Tanlac that I decided to see what it would do for me, and it certainly has fixed me up in fine shape. My appetite couldn't be better, and I can eat what I want without having any pain or distress from it at all. I sleep as sound as a dollar every night and simply feel like I have been made into a new man. As I have already said, I have gained ten pounds in weight and my strength and energy have increased until I now work regular every day. Tanlac has done more for me than everything else I ever tried, in fact it is the only thing that has helped me. I am telling all my friends about it, and am glad to recommend it to everyone, especially those trying to find relief from troubles like I had."

Tanlac is now sold in Peterborough by Warne Drug Co., Ltd.

Salt Means Much to Health.

"If the human race should be deprived of salt, even for a period of a few months," said a physician, "we would not only lose a natural healthful incentive for our food, but disease, with all its attendant miseries, would spread with such relentless speed as to defy the efforts of the most skillful doctors of the land. Ailing persons frequently refuse sugar, but they seldom turn up their noses at common salt. That is because there is in the body a deficiency of chloride of sodium, and nature intuitively excites the desire for it. Salt is essential to health and life and is as much a food as bread or flesh. If there is no wish for salt in a person doctors uniformly conclude that disease in some form is lurking unsuspected in the system."

The Barking Wolf.

The prairie wolf, the coyote of the Mexicans, is the American representative of the old world jackal. It is thirty-six to forty inches long, with a tail measuring sixteen to eighteen inches. Its color is usually a yellowish gray on the back and sides, with black cloudings. The under parts and inside of limbs are of a dirty white tint. The cry is a sort of snapping bark, and for this reason the animal is known as the barking wolf. It lives and breeds in burrows and has its young in April, often ten at a time. It hunts in packs and is very fleet.

OPPOSED BRITISH BUILDING RAILWAY

How the Old Russian Regime Baulked British Contractors in Road Construction

How the old regime in Russia interfered with and delayed the building of the railway from Petrograd to the Arctic ocean, a railway on which many Canadian workmen were employed, is told in a remarkable article in the Daily Telegraph. The article states:

From the very first day on which the work was begun, it became obvious that the minister of ways of communication did not want an English concern to build the railway, and had decided that it should not do so. Every conceivable obstacle was placed in the way of the contractors. The labor promised was not on the spot, and it was said it could not be procured. Prisoners of war were asked for. It was replied that it would be dangerous to have Germans working so near the frontier. Eventually 25,000 Austrian Serbs, who, no doubt, would very gladly have been fighting their former masters, were sent up to the Murman, but no proper arrangements were made either to house or feed them. They were left almost without shelter in what is perhaps the most inclement area of Northern Europe, and for weeks had not a particle of warm food, not even so much as a cup of tea. When at last, in consequence of the insistent pressure of true Serbians, from one of whom these details were obtained, orders were given to take these unhappy captives back to the place from which they had come, only a miserable and half-starved remnant was left to tell the story of their sufferings. It was just the same with the material obligations of the ministry. Work was perpetually held up by the lack of sleepers, ballast and other things which should have been at hand. And not only did the officials not discharge the ships with material from abroad, as they had bound themselves to do, but they even prevented the contractors' own servants from doing this work.

In the end, the term of the contract came to an end, and there was no railway. The ministry then declared the agreement invalid, took over the construction themselves, and the line which should have been carrying the sorely-needed war stores to the front by the beginning of 1916 was not finished till the autumn. According to the contractors, proofs exist that as soon as the contract was signed orders were sent from the ministry in Petrograd to the head of the local railway administration that the Englishmen were to be obstructed in every possible way. It might be supposed that only pronounced Germanophile sentiments could account for a course so treacherous to Russia, so hideously fatal to the lives of the fellow-countrymen of those with whom it originated. But that would be to ascribe to the official of the old regime more than his due of logical reasoning. The men who held up the building of the Murmen railway for nine months did not think of the ultimate consequences of their deeds. They only thought that if the English were allowed to do the work they themselves would have to forgo all the lucrative pickings and stealings which they considered to be their just perquisites from any big piece of railway construction in their country.

WASHED UP BY THE SEA

Villagers Who "Make a Bit" by Garnering Watery War-Harvest

"It's an ill wind that blows nobody good"; and though times have been hard for the inhabitants of East Coast towns there are many dwellers by the sea who have profited in an unexpected though tragic manner by the "frightfulness" of the Hun.

The ravages of the U-boats added materially to the harvest of the sea, and during a few months whole shiploads of merchandise were washed ashore, to be salved by the villagers.

The spoils consisted principally of timber and margarine, and upon one occasion great tubs and cases of butter and margarine came rolling in on the waves.

A large quantity was quite uneatable, and the rest, sandy and soaked with sea-water, was collected in carts for distribution to munition factories, first going through some cleansing process.

This salvage work forms a profitable side-line for the villagers. Each man marks his individual heap with his name; carts and wagons collect the spoils for the Admiralty, and the salvors eventually obtain for their labor two-thirds of the value of the goods when they have been sold.

Thus a morning's work may bring in several pounds in cash, particularly when the cargo consists, which is often the case, of new timber; and on news of a wreck, men, women, and boys are on the shore by daybreak, wading in and triumphantly securing plank after plank.

SET DOGS ON PRISONERS

Brutal Treatment of British Prisoners of War in Germany

A White Paper, issued by the British Government, gives chapter and verse of the brutal treatment of British prisoners in Germany. This particular document is concerned with the use of police dogs in the camps. These dogs were used by the Germans to attack the prisoners, of which instances after instance is given. Private J. Marsh was bitten in five places by a big half-bred wolfhound. Major A. Peebles on several occasions saw a Belgian soldier leave the camp carrying a number of sacks, and accompanied by two "Feldwebels" and several dogs.

"The Belgian was little more than half-witted," he said. "One evening he appeared to be very much upset. I asked him where he went to in the afternoon. After much hesitation he told me that he was taken out into the fields, dressed up in the sacks and baited by the dogs to train them. The man was absolutely terrified."

People are often sad because life is a riddle of which they have failed to guess the answer.

wheat and oats at June 30 was 76 and 78, these figures being lower than in any of the last seven years at the same date. For Alberta spring wheat and oats on June 30 were 85 per cent. of the standard; and a telegram from the Alberta Department of Agriculture reports that conditions during the past week have been very favourable throughout the whole providence, frequent showers and warm weather having made rapid growth on all crops.

The Peace River district reports crops to be one week ahead of last year with prospects of a bumper harvest. Converting the figures for all Canada from percentage of the standard or full crop to a scale in which 100 represents the average condition on June 30 of the past nine years, 1908-1916, the condition becomes for wheat, oats, rye and barley as follows: Fall wheat 86, spring wheat 95, all wheat 95, oats 93, rye 94 and barley 97. That is to say, if conditions between June 30 is 14 per cent. below average for fall wheat, 5 per cent below for spring wheat all wheat and oats, 6 per cent below for rye and 3 per cent for barley. Hay, clover and alfalfa show good promise, excepting in Manitoba, where the condition is as low as 52 per cent of the standard.

ESTIMATED NUMBERS OF FARM LIVE STOCK.

It is estimated from the reports of correspondents that the numbers of farm live stock in Canada on June 30 were as follows: Horses 3,035,254; milch cows 2,642,709; other cattle 3,325,013; sheep 2,009,717; and swine 2,513,526. This is an increase over last year for all descriptions, excepting swine, which are less by over 300,000. The decline in numbers of sheep, which has been annually continous since 1913, appears to be arrested, the increase shown this year being over 44,600.

BRILLIANT VICTORY FOR THE FRENCH FORCES

VIOLENT FIGHTING REPORTED FROM THE GALICIAN FRONT

Enemy Forced a Retirement of the Russian Lines South of Novica, But Counter Attacks By General Bruisloff's Men Threw Teuton Forces Back ---French Make a Successful Attack and Hold All Gains.

A SUMMARY OF TO-DAY'S WAR CABLES

Special to The Examiner:

WASHINGTON, July 18.—Heavy attacks by German troops on Russian lines near Riga on the Baltic sea have been repulsed with great losses to the Teutons, it was announced at the Russian Embassy here to-day. British and Belgian armed motor cars are being used in large numbers against the enemy in Galicia.

LONDON, July 18.—Brisk local fighting and numerous raids were reported from the British front to-day by Field Marshal Haig east of Monchy Le Preux, local fighting all night resulted in a further gain of ground and a few more German prisoners, he said. Northeast of Oostaverne in the neighbourhood of Boesinghe, prisoners were captured and many of the enemy were killed in the course of successful raids. Near Wieltje hostile raiders were driven off.

LONDON, July 18.—The German War Office statement says: After lengthy and strong artillerying the French attacked and penetrated positions we recently captured in the southwestern corner of Malencourt Woods.

PARIS, July 18.—Repeated and violent attacks by the enemy in fruitless attempts to recapture ground gained in yesterday's French drive around Verdun was reported in to-day's official statement. The Germans bombarded the Verdun positions violently, and throughout the night sent their attacking waves against the new line held by General Petain's men. The enemy lost heavily and gained nothing. The German Crown Prince is back to where he started more than a year ago trying to take Verdun.

LONDON, July 18.—An unofficial report says one of the vessels captured by the British destroyers in the Zeebrugge raid was the great eastern railway steamer Brussels, whose captain, Captain Fryatt, was executed by the Germans after his capture in June of last year.

LISBON, July 18.—Bombs exploded under trains by rioters caused injury to a number of persons here to-day. At a number of points in the city there was spirited fighting between the police and malcontents.

COPENHAGEN, July 18.—A successor to Foreign Secretary Zimmerman had not been selected up to to-day, according to advices from Berlin.

NEW YORK, July 18.—An Associated Press cable from London, says: The new Cabinet appointments got a mixed reception in the morning newspapers. The majority, however, are indulgent and expressed willingness to give the appointed men a chance and to judge them by results. The selection of Sir Eric Campbell Geddes, who has been Director-General of the Munitions Supply to head the British Admiralty, is described as startling, original and bold. The Tory press deplores the removal of Sir Edward Carson from the Admiralty. The reception to Winston Spencer Churchill as Minister of Munitions is nowhere enthusiastic.

PETROGRAD, July 18.—Violent fighting on the Galician front was reported in to-day's War Office statement, with the enemy forcing the retirement of the Russian lines south of Novica. South of Novica the enemy occupied a height, the statement said. We slowly retired our line toward Novica, but our counter attacks threw him back. Enemy captured height which we reoccupied.

GERMANS BEHIND CHINESE TROUBLE.

LONDON, July 18.—Confirmation of reports that Germany financed the attempts of General Chang Heun to restore the monarchy in China was received by Japanese officials to-day. Simultaneously it was learned that a number of Germans participated in the recent fighting in Peking on the side of the Monarchist. President Li Yung Hung has left his refuge and resumed the presidency.

PARIS, July 17.—A powerful attack by the French this morning on the left bank of the Meuse resulted in the capture of German positions on a front of more than a mile and a half to a depth of about two-thirds of a mile. The War Office statement, announcing this gain, says that the Germans offered an energetic defence and suffered heavy losses, especially in their counter-attacks.

The text of the statement reads:

"Both artilleries were active in the region of Cerny, Ailles and the California Plateau.

"In the Champagne the enemy renewed his attacks north of Mont Teton and regained a footing at certain points in trench elements captured on July 14. The artillery action continued violently in the sector of Mont Haut, where we organized the ground gained.

VICTORY IN A FEW MINUTES.

"On the left bank of the Meuse an operation carried out by us this morning, west of Hill 304, developed a complete success for us. After strong artillery preparation our troops about 6:45 o'clock advanced to attack the enemy lines with irresistible spirit. Notwithstanding the energetic defence of the Germans we recaptured in a few minutes trenches which the enemy had occupied since June 29.

ADVANCE NEARLY A MILE.

"Pushing our advantages further we carried German positions beyond on a front of 2,500 metres on both sides of the road between Ennes and Malancourt. The entire first German line fell into our hands. A little later the second enemy line, after a desperate engagement, in which admirable valor was displayed by our soldiers was likewise conquered.

"The advance reached a depth of about one kilometre. Our line has thus been carried forward from the southeastern end of Avocourt Wood, as far as the western slopes of Hill 304, passing through Camard Wood.

"Several counter-attacks launched by the enemy in the course of the afternoon were crushed by our fire. The Germans suffered very heavy losses. The number of unwounded prisoners reached 425, of whom eight were officers.

"In the Champagne the Germans made another serious effort on the Teton. Their assaulting waves, caught under our fire, were compelled to return in disorder to their trenches, leaving a number of dead. We maintained our gains of Saturday."

LONDON, July 17.—Sir Edward Carson has relinquished his post as First Lord of the Admiralty and joined the War Cabinet without portfolio, according to an official announcement of new Ministerial appointments issued this evening. Sir Edward will be succeeded by Sir Eric Campbell Geddes, who has been Director-General of Munitions Supply.

Winston Spencer Churchill succeeds Dr. Christopher Addison as Minister of Munitions, Dr. Addison becoming a Minister without portfolio in charge of reconstruction. The Right Hon. E. S. Montagu is made Secretary for India, succeeding J. Austen Chamberlain.

RUSSIA IS NOW IN THE THROES OF HOME RULE FIGHT

Ukrania, Finland and Kronstadt Are Seeking Home Rule and Resignation of Cabinet Ministers is One Result

AGREEMENT SIGNED

(By William G. Sheppard, U. P. Staff Correspondent.)

PETROGRAD, July 18.—Russia is in the throes of a home rule fight, which to-day has assumed importance second only to the war. It was the direct cause of Russia's cabinet split. Ukrania, Finland and Kronstadt are all seeking home rule—not independent. The Cabinet resignations of Cabinet ministers followed revelations that Foreign Minister Tereschenko and Minister of Communications Tseretelli had gone to Ukrania and signed an agreement that Ukranian officials should be responsible only to the Ukranian congress. This agreement was signed Saturday, and when Tereschenko and Tseretelli at Kieff were in constant touch by telegraph with the Cabinet at Petrograd. The Cabinet instructed them to get Ukrania's views, but not to sign an agreement. On Sunday the ministers returned and the Cabinet met for a long session at Prince Ivoff's home. Early Monday morning Tereschenko and Tseretelli brought out the agreement they had signed. There was an immediate storm in the meeting. The Cadet members refused to ratify the pledges. Prince Ivoff sided with the socialists and radicals who approved the step. The Cadets finally quit the meeting at three o'clock in the morning, later resigning. The Cadets apparently are still shewing the same misunderstanding of the aims of the Russian Commoners that caused the fall of Foreign Minister Milulkoff.

Rush Property Purchased By Quaker Oats Co.

New Purchase Will Enable Company to Straighten Out Property

The property of Mr. Henry Rush, 57 Brock street, has been purchased by the Quaker Oats Company. This is one of a number of realty deals that have been made by the Quaker Oats Company of late in order to square up the Company's property. One of the most important purchases was that of the foundry and pump works at 57 Hunter street, of which Ruth and Condon were the proprietors, and also the residence straight south of the last named property. The last named deal was consummated some months ago, and when the overhead bridge is constructed will enable the Company to straighten out their railway tracks and increase their trackage area.

Clark For Cabinet?

Ottawa Reports Say That He is a Possibility After a General Re-organization of Ministry is Made

ROWELL MENTIONED

OTTAWA, July 18.—Ottawa places no credence upon the rumour that Dr. Michael Clark is at once to join the Borden Cabinet. He is an eventual possibility without portfolio, but will not enter the ministry until there is a general reorganisation, and that in turn will likely await the judgment of the Commission which has been sitting upon Hon. Rogers' case. There is renewed talk of securing N. W. Rowell for a Union Cabinet. One rumour says that Dr. Clark will be used as one of the chief campaign speakers by the government and will afterwards be given a seat in the Senate.

A Drowning At Noon Hour

H. Cupid's Clothes Found at Foot of Douro Street—Believed to Have Met Death While Bathing —Body Not Yet Recovered

A little pile of clothes found on the east bank of the river, at the foot of Douro Street, shortly after dinner today, provided a silent but significant explanation of the absence of H. Cupid, a labourer employed by the Leonard Construction Company at the Quaker Oats Company's plant.

When the men registered their return to work this afternoon, No. 38 was missing. He had gone out for dinner, and should have returned. But he had not clocked in, and the time sheet simply marked him absent.

About two o'clock, when the pile of clothes had been examined for a clue to their owner, a metal identification tag stamped with the number "38" was found in one of the pockets. The last entry had evidently been made opposite the name of H. Cupid.

Apparently he had gone up the river to swim during the noon hour, and had selected a place which he must have learned was a resort of bathers. At the end of Douro Street are the piers of the old Dickson Company dam. The water is deep there, and the current runs strong. All the evidence supported the belief that Cupid had met his death unobserved and alone.

The clothes were found by boys who were preparing for an afternoon's swim. In the pockets was a sum of money, also a watch and other personal articles.

At the office of the Leonard Construction Company, no one apparently knew anything of Cupid except that he was number 38, though one employee said that he boarded on Munro Avenue, Ashburnham. He was believed to be a Canadian, but his affairs were otherwise unknown.

Narrow Escape For U. S. Liner

Torpedo Only Missed Steamer By Thirty Yards

Special to The Examiner:

AN ATLANTIC PORT, July 18.—A torpedo missed a big American liner by thirty yards when it was attacked by a submarine July 11, according to Col. A. C. Greene Harrison, British army officer, who arrived on the steamer to-day.

Col. Harrison said none of the passengers saw the submarine, but the naval gun crew made ready for action. No shots were fired.

Another Squad Of Men Arrive

Another squad of men have been secured by the Canadian Leonard Construction Company and are being employed in the construction of the new million dollar plant of the Quaker Oats Company. It is the intention of the Company to push the work, and if possible, have the large buildings, including a battery of eighteen elevators, up by Christmas.

EXTENSION RESOLUTION CARRIED BUT GENERAL ELECTION IS NOT FAR OFF

Vote Was 82 to 62 and in View of the Strong Opposition to the Resolution An Early Appeal to the Country is Expected by Everyone

UNION IMPRACTICABLE

Ottawa, July 17.—The die is cast. Within the next two months Canada will witness a general election, the first in six years. By a vote of 82 to 62 the House of Commons at midnight approved the extension resolution submitted by Premier Borden. Six Liberals voted with the Government. Six Conservatives voted with the Opposition.

Sir Robert told the House frankly that unless the resolution carried with practical unanimity it could not go forward to the Imperial Parliament at London. The division leaves the members speculating as to whether they will go before their electors in August or September. Few look for the election as late as November.

Coalition Government is off until after polling. Mr. Fred P. Pardee, the Chairman of the war-winning Liberals, who supported the principle of the military service act, made that plain in his impressive speech to-night. He attributed its failure to "different and conflicting elements on both sides of the House.

The Prime Minister, in proposing the resolution for a year's further extension of parliament, pointed the war crisis, the divisions and dissipation of energy which would result from the turmoil of an election, and the practical disenfranchisement of the men at the front. He cited the precedent of Great Britain, and declared that the destinies of Canada and the civilization of the world overbore any technical constitutional conventions. He pleaded that there should be a setting aside of all partisanship and political strife, and with an extended Parliamentary term "a Government formed by fair union of both political parties."

Mr. Graham's Proposal.

When the Prime Minister sat down to the surprise of most members of the House, it was not Sir Wilfrid Laurier, but his lieutenant, Hon. G. P. Graham, who rose. Mr. Graham, in a brief, but clear-cut speech, put before the Government an alternative proposal to immediate consideration of the extension resolution in the following terms: "That the consideration of the terms of the said resolution should be deferred until the Government brings before Parliament measures providing that those able to pay will be asked to contribute their full share to the cost of the war, and by which all agricultural, industrial, transportation and natural resources of Canada will be organized to insure the greatest possible assistance to the Empire, and the war, and to reduce the cost of living to the Canadian people."

The amendment, which, with a few changes, is practically the same as the one of which Mr. Graham had given notice some weeks ago, provides that before the Government is given a mandate to carry on for another year it should produce a vigorous constructive programme of domestic organization of all the resources of the country—the second and equally important problem of war work necessary to back up the armies in the field.

Appeal for Pledge of Action.

Mr. Graham emphasized particularly organization for food production and food control, and the taxation of large incomes which do not now contribute anything like a fair share towards meeting the burden of war. Mr. Graham endorsed fully the principle of selective conscription, and made it clear that his amendment did not in any way interfere with the passing or the enforcement of the Government's measure. But, with only one part of its duty done, he appealed for a tangible pledge

THE WAR VETERANS' MOONLIGHT TO-NIGHT

With good weather to-night the second moonlight under the auspices of the Peterborough Branch of the Great War Veterans' Association, on the steamer Geneva, will be another big success. There will be plenty of music for dancing with Tucker's orchestra in attendance, and there will be a musical entertainment as well. Many friends of the War Veterans will spend the evening down the Otonabee.

PTE. GEO. HALL IS OFFICIALLY REPORTED AS KILLED IN ACTION

PTE. GEO. HALL.

Mr. R. R. Hall has received word that his nephew, Pte. Geo. Hall, of Fenelon Falls, who went overseas with a Canadian infantry unit, is officially reported killed in action, on June 29th. Pte. Hall was the son of Mr. Wm. J. Hall, of Fenelon Falls, and was widely known throughout this district.

LANCE-CORP. LASHBROOK.

To-day's official casualty list contains the name of Lance-Corp. Chas. Lashbrook, of Peterborough, who is officially reported as ill. Lance-Corp. Lashbrook enlisted here in the summer of 1915, with the 39th Battalion.

TORONTO, July 18.—It is not likely that Sir Edward Kemp, Minister of Militia, will permit the soldiers in training in the various camps for overseas service to help garner the crops in Ontario this fall. This was done last year. Owing to the shortage of farm help it was anticipated that possible action along these lines would be taken by the Minister of Militia, and thus relieve the situation to some extent.

According to Dr. Riddell of the Trades and Labour Branch of the Provincial Department of Public Works, who recently conferred with the Minister of Militia on the project, the latter does not feel disposed to disturb the training operations of the men this year.

Quebec Badly Off.

"The situation in Quebec is as bad, if not worse, than in Ontario," said Dr. Riddell. "The people in Montreal are not taking to the working on farms as the people of Ontario are, and the employment agencies throughout Quebec are not having much success in obtaining farm help."

While in Montreal Dr. Riddell urged the officials of the Grand Trunk, C. P. R., and Government lines to run special harvesters' excursions from the east, but as there is a scarcity of farm help in the Maritime Provinces, it is not likely that the service will be given.

It has been brought to the attention of the authorities that a number of officers, N.C.O.'s and men are making improper use of gold braid, and are wearing unauthorised silver braid indicating that they have returned from overseas on account of illness. The gold braid is to be worn by officers, N.C.O.'s and men whose names appear in the casualty lists as "wounded." The term "wounded" refers only to those whose names have appeared, or may hereafter appear in the casualty lists given out by the Adjutant-General's office, or by the G.O.C. of any force engaged in active operations. Reports from hospitals lists are not to be regarded as authoritative for these purposes. Officers and men reported "wounded-gas" or "wounded-shell-shock" are entitled to this distinction. Accidental or self-inflicted wounds or injuries do not qualify.

The Examiner has received the following letter from a former member of the 93rd Band, now overseas again:

Just a few lines to let you know how the boys are jogging along, after being quarantined for a month at Otterpool. Still we were not idle as we had to have our share of the training. Besides band duty we had to do our bombing, bayonet fighting and musketry courses. We are awaiting orders now, for we are likely to go to France to the 8th or 10th Battalion as a band, at least some of us, but I am sorry to say the 93rd members of this band are getting smaller and smaller, for we had to be All to go over, and here is a little more for that so-called paper, the Review, for now three more of the "Chocolate Soldiers" have been classed as unfit. They are H. Miles, J. James and R. Dyer. I can tell you the boys will never forget the slurs that were cast upon us by the Review. We carry the sting yet and shall until we get back, when we hope to be able to make that paper give us the apology due to us before we left Peterborough. I may say that although we go to France as a band, we have no cinch, for we have to take our turn in the trenches. I saw a clipping from the Examiner where six of the 93rd said they had enough of bands and were eager to get to the trenches, but I may say they are no more eager to get there than the ones that took instruments to help the 235th band, for we all knew from experience that whatever we did we should have to shoulder a rifle when we got over here. I can assure you that the men who have been turned down are greatly disappointed because they cannot go over with us, and we are sorry to part from them, but we all hope to be able to meet them again some day. The All men going over with us are P. Grange, A. Clarke, R. Morris, J. French, F. Wells, R. Woods, H. Worrall, E. Foy and W. Dyer. We are all waiting to get our leave, that is if we are able to get it, as we may not have a chance to go before we are ordered across.

A number of young men who are eligible for military service are calling on medical men for the purpose of securing certificates of ill-health in order to avoid conscription.

"It will make no difference how many family doctor certificates such men secure, they will all have to pass the military doctors' examination," said a military authority this morning. "They may think that by securing a certificate from family doctors that this will release them from duty, but say who think this have another guess coming. Why, even the men who have been given A.R. buttons will have to be re-examined by the military doctors when conscription is put into operation."

New York, July 17.—Wounded while fighting in the Boer army against the British at Ladysmith, Henry Craemer, now 39 years old, enlisted in the British army to-day.

"I don't hate the English any more and I want to fight against the Germans," said Craemer, who was accepted for the cavalry.

KINGSTON, July 17.— The Canadian Patriotic Fund has been issuing buttons of two kinds to soldiers who have been overseas. One has a waving flag, which shows that the wearer has reached England and on his return been honorably discharged. The other

WEDNESDAY, JULY 18, 1917

ALL IS WELL.

"Capt. Burnham stands by Premier." In box car letters, in a line stretching over seven columns, the Review last night announced this startling fact to its readers. What a wealth of encouragement for Sir Robert Borden in that glaring line! What matters it that Bourassa raves that Blondin is hissed, that Tancrede Marsil and Armande Lavergne are attacking the government and that Bob Rogers is too busy with whitewashing operations to come to the rescue. Burnham is loyal. At least, he was yesterday and probably is to-day if his foot doesn't slip on a conscription of—wealth or exemption—at—divinity-student's banana peel.

WELL DONE, VETERANS.

The Toronto branch of the Great War Veterans' Association took a step yesterday that will increase their popularity and prestige when they sent a deputation to the Police Commissioners, asking for assistance in stopping certain firms from using returned soldiers to exploit the public. The War Veterans complained that returned men were being employed in selling publications and articles of dubious value and were being instructed by the firms in question to play on the sympathies of the public to get business. The G. W. V. A., of which Peterborough has a flourishing and creditable branch, are to be congratulated upon taking this stand. One of the objects of the Association, as stated by the Veterans in their appeal to the Commissioners, is to "do all that can be done to maintain the dignity of the returned soldiers, and conserve the respect of the public for those men who have seen active service in the great war." Their action yesterday will go a long way in achieving this object, and in showing the public that the War Veterans' policy is not only a square deal for the returned man, but justice to all.

SIR JOHN KEITH.

Among the philanthropic agencies of England, few are better known than the Ragged School Union, of which the great Earl Shaftesbury was president from 1844 until his death. Its aims differ from those of Dr. Barnado's Homes, but both are one in their endeavour to care for the poorest children. Ragged School is a misnomer in these days, under England's State System of Education and the Shaftesbury Society, as it is now called, has developed new forms of activity, using its one hundred and forty affiliated mission branches as channels for the distribution of clothing and boots, and forming a network that enmeshes nearly all the child-cripple population (8,000) of London. These are visited, surgically aided, given residence to the Society's Seaside holiday homes and gathered weekly to eighty cripples' parlours.

The name of Sir John Keith is interwoven with all this work, and his zeal, energy, and love of children were recognized by the popular knighthood conferred by King Edward, in 1907. Ten years of strenuous work have since passed, and Sir John Keith is still busy at his desk. On June 10th he celebrated his 70th birthday, and was presented with a telescope by members of the staff, who are among his warmest admirers. On Shaftesbury Day (October 1st), he will deliver the inaugural lecture of a Shaftesbury Lectureship, which has been established as one form of marking his Jubilee of fifty years' service. The London offices of the Shaftesbury Society are at 29 John Street, W. C. 1.

THE AMERICAN LEGION.

Why do Canadian newspapers continue to print such buncome as the following cabled from London yesterday:

Can Wear American Medals.

London, July 17.—The King today approved the granting of permission to officers and men of the British forces to wear on their uniforms decorations and ribbons given them by the U. S. for war service. Sixty-one per cent. of the first unit of the American Legion in the Canadian army hold American decorations or ribbands for service in the Spanish war or in the Boxer uprising. Many of the men in the latter units also have decorations.

With all respect to the brave United States residents who are fighting with the Canadians in France, it must be said that there has been much untruthful matter published about the so-called "American legion." It is no secret that the 97th Battalion, unofficially known as the American legion, lost hundreds of men during the winter it was in Toronto through desertion and through medical unfitness, and that when the battalion finally went overseas, even after it had been reinforced by what was to have been the Second American Battalion, it was far under strength. On arrival in England the men were drafted into other units, and there is no such thing as an "American Legion" at the front, with the Canadians. If we were to take some American writers' figures as to the number of Americans with the Canadians and dovetail them with statistics from some British Canadians as to the number of British-born soldiers in the C. E. F., the startling conclusion would be reached that no native-born Canadians had gone overseas at all. As a matter of fact it has been officially stated that the total number of Americans who enlised in the C. E. F. was 7,000, and the number who have gone overseas is probably about half of that. All honour to the Americans who are battling there with the Maple Leaf boys, but why exaggerate their numbers especially in Canadian newspapers?

THE BOY SCOUTS MOVEMENT IN WAR TIME.

The stern actualities of war have all but excluded the Boy Scouts' movement from the public mind. Men, physically fit, are the coinage the nation must immediately produce to-day. Its youth are but a potential asset of to-morrow. Yet certain aspects of the quality and quantity of the present currency suggest particular attention to the present mintage. Hence, the third annual report of the Canadian General Council of the Boy Scouts' Association, and especially the possibilities of this organization, should be considered in the clearer light of the knowledge the war has forced upon us.

The features of the report dealing with membership and finances are altogether encouraging. On June 30th, 1916, there were in Canada 648 troops of Scouts, 1,082 officers and 17,542 Scouts as compared with 597 troops, 1,084 officers and 16,343 scouts in the preceding year. The decreased number of officers is explained by enlistments for overseas service. Although the total number of scouts who have responded to the call of the Empire has not yet been compiled, it may be safely assumed that the figures will be worthy of the Scouts. The treasurer's report for the year ending February 17, 1917, shows receipts of $37,728.12 with a surplus of $26,534.26. The assets amount to $66,270.62.

The increased enrollment for the Dominion of 1,199 over the preceding year must be satisfactory to those gentlemen who have actively supported and engaged in the advancement of this movement. But Ontario boys numbered 7,146 in 1916 as compared with 7,213 in the previous year. In the middle west provinces, the largest increases were recorded.

The Boy Scouts' Association commends itself to parents not only in the sturdy patriotism of its members who have enlisted, and there have been many from Peterborough, but in the patriotism and its attendant qualities that it will foster to-morrow. The essential discipline of a well organized troop of Boy Scouts provides an influence upon a boy's character that is bound to be reflected in the citizenship he will eventually assume. The association in the ranks foster a finer sense of manliness, a deeper spirit of fairness and less of bumptiousness than the aimless, street roving that claims the average boy as a recruit.

The Scouts have a code to which every member must be faithful, and their activities include all the natural interests of boys, directed to useful purposes.

Juvenile delinquency is a term that has been more frequently used in the warring nations since 1914. Whatever may be its psychological explanation, the simple fact is revealed in the apparent results of war time laxity of parental control and home influence and the youthful tendency to imitation of adults. To counteract this proclivity and lax discipline at home, the Boy Scouts' Association offers a remedy that will use and direct to proper ends the boy's energies without stultifying them, and at the same time inspire and evoke ideals of service to himself, to his companions and to the state. The Boy Scouts work in the Greater Production campaign, Red Cross and other patriotic collections and in providing huts and comforts for the soldiers overseas deserves the detail in which it is set out in the annual report. From these accomplishments and the possibilities of the movement influencing the boys of today to be worthy of the ideals and citizenship their older brothers, even their fathers, are fighting for, every thoughtful parent should support the Boy Scouts' movement, encourage the officers who volunteer to direct it and finally encourage their younger sons to join it.

HOW SEEMING LOSSES TO THE EMPIRE HAVE BECOME GAINS

History is like a mighty structure forever in the making. Multitudes toil at it with little knowledge of the plan they are helping to carry out; and no one can surely say what sort of an edifice it is to be. All we know is the little we can guess from what we see of the foundations. This would give us, if we were intelligent enough, some clue to what the superstructure was to be. But for the most part we fail to read these indications aright.

How our forebears fared and detested the Tories of Revolutionary days and gave good riddance to the forty thousand of them who went to Canada rather than to fight the witless, obstinate and insensate English king. We won our liberties without them and in spite of them, and we now see that they were to be a cornerstone of another splendid edifice of human freedom then under construction. They could do more in Canada for the advancement of mankind than they could do here. They kept the vast Dominion preponderatingly Anglo-Saxon. Their descendants are the United Empire Loyalist stock who for nearly a century and a half have largely directed Dominion affairs. They have always stood for British empire ideals. They opposed reciprocity with the United States in 1891 and 1911. They championed the British preferential tariff in 1897. They sent the Canadian contingent to the Boer war in 1899. Largely to them is due the Dominion's magnificent achievement in this world war, and they are now putting through the conscription law.

Another foundation stone for the twentieth century edifice of human freedom was laid about a score of years ago, though only the Master Architect seems to have known what was to be erected thereon. At that time a great influx from the United Kingdom poured into Canada, remaining for the most part in the cities while immigrants of other nationalities settled on the land. These British-born citizens helped to defeat reciprocity in 1911 being intensely loyal to the empire; but when the hard times of 1913-14 began they were in sore straits. Then came the war and the call of the old mother lioness to her whelps to gather round her and help to fight the Armageddon through. And these recent immigrants responded nobly. It is estimated that they formed eighty per cent. of the first contingent sent across the seas and that fifty per cent. of them who were eligible for military service have enlisted. Their example heartened the Canadian-born population of British origin, about twenty per cent. of whose eligibles have voluntarily and enthusiastically gone to the front.

Thus little by little the plan of the Builder is revealed and we discover that we have been working blindly to carry it out. Shall we not sometime learn that we are labouring all our lives at the great plan of the temple of humanity, the holy city to whose glory and honour the nations shall contribute, into which shall in nowise enter anything that defileth or maketh a lie.—Rochester Post.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

You are offered three guesses as to the identity of the Review's special correspondent in Ottawa. As a tip—the representative from an Eastern Ontario Riding used to be connected with a newspaper in the Midland Counties.

The suggestion has been made that the Market Square should be used as an automobile park and a returned soldier placed in charge. Well, there is this much to be said of the proposal that it would give one returned man a closer look at Peterborough's motor cars than he is liable to get under present conditions.

And again, in connection with this automobile park question, many business men who travel in a very popular brand of gas vehicle could help solve the problem by storing their cars in the office safe during business hours.

Toronto is dryer at present than at any time since the ball season opened—the Toronto ball club has just got rid of Tipple. The big pitcher has been returned to New York.

Sixteen of the United States suffragettes who have been attempting to picket the White House have been sentenced to a term in the work house. This is probably the closest any of the party have ever come to work in their lives.

Extension Resolution Carried

that the other and equally necessary half of national war service would be undertaken by this Parliament before it voted itself another year's tenure of power.

Income Tax Promised.

Sir George Foster, who followed Mr. Graham for an hour and a half, gave but a partial pledge. He announced that an income tax would be introduced and passed by this Parliament. The belated acquiescence in what Liberalism has been demanding without success ever since the war started, was a concession to unmistakable public demand, and a first fruit of the Liberal war policy. For the rest Sir George's speech was an apology for Government failure to handle the cost of living problem, the transportation problem, the shipbuilding problem, etc.

Mr. Graham's amendment was vigorously supported by Hon. Dr. Pugsley, Mr. E. M. Macdonald and Mr. Fred Pardee.

Union Impracticable, Pardee Thinks

The Liberal Chief Whip declared that Union Government was an impracticable ideal under the aegis of the present Administration, and under all the circumstances, he believed, that the quickest and best way to get a new Parliament having the confidence and the mandate of the people, and a real win-the-war Administration, was to appeal to the people.

Sir Wilfrid's Argument.

After the defeat of Mr. Graham's amendment, Sir Wilfrid Laurier rose immediately to speak on the main motion. The Liberal leader was in excellent form, speaking with great vigor and cogency. He covered the constitutional issue at stake, the abortive attempts at forming a Coalition Government under circumstances which the Prime Minister must have known could not be successful, and pleaded that the only way to secure anything like unity of effort, stable government and public confidence, was to trust the people and appeal to them for a mandate.

Liberals who voted with the Government were: Clark of Red Deer, Hugh Guthrie, J. G. Turriff, Levi Thomson, Albert Champagne and Robert Cruise. Government members voting with the Opposition were Barrette, Paquet, Bellemare, Girard, Descarries and Patenaude.

CHANGES ON THE MAP.

Why Denmark is Selling its Islands to America—A Valuable Base for Panama—The Fear of German Perfidy.

We are used to the sale of private estates, but the spectacle of an empire selling its possessions is rare and strange. Denmark is selling its colonies in the West Indies for five million pounds.

The islands are insignificant, from the Danish point of view, except as representing an idea. They consist of only the three little islands of Santo Cruz, St. Thomas and St. John, with a population of 27,000, mostly freed negro slaves. They were worthless to our friend the Danes, from a commercial point of view, but there was a certain glory in their possession, for they were the only colonies left to these sons of the old Vikings outside Europe.

Vikings bequeathed Denmark no New World territory, though they reached the shores of America 500 years before Columbus was born; but the islands served as a reminder of mighty days when those hardy Norsemen sailed every known sea.

The United States are the buyers of the three little islands, which cover only 138 miles. The great Republic has already 8,000 islands, but America wants these three because they may form a highly important military base for the Panama Canal. And Denmark sells the islands because—well, almost, we may say, because Germany has torn up a scrap of paper! America has been anxious to buy the islands ever since the Panama scheme was first mooted, and her price has risen from £800,000 to £5,000,000, at which sum the property is now to change hands. It is not the money that Denmark wants, but one of her statesmen has expressed the terrible fear that if some great Power desired to take these islands forcibly, Denmark could never prevent her.

That is an evidence of the fear in which little nationalities go as the result of German perfidy. Of course the fear is groundless now that Germany is being beaten. The United States would never dream of robbing another nation of an inch of land. She has bought more territory than any other nation ever known. She bought the great State of Louisiana, over 43,000 square miles, paying £2,500,000 to Napoleon for it, in 1803. Since then she has spent £16,000,000 in purchases of the same kind, for of the two million square miles she has added to her domains in the last century, most of it has come by purchase, including Alaska, Porto Rico, the Guam and Philippine Islands, the Swanson Islands, the Panama zone, and nearly a million square miles

"STUTTGART, PLEASE!"

It seems ironical that what is perhaps the finest railway station in Europe, should be nearing completion at a time when it can be of very little use, and certainly when magnificence in this direction must seem sadly out of place to the starving people for whom it is intended. The station is at Stuttgart, the capital of Wurtemberg. It was begun some years ago, is now nearly finished, the total cost date having reached the enormous sum of £10,312,500.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

A Bridal Commission

By JOHN KENAN

I was sittin' with Amelia before the dreplace, with the logs givin' out a cheerful heat. Amelia didn't seem happy, though, and I asked her why she looked so melancholy-like.

"I'll tell you, Mr. Grimshaw," she said. "Did you ever hear the song, 'No One to Love, None to Caress?' Well, that's the way I feel. Father ever since mother's death has been restless and cross, and now he's goin' to give me a stepmother. I haven't any brothers or sisters to love, and I'm goin' to have a stepmother to hate."

"Why, Amelia," says I, "the thing for you to do is to get married."

"How can I do that with nobody to marry me?" she asked, awful sad.

"How you talk!" says I. "You know mighty well there's lots of fellers that would be glad to git you."

"I'd like to know where they are. If you know any sich I wish you'd send em around."

"Sartain. I'll git you a husband in no time. Air you particular about his bein' good lookin' or havin' a farm of his own or anything like that?"

"No, I ain't particular, leastways I won't be if you can fix me out before paw brings that red headed widder into the house, 'cause I know I've got to git out when she comes in."

"How much time is there?"

"Well, I heard paw say the other day that he calc'lated to be married before the end o' next month."

"Supposin' I send you a feller that suits you and you suit him, what is there in it for me?"

"I don't see what I can do for you, Mr. Grimshaw, seein' that I haven't got a cent in the world, and there isn't any favor I know of that I can do you. But I suppose"—looking down at the floor—"havin' made the match, you'd be entitled to kiss the bride."

This bothered me a lot. I was to fix up a match by which another feller was to git all the kisses he wanted for a lifetime, and I was to git one kiss on the weddin' day.

"It seems to me, Amelia," I says, "that's like sellin' a man a house wo'th a lot o' money for a commission. He gits a whole house, and the broker gits a few dollars."

"You forgit," said Amelia, "that the broker don't want all the houses he sells. What would he do with 'em? Besides, when a man buys a house it argys that he's able to own a house and wants a house, and wants that particular house. I don't see that the broker earns anything more than his commission. Do you?"

"I don't see as he does," says I, scratchin' my head. And I didn't. Howsomever, I couldn't git it out o' my noddle that I was goin' to git the little end o' the bargain. But I felt sorry for Amelia, powerful sorry, for I'd had a stepmother myself.

"Is it customary," says I, "to pay a commission before the transaction's completed?"

"Not at all," said Amelia. "That wouldn't do."

"Why not?"

"Well, the broker, havin' got his pay, wouldn't take any pains in the matter."

"If he didn't do his work he might return what he'd received."

"In that case he'd git double pay for nothin—that is, if his commission was a kiss."

"Isn't there somepin among business men like payin' part down, the rest when the deal has gone through?"

"That's got nothin' to do with brokers; it's when you buy a piece of property yourself."

"Well," I says, givin' it up, "I reckon I'll have to wait for my pay till I've done the job."

I got up and was goin' out when Amelia said:

"How soon are you goin' to send a feller?"

"I dunno. Somehow I don't like the transaction. Seems to me he'll git the lion's share."

"Well, Mr. Grimshaw, since you look at it that way I don't know but I ought to make it more to your interest to do the job. I might double the commission, one-half payable in advance."

"Now you're shoutin'," I said, and instead of goin' away I sat down ag'in and tuk the first half o' my commission. It tasted so good that I began right off to hanker for the other half of my pay.

"Amelia," I says, "you couldn't pay it all in advance, could you?"

"Sartain not. What would there be to hold you to your work?"

I thort awhile, and then I said:

"Supposin' I make the deal for myself."

"What do you mean by that?"

"I mean supposin' I jist take the other feller by the nape o' the neck and put him out. Then, instead o' actin' as his broker, I acquire the property in my own name."

"Land sakes, Mr. Grimshaw!"

That was all the talkin' we done. I was hungry for another kiss, and I tuk her in my arms and had a dozen without stoppin'.

"Good gracious, Mr. Grimshaw, what you doin'?" she says.

"I'm makin' a fust payment to bind the bargain."

Amelia and I was married before her father brought the stepmother to his house, and Amelia found a home with me. One of her old flames on our weddin' day claimed a right to kiss the bride.

"What did you do to earn it?" says I to him.

Amelia bust out larfin.

The Largest Islands.

Australia has long been classed as the least of the continents and not as an island. The largest islands are graded downward in the order of their size, as follows: Greenland, 850,000 square miles; New Guinea, 312,000; Borneo, 280,000; Madagascar, 230,000. In the absence of exact surveys these areas are rough estimates and must be considered only as approximations, but it is not likely that careful measurements will introduce corrections so large as to change the order of the four. Australia is but slightly smaller than the continental United States excluding Alaska. —Exchange.

What's In a Name.

The victim of an accident glanced thoughtfully at the caller's card.

"I guess you're what they call an ambulance chaser, ain't you?" demanded the injured one.

"That's rather a harsh name, old man," replied the lawyer blandly. "Why not call me a settlement worker?"

A Psychological Problem.

Of interest to psychologists is the story told by a Boston woman, relative to her efforts to teach a child of three and one-half years the alphabet. The child mastered the entire alphabet with the exception of the letter T. "What letter is this?" she would ask, and each time the child would reply "Coffee."

Frying Pans and Pie.

After a time the American frying pan unfortunately displaces the European pot, the more palatable white bread supersedes the substantial loaf of rye, and the more healthful kuchen or kolatchi is displaced by pie, which crowns every American table and impairs the national digestion.—Dr. E. A. Steiner at Chautauqua.

Making Love.

A girl of seventeen once asked a grass widow:

"When a man makes love to a girl, is it a sign he wants to marry her?"

"Yes, my child," the grass widow answered grimly, "and when he stops making love to her, it is usually a sign that the marriage has taken place."

What the Old Man Meant.

He—Has your father said anything about me? She—Yes. He said that you ought to have been a big league manager. He—Did he say why? She—Yes. Because you are always explaining why you aren't doing anything this year and boasting about what you are going to do next year.—Puck.

WHY Does Your Head Ache?

Headaches, sick or other kinds, don't happen to people whose livers are busy and whose bowels are as regular as a clock.

Thousands of folks who used to have headaches say this is the way they removed the cause:

One pill at bedtime, regularly. Larger dose if there's a suspicion of biliousness or constipation.

PRACTICAL HEALTH HINT.

How to Avoid Grippe.

Don't put your mouth close to a telephone transmitter.

Avoid overeating, stuffy rooms and undue exposure to inclement weather.

Have a drinking glass, knife, fork, spoon, towels, pillowcase and handkerchief for your very own. Keep these articles by themselves.

Stay away from congested places where there is apt to be poor ventilation and where there are always people with colds.

Keep the feet dry, take plenty of exercise, observe regularity in bedtime hours and do not dress too warmly indoors. It is also well to have the nose and throat examined.

Inherent Dread of Cats For Dogs.

The instinctive fear which cats have of dogs is illustrated very amusingly by stroking a dog and then caressing a blind and newborn kitten with the same hand that has touched the dog. At once the kitten will spit and puff itself up in the most absurd way, distinguishing the smell of the beast which experience for thousands of generations has taught it most to dread.—London Standard.

Girlish Dissipation.

"Those two girls evidently had a little too much ice cream soda yester day."

"Why that inference?"

"I heard one telling the other that she had a cerise taste in her mouth this morning when she awoke."

Giving Due Credit.

"I presume Mr. Grabcoin, the eminent capitalist, poses as a self made man?"

"Well, no. Mr. Grabshaw frankly admits that some of his biggest deals could not have been put through without the aid of his lawyers."—Birmingham Age-Herald.

There Are Others.

"It is very strange that no one has ever been able to find Captain Kidd's treasure."

"Oh, well, Captain Kidd isn't the only man who has put his money into real estate and couldn't get it out."—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Ancients Used Few Adjectives.

The plethora of adjectives in modern literature contrasts with the abstinence of the ancients in this respect. A contributor to the Italian review, Minerva, with time to spare, has made a count of substantives and adjectives in the works of Vergil, Dante and Leonardo. In the second book of the "Aeneid," which contains the fall of Troy, there are 1,057 nouns and 580 adjectives. In Dante's "Divina Commedia," out of the 9,215 adjectives which it contains only seventeen are in the superlative. These are facts from which the tyro in literature may well draw a moral.—Christian Science Monitor.

'Just a Suggestion.

Before a man is hired to work at certain munitions plants he is required to give a complete account of himself and to answer a series of printed questions on a regular form.

The most important question of all appears at the head of each pedigree form. It is printed in bold faced type and inquires, "Where shall we ship your remains?"

The President's Title.

Washington, the first president, was inaugurated April 30, 1789. The ceremony was delayed several days while congress disputed as to whether the chief magistrate should have such title as "his excellency," "his highness" or the like. It was decided that he should be simply "the president of the United States."

When You Market Consider Your Less Fortunate Neighbor.

"Every citizen who uses more in his household than his household actually needs is increasing the cost of living for those less fortunate, and he is hindering the prosecution of the war."
Sir Thomas White, Minister of Finance.

THE well-to-do woman who sits at her phone and orders provisions lavishly, regardless of price, is abusing the power of money as a bully abuses brute strength!

No longer can we help ourselves as we see fit from an unlimited food supply—we are either limiting our buying to our own real needs or "hogging" someone else's share.

Extravagant buying by those who can afford it, with waste in some kitchens, and excess at some tables, will inevitably bring still greater hardships to those who cannot afford the prices, and hunger to those who must live on less.

Buy for your household as carefully and economically as your husband buys for his factory, store or office. Study food values as well as prices—make it a point to know just what you are getting—eliminate waste—and you'll find that you can feed your family well on far less than you spend now.

Belgians Tortured To Compel Labour

LED TO MOCK EXECUTIONS.

Official Evidence Collected at Havre, Shows Great Mortality from Hunger and Ill-Treatment.

HAVRE. — The Belgian government has received from various sources evidence which accords in every detail, proving that deported Belgian civilians are subjected systematically to mistreatment to bring them to forced labor for the German army. This evidence exposes insufficient nourishment, cruel punishment, brutal intimidation, and hard conditions of labor under which a great many of the deported civilians succumb, while a large proportion return so reduced and weakened that they are incapable of physical effort.

This is the regime of the camp at Soltau, described by one of the men who had been interned there, and who succeeded in escaping. In the morning a third of a litre of a beverage resembling coffee, but seeming to have been made of scorns; at noon a half litre of soup, generally made of beets but sometimes of potatoes; in the evening a fifth of a litre of porridge made of cornmeal or barley; the ration of bread is about one half pound per day; it is made of a mixture of cornmeal and rye. The interned are never given meat, fish or cheese.

In certain camps the evening meal was suppressed altogether, and even the other meagre repasts were reduced for those who refused to work for the Germans.

Besides hunger, the principal measure resorted to in order to bring the deported men to submission is the "supplice of the post." Stoutly fettered to posts, the men are exposed to heat, or cold, according to the season, for days together, during which their rations are reduced systematically until they reach the proportions of a half ration only for two days' subsistence.

Another cruelty practiced upon the deported to force them to work is the "supplice of the bath," a severe application of the Turkish bath. Several witnesses have confirmed this, among them the son of a manufacturer of the region of Antwerp, who with several of his comrades in camp was shut up in a small room heated to a very high temperature. There was only room in the place for them to stand erect and they were scarcely able to turn. They were left there for twenty-four hours.

Then they were led to a factory in the neighborhood, where they were asked if they would go to work. Upon their refusal they were taken to a field under military escort, divested of their overcoats, shoes, scarfs, hats or caps and exposed to a snowstorm an entire day and night, and under an absolute prohibition from making the slightest movement. Some of them lost consciousness after a few hours of this exposure, and all of them were taken to the hospital the following day.

The son of the Antwerp manufacturer was very stout and robust at the time of the deportation. He was sent home a complete physical wreck, and has died since from the mistreatment. He made the recital of his sufferings to the doctor who treated him, and the Belgian government is in possession of the evidence as given to the physician.

Two soldiers from Havre, the Lebris brothers, who escaped from Germany, confirm this evidence regarding the supplice of the Turkish bath.

A number of the witnesses called attention to the fact that frequently groups of deported men have been the object of a simulated execution, sometimes by a firing squad and sometimes by machine guns, in order to overcome their resistance and impress their comrades.

There is another means of constraint used upon the deported in the form of punishment camps and where the deported were forced to work in marshes, often in excessively cold weather, dressed in nothing but trousers, shirt and wooden shoes, without food during an entire day.

Some of the deported are sent to agricultural centres from which, according to the evidence of a man from Verviers who escaped from Germany, most of the victims return so enfeebled that it is necessary for them to be transported in carts.

Corporal punishment, the form of which is left to the discretion of the jailers, is frequently employed; such as blows with the butt of a rifle, and forced running for periods up to two hours without stopping, under menace of the bayonet, in addition to the practice of tying men to the post.

From all the evidence, it appears certain that the mortality among men subjected to these forms of mistreatment is alarming. The death of a great many of the deported men is attested.

Evidence regarding the camp of Soltau shows that the men are badly lodged, underfed, particularly in the working detachments, ill-clothed, brutally treated, sequestered, deprived of all diversion and distraction, and also refused any kind of spiritual consolation. A Belgian priest, who officiated at the hospital there in February, 1917, under the guard of a sentinel, was never able to see the interned.

At this camp at the end of February last there were eighty patients in the infirmary shed, most of them suffering form general debility, and 200 in other sheds, including a considerable number of men afflicted with dysentery while in the hospital there were more than 900 very serious cases from the different detachments and from the camp. In four months after the creation of the camp, in November, 1916, the deaths numbered 180. The causes were generally tuberculosis, pneumonia, heart weakness, and kindred diseases.

It had been necessary at that date to send back to Belgium between 5,000 and 6,000 of the interned for diFeb. 24 were 13, on Feb. 25, 14, and ferent infirmities. The deaths on on March 1 and 2, 17, not counting those that occurred in the working detachments. At that time between 3,000 and 4,000 men were interned.

Two or three dead, from physical exhaustion, were found every day among the deported in the sheds.

Information received from different parts of occupied Belgium confirms the statements regarding the physical condition of the deported who have been sent back to their homes. They are for the most part physically ruined. Many of them contract incurable diseases, from which they die shortly after returning home.

REJECTED LOVER KILLS HIS RIVAL.

Tragedy near Arnprior Means the Death of all Three Persons.

Arnprior, July 17. — Bruce M. Leitch, aged 25, a returned soldier of Montreal, is dead; his bride of a week is dying at a hotel in Sand Point, and William Bennett, aged 30, of 375 Notre Dame street, Montreal, also a returned soldier, is dying in a Renfrew hospital. Leitch, who is on leave from a Toronto Convalescent Home, was spending his honeymoon with his bride at Sand Point, near here. Bennett, who had been rejected by the girl, who was a Miss Gertrude Lillian Standring of Montreal, learned of their whereabouts, and arrived in Arnprior today. He waylaid them on a lonely road, and killed Leitch in cold blood, then shot Mrs. Letich through the right lung and face, and himself through the head. The three were found lying in the roadway by a hotelkeeper of Sand Point, at whose place Mr. and Mrs. Leitch had been staying.

RICHARD HALL & SON LIMITED

THE DEATH OF THE FAMOUS YPRES SALIENT

Canadian Officer Writes a Letter to His Enemy Fritz --British Have a Lot to Pay Back and Hope to Take the Fullest Measure.

The following letter from a Canadian officer who had served in the Ypres salient was first published in the Continental Times.

My Dear Frits.—The familiar use of your Christian name argues no undue familiarity on my part. I employ it because, where formerly the name spoke to peaceable Britons of a golden-bearded Prince who wood and won an English Princess, to our Empire in arms is now signifies the enemy.

I am writing to you, Frits as to the man on the other side of No Man's Land and quite distinct from your brother at home, because the occasion of my letter is an event with which you are by this time thoroughly acquainted, but which your Government has glossed over for domestic consumption. I refer to the death of the Ypres Salient.

The salient was a good friend to you, Frits, but not always. You have probably not forgotten that rainy October of 1914 when, amid mud and blood and anguish at Roulers and Moorslede and Menin, the dense columns of your enthusiastic comrades pressing forward from the capture of Antwerp to drive a way through our silly little army, through the disorganised Belgians, through the beaten French, to the Channel ports?

Frits, you were a good trier. You tried at Langemarck, to the north, at Zandvoorde, to the south of Ypres, and along the Menin road, to blast the passage to the sea. The Supreme War Lord himself came up to Roulers—or was it Menin?—to emphasise his imperial command that the road to Calais must be forced at all costs. You have the guns, you had the men, Frits many more guns, and many more men than we; but you didn't get through. Your Westfalians and your Badeners and your Wurtembergers, and all the rest of them, came on in their thousands; your unledged recruits advanced hand-in-hand, piping in their boys' voices your soldier songs; but you never reached the sea. Even your Guards, doing the parade step into battle along the Menin road, sent in as the supreme effort when all else had failed, achieved no more than the rest of you against the haggard, dirty shadows of men who had fought without respite for nigh on a month.

I don't want to buck, Frits, because, God knows, you nearly succeeded. You never realised until months afterwards, did you, how near you were to victory on October 31st, 1914? The U-boat menace you talk so much about was not in it with the peril that threatened the British Empire between the hours of two and three o'clock in the afternoon of that day when you had punched a hole in the first division line and thousands of you were surging forward to flow through the gap. But we foiled you again, Frits; the Worcesters went in with the bayonet and recaptured Gheluvelt, and the road to Calais was "na poo."

Still, despite your awful losses, you didn't do so badly. You managed to collar all the rising ground (such as it is in these flat Flanders plains), the Pilkem Ridge, the Messines-Wytschaete Ridge; north and south of Ypres you bent our line back so far that at the end of this great battle it was like a tightly strung bow spanned about Ypres. You had the high ground, the dry ground; we had the plain, the water and the mud. You could dig nice, secure trenches which you cleverly managed to drain into ours; we had to build up, painfully, by night, earthwork which you, having the observation, promptly spotted and demolished, with your guns in the morning.

It must have been a bully time for you Frits. You held all the trumps, superiority of position, of observation, of shells. You were as safe as a cruel little boy sitting on a high wall and chuckling stones at an invalid in a chair in the garden below. No wonder you used your lines in front of Ypres as a training school for young gunner officers!

You used to shell us, left, front, and centre. From the Messines Ridge you could peer right in behind us as we sat, as cheerfully as we might, behind our crumbling sandbags. How your Herren Lieutenants (who have such a special sense of humor, Frits, must have laughed to see us patching up our petty little parapets amid the great graveyard of the British race stretching in front of shattered Ypres!

But we held on, Frits. You think we are a stupid race. Perhaps we are, if that means we do not know when we are beaten. And you did your best in your ingenious, plodding way, to make life in the salient a hell on earth for our men. You shelled us by night; you shelled us by day. You pumped shrapnel into us filling up to the trenches; you scattered high-explosive shells over the roads; you bombarded the villages behind the lines; you lobbed those infernal and terrifying "Minnies" into our front line or searched it up and down with noisy, black five-point-nines. And when you had blown down the parapet so toilfully built up in the night your snipers laid on the gaps and, Frits, they took their toil.

Life was devilish unpleasant in the salient. Still, the fellows who were there always kept their tails up. I remember seeing a big notice-board planted at the entrance to a village which you particularly delighted to strafe: "Please keep under shelter of the houses and don't draw fire," it ran. "We live here; you don't." And it was signed with the name of the unit billeted there. Quite a tribute to the excellence of your observation, wasn't it, Frits? But scarcely a sign of low spirits?

Well, the old salient is dead, so they tell me. The North and South Irish, by whose squabbles you thought to profit, the English and the New Zealanders buried it with bell, book, and candle. And Frits, old friend, it looks as though the tables were going to be turned on you. For, in spite of what old Hindenburg tells your public at home, you know that your little Messines-Wytschaete Salient is flattened out; that the guns which were wont to make life so disagreeable for us are either in our hands or are buried under tons of earth; that you can no longer pry into the rear of our lines in front of Ypres; that rather we shall be looking down into the indifferent trenches in the plain, back to which you have been driven.

Now the laugh is with us. And, Frits, we have a lot to pay back. There is scarcely a Briton but has a relative or friend who is slumbering somewhere between Bossinghe and the Hill of Kemmel. You made things so hard for them that many must have been glad to go to their rest. But I feel sure they smiled in their last sleep when they heard the story of the Seventh of June.

Frits, I think you're "for it."

Hoping to meet you soon again,

NEW TRIAL FOR ADLER.

Assassin of Austrian Premier Will Probably Get Light Sentence, Despatch Says.

COPENHAGEN, July 17.—The Austrian Parliament has ordered a retrial of Adler, assassin of Premier Stuergkh, according to information received here to-day from Vienna.

The despatch asserted that Adler would probably be let off with a light prison sentence.

Adler was reported last week to have been refused a pardon of his death sentence. He was convicted after failure of an insanity plea.

PTE. ALLEN DIED IN A CASUALTY CLEARING STATION

Letter From Chaplain Tells of the Death of Former Member of the 93rd Battalion in France.

WOUNDED IN HEAD

Mr. Robert Allen, 629 Rogers street, has received the following letter in regard to the death at the front of his brother, Pte. Dan Allen, formerly of the 93rd Battalion:

France, May 13, 1917.

Dear Mr. Allen,—I expect by the time this letter reaches you, you will have received the telegram announcing the death of your brother, D. Allen. As I told you in my last letter, he was seriously wounded in the head and as I afterwards discovered, in the leg also. He was unconscious when he arrived here (No. 6 Casualty Clearing Station, B.E.F.) but regained consciousness and seemed to be getting on very well. During that time he asked me to send you a line to say that he was wounded. On the evening of the 11th I found him very much worse and the doctor gave very little hope of his recovery. He was unconscious again and died early in the morning of the 12th. He has received all the sacraments. I buried him today in the cemetery here after performing the first part of the ceremony in the church. I cannot tell you the name of the place, but if you will write to the Director of Graves, Registration and Enquiries, War Office, Winchester House, St. James' Square, London, S.W., they will in due time tell you the name of the cemetery, and on asking for it they will send a photo of the grave.

With every sympathy in your bereavement, I remain,

Yours faithfully,
R. P. Brookfield,

Indisputably the New Outstanding Novel

"Changing Winds"

By ST. JOHN ERVINE

The New York Times says—"As a war novel it is worthy to take its place with 'Mr. Britling Sees It Through.' 'Mr. Britling' is a story of war and how it affected the English folk of maturer years. 'Changing Winds' is a story of four young men to whom war came as they were realising the splendid promise of life."

The Montreal Gazette says—"If all the delegates to the approaching Irish Convention would read and digest the unpalatable truths in 'Changing Winds' the Irish question would soon be settled and settled right."

Chief Thompson's Address At Convention Of Canada's Chiefs

Discussed the Duties and the Properties That Combine to Make An Efficient Police Constable—Convention at Quebec This Week

DANIEL THOMPSON, Chief of the Peterborough Police Force, Who Delivered an Address at the Quebec Convention To-day.

The following address on the subject of "A Talk to Police Constables" was presented by Chief Thompson to-day at the annual convention of the Chief Constables' Association of Canada, held in Quebec City.

In the few words I propose addressing to you it is not my intention to define every duty of a police constable but rather to point out some matters which all who desire to become good officers ought constantly to bear in mind, for, by strict attention to them, every man may assuredly raise himself to a high position in the Force, and by neglect of them he is equally sure to occupy a low one.

First of all, let me impress upon you the necessity of absolute obedience to all who are placed in authority over you, and rigid observance of every regulation made for your general conduct. Such obedience and observance I regard as essential to the effectiveness of a Police Force. Obey every order given you by your Superior Officer without a moment's questioning the propriety of it. You are not responsible for the order, but for obedience. In yielding obedience let the humblest member of the Force feel that by good conduct and cheerful submission he may himself rise to be placed in authority to give these orders he is now called on to obey. As to the regulations, a single moment's reflection will teach you that when so many men of different classes and habits are enrolled in one service some rules applicable to all are necessary for the purpose of ensuring uniformity in discipline, action, conduct and appearance, therefore it is that there are regulations exacting sobriety punctuality, cleanliness, and many other matters to which I need not refer.

The slightest disobedience in one begets a bad example to others, and if this bad example is followed by a few it will disorganize and bring discredit upon the whole body.

Avoid Gossiping.

Let me now say something to each Police Constable as to the mode in which your obligations to the public ought to be performed. Depend upon it to become a good and efficient officer you must, when on duty allow nothing but your duty to occupy your thoughts. You must studiously avoid all gossiping, you must not lounge about as though your sole object was to amuse yourself and kill the hours in which the public has a right to your best service, and, during which, constant vigilance and attention to what is passing around you is expected from you. It is this gossiping, lounging habit which sometimes gives rise to the observations that a policeman is never to be found when he is most wanted. More over a man who gives way to such a habit never observes with so much accuracy that which occurs before his eyes, as he who makes it his endeavour to fix his attention upon all that is passing about him. This is a habit not difficult to acquire if you are in earnest, and, when once acquired, you will find the cultivation of it a source of pleasure, and the hours of duty will be much less irksome. I may add, too, that the man who takes no pains to acquire it generlly makes a very bad and inaccurate witness.

Prevention of Crime.

I wish to point out the importance of a steady constant endeavour by your vigilance to prevent crime as much as possible, and not by your negligence tempt persons to commit it, as you do if you fail in your attention to your duty. To my mind, the Constable who keeps his beat free from crime deserves more credit than the man who only counts up the number of convictions he has obtained for offences committed within it. It is true the latter makes more show than the former, but the former is the better officer.

The object of the law is to prevent crime; when many crimes are committed in any particular district one may justly suspect that there has been something defective in the amount of vigilance exercised over it.

Much power is invested in a police constable, and many opportunities are given him to be hard and oppressive, especially to those in his custody. I would advise the Patrolman to avoid hardness and oppression: be firm but not brutal, make only discreet use of your powers. If one person wishes to give another into your custody for felony you are not absolutely bound to arrest, you ought to exercise your own discretion, having regard to the nature of the crime, the surrounding circumstances, and the condition and character of the accused and the accuser.

A constable should be very careful to distinguish between cases of illness and drunkenness; many serious errors have been committed for want of care in this respect.

Much discussion has on various occasions arisen touching the conduct of the police in listening to and repeating statements of accused persons. I will try therefore to point out what I think is the proper course for a Constable to take with regards to such statements.

Obtaining Information.

When a crime has been committed and you are engaged in endeavoring to discover the author of it, there is no objections to you making enquiries of, or putting questions to any person from whom you think you can obtain useful information. It is your duty to discover the criminal if you can, and to do this you must make such enquiries, and if, in the course of them, you should chance to interrogate and to receive answers from a man who turns out to be the criminal, himself, and who inculpates himself by these answers, they are nevertheless admissible in evidence, and may be used against him.

There are no objections to a constable listening to any voluntary statement which a prisoner desires to make, and repeating such statement in evidence; nor are there any objections to his repeating in evidence any conversation he may have heard between the prisoner and any other person. But he ought not, by anything he says or does, invite or encourage an accused person to make any statement without having first cautioned him that he is not bound to say anything tending to incriminate himself, and that anything he may say may be used in evidence against him. Perhaps the best maxim for a constable to bear in mind with respect to an accused person is—keep your eyes and your ears open, and your mouth shut, and by silent watchfulness you will hear all you ought to hear. Never act unfairly to a prisoner by causing him, by words or conduct, to divulge anything. If you do, you will assuredly be severely handled at the trial, and it is not unlikely your evidence will be discounted.

Accuracy Necessary.

In detailing a conversation with an accused person, be sure to state the whole conversation from commencement to the end in the very words used; and in narrating facts, state every fact, whether you think it material or not, for you are not the Judge of its materiality. Tell it in short, as well that which is in favour of the accused as that which is against him, for your desire and anxiety must be to fair and assist the innocent and not convict any man by unfair means, such as suppressing something that may tell in his favour, even though you fell certain of his guilt. Unfairness is sure to bring discredit upon those who are found guilty of it.

If an accused, in a conversation with you, states any circumstances which you have the means of inquiring into, you ought to do so whether those circumstances are in favour or against the accused.

I cannot too strongly recommend every constable, however good he fancies his memory to be, to write down every word, every syllable of every conversation in which an accused has taken part, and of every statement made to him by an accused person, and to have that written memorandum with him at the trial.

The last, but most important duty I would enjoin upon you is, on every occasion "Speak the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth"; let no consideration, no anxiety to appear of importance in the case, no desire to procure a conviction or an acquittal; let no temptation of any sort induce you to swerve one hair's breadth from the truth, the bare, plain, simple truth; never exaggerate, nor in repeating a conversation or a statement, add a tone of colour to it.

Exaggeration is often more dangerous than direct falsehood, for it is something more than the truth, and is more dangerous because it is difficult to detect and separate that which is exaggeration from that which is strictly true, and a man who exaggerates is very apt to be led on to say that which he knows to be false. On the other hand, suppress no part of a conversation or statement, nor any tone or action which accompanies it, for everything you suppress is short of the whole truth.

A Grave Responsibility.

Remember always what reliance is of necessity placed in courts of justice upon the testimony of policemen, and bear constantly in mind that in many cases the fate of an accused person, which is his life or his liberty, depends upon that testimony and seriously reflect how fearful a thing it would be for any person to be convicted and put to death or condemned to penal servitude or imprisonment on false testimony. Remember also, when you are giving evidence, that you are not the person appointed to determine the guilt or innocence of the person on trial, nor have you any right to express an opinion upon the subject. Your duty is a very simple and easy one, namely, to place the facts before the court the responsibility of the verdict. Whether guilty or not guilty rests entirely with the Jury, Judge or Magistrate, and they have a right to expect from you everything within your knowledge to enable them to come to a just conclusion. Resolve, then, on every occasion, to tell the plain "truth" in all things, even though it may for a moment expose you to censure or defeat. The object or expectations of those by whom you are called as a witness, depend upon it. Such censure will be nothing compared to the character you will earn for yourself as a truthful, reliable man, whose word can always be depended upon. I could write a great deal more on the subject I have touched but then my address to you would be too long for its usefulness, which is intended as a guide.

I have only endeavoured in a few friendly sentences to point out to you a line of conduct, the steady adoption of which will enable every man in the police service to feel that he is on the High Road to all that he can desire, having regard to the important and very responsible calling he has selected for himself.

Cheese Congestion At Montreal Causes Drop On Local Board

No Ocean Transportation Available Until Middle of August—3002 Boxes Sold This Morning at 20 7-8 Cents — An Unusually Large Boarding.

SALESMEN HESITATED

CHEESE BOARD FIGURES.

Mid July 1916—2609 boxes at 16 1-2c.

Mid July 1917—3002 boxes at 20 7-8c.

Approximate value of to-day's Board, $53,266.73.

Some of the cheese factories hesitated this morning to accept the price of 20 7-8 cents although they finally dropped their objections when the buyers explained the bearish influence upon this week's market. Mr. Gillespie secured first call at 20 7-8 cents and Mr. Morton followed with the same price. Warsaw, Shearer and one or two other factories refused to sell to either buyers. Mr. Thompson obtained the remnant of the board at the top price and the hold-out factories surrendered.

Mr. Ed. Hawthorne, of Warsaw, said he had refused the two first buyers for the reason that the Montreal price was steady and did not warrant the local decline. At the sale two weeks ago 21 5-16c was the top price. The decline was practically one-half cent a pound.

Mr. Gillespie replied that he had been notified this morning that the warehouses at Montreal were almost full of cheese waiting shipment and this condition affected the market. The cheese had piled up at the port because of the inability to get steamers. This difficulty would likely obtain until the middle of August.

Mr. Morton stated he had received advice from his company and the factory salesmen had no alternative, but to receive this information and sell their cheese. Organization in the dairy industry has not reached the farmers yet.

THE BOARDING

The factories boarded as follows: Keene 110, Warminster 135, Sheaffer 140, Selwyn 175, Villiers 100, Warsaw 200 Westwood 200, Oakdale 110, Missing Link 100, Lakefield 100, Pine Grove 70, Myrtle 200, Ormonde 175, Young's Point 160, Lang 180, North Dummer 90, East Emily 138, Stoney Lake 35, Mt. Pleasant 64, Norwood 213, Fleetwood 183, Killarney 194, Apsley 80. Total 3002.

THE BIDDING.

Mr. Gillespie opened at 20 cents and got first call at 20 7-8 cents, taking Warminster, Selwyn, East Emily, Myrtle, Young's Point, North Dummer Stoney Lake, Apsley, Mr. Pleasant, Missing Link. At the same price Mr. Morton bought Pine Grove Lakefield, Westwood, Villiers, Lang, Fleetwood Keene, Ormonde.

Mr. Thompson took Killarney, Norwood, Oakdale, Warsaw and Shearer.

No Authority Was Given For Use Of Boxes

Secretary of Children's Aid Society Makes Explanation

The Examiner has received the following letter from Mr. Joseph Wearing, Secretary of the Children's Aid Society:

Editor Examiner.

Dear Sir.—It appears to me unfair and unreasonable that you should attack the Children's Aid Society in an editorial without making any inquiries as to the facts of the matter.

There would undoubtedly be no excuse whatever for the Society to discriminate against the Great War Veterans' Association with regard to the loaning of boxes for tag day. But no such discrimination was made. The question of lending the boxes for use last Saturday never came up before the Society at all. If, as a matter of fact, the boxes were used on Saturday, they were used without any authority from the Society, and certainly without any authority from me and without my knowledge.

Yours truly,
JOSEPH WEARING,
Secretary Children's Aid Society.

As far as the Examiner's opinion is concerned Mr. Wearing's explanation does not clear up the matter. The fact remains that after the War Veterans had been refused the use of the boxes because there was a hard and fast rule against lending them, they were used by another organization on Saturday. It is up to the Childrens' Aid Society to find out how the Red Cross Society came into possession of them.

A CENSUS OF LEMONS.

Something like a census of lemon-trees has just been made in Sicily, from which island all the best lemons come. It is stated that there are about 12,000,000 of these fruit trees now growing there, and during the last season the yield was about half a million tons. It used to cost ninepence to bring a box of lemons from Sicily to Liverpool, but now the charge is half a crown.

PRIVATE ERNEST WEGG AFTER THE LACKERSS

Former Member of the 93rd Battalion Writes From France—No Peace Until Huns Are Driven Back Into Germany He Says

AN INTERESTING LETTER

Mrs. Ernest Wegg has received the following interesting letter from her husband, Pte. Ernest Wegg, formerly of the 93rd Battalion and now in France.

Somewhere in France
June 13, 1917.

Dear Wife,—Your letter of June 8th arrived O.K., and was glad to hear you were all jake. I also received several others at the same time.

I suppose you will see by the papers what we have had to go through. We seem to have had the best luck of any. I don't think we have had five of our draft on the casualty lists in two months.

Still the casualty lists are small here to what they have been at other times. I was surprised when I passed over the ground here to see so few dead men. They were few, both our men and Frita's. I think the reason we did not see more was that the artillery bombardment was so intense that they took to the dugouts for shelter, and when the party went along cleaning dug-outs they gave themselves up. There was an awful mob of prisoners marched back to the cages that night.

It was marvelous how soon we had good hard roads, built over the captured country, especially as it was so muddy at the time. He certainly had a "Home sweet home," over there. He must have thought he was there to stay.

Now that he has been driven off his "Gibraltar" of the western front, I think he will have to keep falling back. I hope he never stops till he hits his "Fatherland" and that we get a chance to hit that same "Father land" the way he has been hitting Belgium and France. Then see how soon he'll throw up his hands and shout "Mercy Kamarad." He sees things a lot different when the tables are turned.

I would like to see peace come as badly as anyone, but I would also like to see old Frift bite the dust as he deserves.

It isn't fair to those who have fallen in this war and to those whose homes he has wrecked, if we gave him peace and let him go free.

He should be driven into his own country and his land laid waste and his cities wrecked as he has wrecked these in France and Belgium. Only an eyewitness can appreciate the damage he has done and he should be made to pay, "an eye for an eye" is the only way.

PTE. R. E. WEGG.

But, then again, it is not fair to the men who have been out here for a year and two years and have had their turn and have lost their nerve, as anyone must, who has seen that long in the line, to have to stay here and fight for a bunch of miserable curs who are staying at home and pulling down two and three times the money that the soldier is getting and throwing slurs at the soldier's wife. You see, supposing I am out of the world I still read the papers, and I see Jack Canuck regular and I know how things are going over there. Maybe the reason that more haven't enlisted is that they are afraid some of the soldiers' wives could hold down their jobs better than they can. I am not blaming the married men with families for not enlisting, but there are some without families or families old enough to do for themselves that could come and relieve some of the older men in the line. I am not kicking for myself, as I have only been out here eight months, but some have been over here two years and more.

Well I think I'd better quit before I start using cuss words. It is hard, though, to make things strong enough without something. I didnt mean to make this letter a lecture when I started but as Pat says "them's me sintiments."

Write as often as you can and don't forget that a certain Tommy is a smoker. I remain as ever.

Your loving husband,
ERNIE WEGG.

COMPULSORY SERVICE SHOULD BE ENFORCED

Retiring Masonic Grand Master Says Canada Must Do Its Part

Special to The Examiner:

BELLEVILLE, July 18.—"Compulsory service should be enforced," said M. W. Bro. S. A. Luke, retiring Grand Master of the Masonic Lodge of Canada in the Province, in addressing the Grand Lodge here to-day at its 62nd annual convention. "Let it fall where it may, so that our promise may be fulfilled, that those who have been long on battle fields, of whom the enemy has said, "Canadians, why, they never retreat or surrender, may have a well earned rest, and that we may do our part to bring the war to an end."

Of the Ontario Masonic membership of 68,500, an increase of 2,050 over last year, there is an honour roll of about 12,000 names, and many Masons have been wounded, and the supreme sacrifice has claimed a saddening but inspiring toll of useful lives.

The Grand Lodge is meeting in the Belleville armouries. Mayor Ketcheson, District Deputy Grand Master welcomed the Grand Lodge to the home of R. W. Bro. Col. W. N. Ponton, K.C., and Sir Mackenzie Bowell, the latter former Premier of Canada and now in his 94th year. R. W. Bro. W. H. Day, of Guelph, was appointed Grand Representative for the Grand Lodge of New Jersey.

To Look And Feel Bright in Hot Weather

This is the season when she who would have a lily-white complexion should turn her thoughts to mercolized wax, the firm friend of the summer girl. Nothing so effectually overcomes the soiling effects of sun, wind, dust and dirt. The wax literally absorbs the scorched, discoloured, freckled, withered or coarsened cuticle, bringing forth a brand new skin, clear, soft and girlishly beautiful. It also unclogs the pores, removing blackheads and increasing the skin's breathing capacity. An ounce of mercolised wax, obtainable at any drug store, applied nightly like cold cream, and washed off mornings, will gradually improve the worst complexion.

When depressed by the heat and you want to freshen up for the afternoon or evening, bathe the face in a lotion made by dissolving an ounce of powdered saxolite in a half pint witch hazel. You'll find this more refreshing than an hour's rest. It is fine for smoothing out wrinkles, even the deeper ones.

Former Resident Of Millbrook Is Deceased

The death occurred in Toronto of Pamela Wallace, wife of the late John M. Might, founder of Might Directories, Limited. Mrs. Might was born in Millbrook, 81 years ago, but lived nearly all her married life in Toronto. She was a member of the Anglican church, and three daughters survive her: Mrs. Edgar Turbayne, Calgary, Alta.; Mrs. J. J. Ritchie, and Miss Lillian Might, Toronto.

ANOTHER MURDER MYSTERY IN HAMILTON.

Body of a Man Found in the Bay, Weighted, with Wound in Head, Skull Crushed.

Hamilton, July 17.—Hamilton has another murder mystery. Yesterday morning the body of a man, too decomposed to be identified, was washed up on the bay shore at the Beach at the end of Walkerville avenue. It had been weighted down with an 18-pound weight which was secured around the body by a calf chain. There was a bullet wound through the head and the skull was smashed in. Coroner Hopkins has opened an inquiry. It is believed that the victim was a foreigner, probably an Italian. The discovery of the body was made by the Misses Jessie and Marjorie Mollwraith while they were out canoeing. The police believe that the murder was committed about two months ago. The body is that of a man about five feet seven inches in height, 125 pounds in weight, and somewhere between 25 and 40 years of age. The pockets of the trousers were turned inside out. The blue shirt bears a Chinese laundry mark: I.C.I.H.

PHILIP SIDNEYS OF THESE DAYS.

Forty Men with one Water-bottle, and a Raging Thirst—An Unforgetable Story of the Somme.

Sir Philip Sidney bequeathed to us an immortal tradition of nobility when, stricken upon the field of Zutphen, he refused the cup of water offered to him, and handed it to a wounded soldier with the memorable phrase, "Thy need is greater than mine."

We live in an age which is constantly revealing to us the spiritual successors of that great mirror of chivalry. Captain Oates, when he walked out to his death in the blinding snowstorms raging around the tent of doom in which Captain Scott and his comrades lay, was but living up to that proudly humble motto. An Irish bishop now tells us of four Philip Sidneys out in the first line trench on the Somme, raging with thirst and cut off by shell-fire from the rest of our line. Thirty-nine of them had not a drop of water. Their officer produced his own water bottle and, handing it around, said, "Boys, this has to be divided among the forty of us." and when the forty-th came to drink, there was far more left for him than any of the others had drunk.

NO REFUGE FOR SLACKERS.

Aliens in the United States Other Than Teutons Subject to Draft.

WASHINGTON, July 17. — Alien "slackers," except Germans and those specifically exempted by treaties may be drafted into the service of the United States army. A resolution to accomplish this was prepared to-day by Senator Chamberlain, chairman of the Senate Military Committee.

GROCERS WIN TWO FROM THE PRINTERS

Last night the old-time rivals, the Printers and Grocers met in a hard fought league match at the Water Street Alleys. The Printers won the first game by 57 pins. The Grocers winning the second game by 16 pins and the third game by 74 pins. By winning two games the Grocers are now in second place in the league standing. Wilson and Myland were the "big" rollers for the Printers with a 448 and 424 total; while Ross and Gillespie topped the Grocers with 438 and 413 totals. Wilson for the Printers had high single of 194. WHAT IS IT? The sugar "bowl" or alley "bowl."

Judging from the remarks of the excited contestants last night at the Water Street Alleys, it is difficult to say whether the men were talking about filling up their sugar bowls or filling their averages. The league prizes amongst others include a sack of the famous Lantic Sugar for each man on the winning team, so that Jake Solomon's slogan is "the man who bowls the finest ball gets the finest sugar." The Grocers were quite at home in their league games, one wag remarking, "Why shouldn't they be well up in the sugar game."

Last night's scores were as follows:

THE GREY LOAF

White Flour Only Known to the Present Generation

We mourn the death of the white loaf, says an English exchange. We look with disfavour upon its grey successor, and we think of this dingy edible as something new—"owing to the war." We have forgotten that with our grandfathers a quite white loaf was a rarity.

English millers had the shock of their lives when they discovered the whiteness of foreign flour. Nothing could be produced by our mills to satisfy the baker, who in turn had to please his customers with white bread. Imports of flour increased alarmingly, and all because the British public were enamoured of white bread.

Rumours of wonderful machinery producing white flour in Buda Pesth caused English millers to visit Austria-Hungary. The result of this deputation was that in 1878 the first complete plant to reduce wheat to white flour was installed in Bilston. So started the British manufacture of white bread.

Exit German Magnet Steel

One of the lines in which the German magneto makers formerly held an important advantage was in the special quality of the steel used for the magnets. Consequently they were able to create something like a monopoly in magnet steel not only for magnetos but for electrical instruments, and they supplied all parts of the world, so great was the demand for German magnet steel. The British steel makers are now able confidently to announce that they are producing better magnet steel than the former German product, thanks to the metallurgical researches of the war years, and therefore this important industry is now taken from the Germans.

TEN DOLLARS FOR MATCH

Heavy Fine Imposed for Munition Worker's Carelessness

A match in his waistcoat pocket cost a munition worker a fine of ten dollars at a North Midland police court. The fine would have been heavier but for the fact that defendant had several sons in the Army, one of whom has gained a commission. His explanation was that as it was a cold day he had put on an extra waistcoat and did not know that the match was there.

CHILDREN IN WAKE OF GERMAN RETREAT

Survivors in French Villages, Mutilated and Dumb Present a Picture of Hun Savagery

The French children found in the villages of Northern France evacuated by the Germans under pressure of the British and French offensives present a picture of the savagery of modern warfare as characteristic as the Somme forest, shattered and broken by months of shell fire. Many of these children are orphans, without home or relatives. Many have been grievously wounded. Most of them suffer from a peculiar species of shell shock, which afflicts them generally with a sort of tremor not unlike St. Vitus's dance. They have had life and death, horrors human and inhuman, revealed to them in guises so terrible that they never will be normal again. All are underfed and frail from confinement in cellars. Cut off suddenly from relatives and friends, perhaps two years ago or more, they have continued to live within a few hundred yards of the front lines, listening always to the thud of shells and the crash of explosives, until their idea of heaven is "a place that is very quiet."

Shepherded by Entente

The condition of peasant men and women who have been living under the shadow of the invader through these long months and years has been bad enough, but the condition of the half-starved, wounded, mentally deranged little children has been far worse. After the German retreat all the children were collected and shepherded by the first Entente troops that reached the newly occupied areas. Everything that can be done to cure and care for them is now being done, constituting one of the most important immediate tasks of the French committees on reconstruction. The first step was to remove them well behind the front areas. Those who were orphans were taken far away from the sight and sound of shells, many of them to the south of France. The mildest cases were there put under the care of farm mothers. The more serious cases must, of course, be kept under close medical supervision in special institutions. One French organization has a hospital with 400 child patients, all under twelve years. Most of them are wounded. Some have lost legs or arms, others their sight; others are suffering from brain fever or a puzzling anaemia under which they rapidly waste away.

"Victims of Ruthlessness"

"They are the victims of the ruthlessness of modern warfare," said the head of the hospital, a French woman wearing the uniform of the French Red Cross. "There is no better argument against war than to see these mutilated little victims, who never will play or enjoy life as other children do. They are mere shadows of childhood. It is difficult to make them talk, and they tremble and start at any noise or sudden movement." One patient, a five-year-old boy, who had been made dumb by shell shock, showed no improvement until after he had been in the hospital for seven weeks. Then one day he opened his eyes after a long sleep and said to the nurse with a twisted smile: "It is—very—quiet here; I—like—it."

CANADA'S COAL SUPPLY

Railroad Men Allege Serious Conditions Under Demurrage Rules

Judging from the opposition before the Board of Railway Commissioners to the proposed revision of the car demurrage rules, applicable to Canada, it is evident, railroad men stated, that the consignees of traffic coming from points in the United States, particularly coal, do not realise how acute is the situation in car supply and transportation. The car statistics on the railroads which are members of the American Railway Association, showed an increasing shortage of cars, and with the United States down to the war work in earnest the transportation problems become more pressing and the car shortage more intense.

Canada's coal supply is entirely dependent upon the car supply. One railway official stated that his road could not get a pound of coal unless they sent their own cars for it. With the demand increasing in their own territory it is only natural to expect that the United States railroads confine their cars to their own country where they state that they are able to get better service out of them than by allowing them to come into Canada, where the demurrage rules are such as to reduce rather than increase car efficiency. The Canadian rules were framed in the year 1906. They may have suited the conditions which prevailed at that time, but they are undoubtedly not suited to meet war conditions, railroad men declare.

No. 10 DOWNING STREET

No. 10 Downing Street. The very address raises a host of memories of illustrious names to the mind of every British subject, in whatsoever corner of the Empire he may live. For here lived the men who, as Prime Ministers of Britain, have made the history of the Empire. Great name after great name, in rapid succession, follow one another through the mind, even as one stands upon the doorstep. In the great abbey a few hundred yards away they are resting now; but their deeds, even more than those white, life-like statues, keep alive their names in history.

As the great door swings open, and the visitor is conducted down the long corridor, the door of the Cabinet-room is passed. Should the Cabinet not be sitting, he may be fortunate enough to catch a glimpse of the stately panelled room, and the ghosts of the great dead will hover around him. Should it be sitting he must pass quickly, for there is an official seated before the door, at a discreet distance, whose duty it is to see that no echoes of the proceedings within reach the outside world.

Downstairs is the Prime Minister's official residence, which, from year to year, is unchanged, through all the changes of ministeries. Upstairs is his home.

Czar Played the Traitor

Gen. Brussiloff called the Associated Press correspondents to his side when at the height of his campaign in Galicia during the autumn of 1916, and told them that he was going on to Lemberg and beyond. He spoke enthusiastically of the success that lay before his victorious armies. Then one day the war news from Petrograd was less encouraging. Days upon days followed, filled with ominous silence. Finally winter set in.

The next news of importance to come from Russia was the startling word of the revolution. We learned then why Brussiloff had not reached Lemberg. We discovered that his hand had been stayed by a traitorous czar, eager to save his throne, and that his people had revolted successfully, leading to his overthrow.

SAYS MORALE OF FRENCHMEN IS EXCELLENT

Seen in Initiative in Face of Enemy, Writer Tells.

NOT JADED AFTER THREE YEARS.

Spirit of Attack Increases, Rather, Among Soldiers—Thrilling Raids on Trenches Described.

From the French Front.—If the "morale" of troops may be based on the initiative they display in face of the nemy, then that of the French soldiers at all points of the front must be regarded as excellent. Three years of the severest kind of warfare has not jaded them. In fact, the spirit of attack has, if anythig, increased among them.

The recruits of the younger classes learn quickly to profit from the experience of their comrades who have become veterans and past masters in the art of furnishing surprises to the enemy, and after their incorporation into the fighting units in the trenches, where they rapidly acquire the routine of continual watchfulness, they lose no time in demonstrating their desire to carry out some act of individual daring.

Living among them, as the writer has done throughout the great operations of the Somme, in the Argonne, on the Aisne, in Champagne, in Alsace and around Verdun, one acquires an unbounded admiration for the unceasing activity and virility of the French soldiers of all branches of the service. Even during the intervals between great attacks and battles, when it would be expected they would be only too eager to seek repose and relaxation from the hardships and perils of trench life, there are always to be found daring men among them who voluntarily go out towards the German lines in search of adventure, always with the hope of bringing back some prisoners or distributing the enemy's plans.

ORGANIZING TRENCH RAIDS.

One outlet for their overflowing activity is the organiation of trench raids in which only a few men compose the attacking force. In these minor affairs, whose effect on the general situation at the front is more important than at first would appear, since they harry the enemy and keep him constantly guessing, and worrying as to what may follow, the French soldiers have become expert, and they rarely return to their trenches without some prisoners and some valuable information as to conditions in the opposing lines.

The commander of the army is not consulted as to the carrying out of these raids. Each colonel of the regiment has the final word as to whether his men shall take the risk, and the colonels take good care not to discourage their men from displaying their individuality.

The problem of overcoming the net work of barbed wire protecting the front lines of the enemy's position presented difficulties at the beginning of the campaign, but artillery has now acquired the mastery of that obstacle, and as a consequence the enemy no longer finds himself in security behind it. All the French colonel wants to know, when a raid is about to be undertaken, is the hour at which it is intended to start. A few minutes suffices to make penetration by resolute infantrymen possible. Sudden outbreaks of artillery fire are so frequent that the enemy often pays no more attention to them than to return some shells, while the troops manning his front trenches seek shelter in their dugouts until the shower of steel has stopped.

UNCERTAINTY ENEMY'S UNDOING.

The enemy's uncertainty as to what is to happen frequently leads to his undoing, for before he has made up his mind that the French guns have decided to cease firing, and that it is safe to come out from the shelters again he finds French soldiers leaping into the trenches, and throwing grenades into the mouths of the dugouts while calling on their occupants to surrender. Refusal or hesitation means a further volley of grenades and almost certain severe injury or death to those inside. Therefore they shout "Kamarade!" throw down their arms and come out to be chased before their captors back through the broken net work of barbed wire to the French lines.

In one division the regiments made a speciality of surprise trench raids and acquired almost unbelievable skill in carrying them out almost without loss to themselves. One regiment, in the course of the last month, had to its credit ten such raids, as a result of which, besides killing many enemies, they captured fifty-three German prisoners, without the loss of a single Frenchman.

The French and German lines are so close that a raid rarely takes more thn ten minutes—just the time to race across the open, make the haul of prisoners and race back with them again. Night or day makes no difference—the main idea is to go over the top and get back to the French lines with the prisoners after causing as much damage as possible before the Germans have time to throw in reinforcements to their front trench.

W. O. W. MOONLIGHT ANOTHER SUCCESS

Although the weather was dull there was a fine crowd on board the "Stony Lake" last night. Everyone present had a real good time, the dancing section especially, while Tucker's Orchestra gave them no let up until they returned to George street wharf, at 11 o'clock. The trip was a great success in every way, and the coffers of the Society will be enriched handsomely. All the members worked hard and the passengers were well supplied with refreshments etc., which made it an evening of real pleasure.

Peterboro' Women To Attend Thrift Convention On Mon.

Peterborough has been asked to send delegates to the womens' convention to be held in Convocation Hall, Toronto, on Monday, July 23rd, at which a big provincial wide campaign for thrift and economy will be inaugurated. It will be addressed by the Food Controller, Hon. Mr. Hanna, Premier Hearst and Mrs. Buchanan. Members of the local branch of the Speakers' Patriotic League are meeting this afternoon in Mr. G. A. Gillespie's office to nominate three Peterborough women to attend this convention. On Tuesday, July 24th, meetings will be held all day, at which the details of this movement will be outlined.

The prevention of food wastage, and the universal practice of thrift and economy will be urged up and down the province. "To save food is as important as to produce it," is one of the slogans, and to obtain the fullest results it is realized that this appeal must be made directly to the women of the province.

THE RUIN.

At the beginning of the war the British Empire was expected by good judges to spend 1000 million pounds. We have already spent nearly four times that sum. The figures are too vast for the ordinary mind to grasp, but we can realise that our army, beginning at 150,000, has increased to five millions.

Here, however, is a series of figures of a quite unusual character, presenting a picture in statistics of what remains to be done when the war ends. It is the tale of havoc wrought in 790 little communes in France from which the Germans had been hurled back at the end of 30 months' fighting. The following figures show the amount of material destroyed or rendered useless in these once happy places. The total masonry destroyed is reckoned at 4,696,000 cubic yards; the lime is put down at 297,000 tons, there were 548,000,000 bricks, 91,000,000 tiles, and 32,700,000 slates, and the other materials are given in the following total of cubic yards:

Stone, 2,080,000; sand, 1,345,500; copper-work 513,500; timber, 591,500; joinery, 195,000.

And there remains four times as much land and communes still to be regained before we can measure the full damage in France alone!

Eggo Baking Powder News

Mr. A. McIntosh, the live business representative of Eggo Baking Powder, is in the city for another two weeks' advertising campaign, the revised prices for which appears in another column to-day. Mr. McIntosh is a young man who sits very little on the seat of his trousers, but does a whole lot of business that keeps his feet moving pretty actively. Since his last business trip to Peterborough he has covered Canada in the interests of Eggo, and not only in this city, but all over, has helped to make his baking powder one of the best helpers a housewife can have. His real salesmanship was demonstrated lately when he made a record-breaking shipment into Quebec of two car loads of Eggo in thirty days.

TAYLOR.—At 438 Roger street, Peterborough, suddenly on Monday July 16th, 1917, Mrs. John Taylor. The funeral will take place from the residence of her son, Mr. Samuel Taylor, 438 Roger street on Thursday, July 19th, 1917 at 2.30 o'clock p.m. and proceed to the Little Lake cemetery for interment.

It was the first week that the Smiths, who had fallen heir to considerable property, had been in their new home. Mrs. Smith was giving a dinner party, with the fond hope that from this occasion she would be fairly launched in society. "Lena," said Mrs. Smith to her new cook, "be sure to mash the peas thoroughly to night." What ma'am?" exclaimed the amazed cook. "Mash the peas?" "Yes, that is what I said, Lena mash the peas," repeated the mistress. "It makes Mr. Smith very nervous at dinner to have them roll off his knife."

The judge stopped to have a word with the colored man-of-all-work, and asked if he went to church.

"Yessuh, Ah goes to church every Sunday," he said.

"Are you a member?"

"Yessuh."

"What church?"

"Presspeteeryn."

"Do you believe in the doctrine of election?"

"Yessuh."

"Do you believe I am elected to be saved?"

"Law, judge, Ah, didn' even know you was a candidate."—Argonaut.

THE POWER IN A FARTHING.

We are all being urged to save, and rich and poor are awake to the value of interest.

Interest is of two kinds. Simple interest is paid on the principal alone, but in compound interest the interest, instead of being paid, is added to the principal, and in the following year interest is paid on the united sum—that is to say, interest is paid on interest as well as on capital.

At 5 per cent. simple interest a sum of money will double itself in 20 years, but at compound interest it takes less than 15 years to double. In a hundred years a sovereign at 5 per cent. interest grows to £6, but at compound interest in the same time it becomes more than £131. But suppose a farthing had been put away at the beginning of the Christian era and allowed to accumulate at 5 per cent. compound interest, the sum to the end of the eighteenth century is roughly, 1,473,903 million million million million million pounds, or 1,473,903 followed by thirty noughts. The interest in so vast a sum would be increasing at the rate of millions a second, and all the wealth of the world could not pay it for an hour.

No Trouble To Remove Superfluous Hair

(Toilet Tips)

It is an easy matter to rid the skin of objectionable hair or fuss, if you proceed as follows: Mix a paste with some water and a little powdered delatone, apply to hairy surface and in 2 or 3 minutes rub off, wash the skin and the hairs are gone. This method of banishing hairy growths is painless and does not mar the skin, but to avoid disappointment, be certain to get real delatone.

Amendment Of New Army Law Threatened In The United States

Will Pass New Legislation to Force a More Equitable Allotment of Troops—Burden of Draft is Placed on the North —Delay in the "Drawings" Predicted as Controversy Begins.

MAY APPEAL TO COURTS

WASHINGTON, D.C., July 19.—So serious is the opposition to the method by which the War Department, acting in conjunction with the Census Bureau, has determined the quotas of young men for the National Army under the Selective Draft Law that unless the figures are changed Congress will take a more equitable allotment of troops.

Unless the War Department eliminates aliens in computing the population of the communities upon which the quotas of troops are to be based, Congress is expected to amend the law so that all aliens, except subjects of the Central Powers, shall be made eligible for the draft just the same as citizens of the United States. Senator Chamberlain, of Oregon, chairman of the Military Affairs Committee, yesterday prepared a resolution to that effect, which he will introduce to-day.

TWO IRREGULARITIES ALLEGED.

Two alleged inequalities in the apportionment of troops are the chief causes of the opposition in Congress and throughout the country, and each bears a direct relation to the other. It is now apparent from figures obtained from the Census Bureau by Senators and Representatives that the bureau, in computing the quotas, disregarded the estimates based on normal increases in population since the census of 1910. The census officials took into consideration only the number of young men who registered in each community in compliance with the draft law.

Thus an industrial community where the number of young men of military age is out of proportion to the rest of the inhabitants finds itself with an estimated population greatly in excess of its actual population, and, vice versa, communities which have become depopulated of their young men find themselves with a population much less than the actual figures.

NEW APPEAL TO MR. BAKER.

Represenetative Roscoe McCulloch, of Canton, Ohio, presented to Mr. Baker, Secretary of War, a brief in which he gave figures to back up his charge that the method of allotment adopted by the War Department had operated in almost every instance to increase the quotas of the Northern States out of all proportion to their populations and to decrease the normal quotas of the Southern States.

Closely related to that situation is the problem of the alien of military age, who under the law was required to register just the same as a citizen of the United States. In figuring the draft quotas the War Department included those aliens in the population estimates, but under the terms of the law as it now stands they are not subject to draft. That, of course, means that communities with large alien populations will be called upon to furnish numbers of men for the draft army out of all proportion to the actual number of eligibles.

States like New York, where there is a large alien population, will be seriously affected. The only States that will escape the inequality are in the South, where there are few great industrial centres and the alien population is negligible.

MAY RESORT TO COURTS.

The law specifically states that the quotas shall be in proportion to the population of the States. There are hints that unless the inequality is removed the courts may be resorted to in an effort to prove that the War Department, in failing to take into consideration actual census estimates, has disobeyed the law and made the draft void.

Important conferences were held yesterday by Mr. Baker and high army officers. It is expected that President Wilson will take a stand in the matter within a few days.

Meantime it begins to look as if the drawing of men under the draft law will not take place this week, as had been expected. Time will be necessary to straighten out the tangle into which the War Department and the Census Bureau have thrown the entire draft machinery.

PRINCE EITEL, CABBAGE EATER AND FURNITURE THIEF, BLEW UP CHATEAU HE PILLAGED

Andre Chevalier, special correspondent of the Intransigeant at the French front, gives a few side lights on the life of Prince Eitel Friedrich.

During his sojourn at Avricourt, in the Oise, the Kaiser's son resided at the chateau of Comte Bainy d'Avricourt. In the moments when he was not hiding his ponderous form in a shellproof dugout communicating with the grounds of the chateau by a subterranean passage this "fat, red faced man with a huge paunch consumed quantities of cabbage."

"He lived a quiet life," adds Mr. Chevalier, "and was troubled once only by a visit from his blustering father.

"In his solitary walks across the country the Prince's only companions were melancholy and a dog.

"Sometimes he would take a spade and stolidly turn the ground, perhaps in the hope of finding buried treasure to add to the waggon loads of furniture he already had sent far from the dangers of bombardment.

"It was an atavism, no doubt, or mayhap a precautionary measure, for some months after, when the princely furniture mover left the chateau, it blew up, as if by mere chance, with what was allowed to remain there.

"This was the Prince's grateful method of paying his bill, and, Mr. Dubois, the proprietor of a chateau in the neighbourhood of Compiegne, which was methodically pillaged by the Kaiser's son, has laid a formal charge of theft with the French authorities against Prince Eitel."

RAIN SERIOUSLY DELAYS HAYING

There were almost continuous rains over most of Ontario during the greater part of last week, according to the reports received by the Department of Agriculture. In some cases low lands were flooded and in all parts of the province haying has been seriously interfered with. A good deal of clover hay has been more or less injured, but if favorable weather prevails this week later cuttings will be saved in good condition. Corn has been held back by wet and cold weather, and the weeds have secured a start in all hoe crops. Some of grain crops have been beaten down by the rain, but these are expected to revive in most cases. Early potatoes promise well and will be generally on the market very shortly.

By never changing its standard of high quality Salada has won the admiration of tea lovers and the faith of economizing people throughout America.

Wheat Takes Another Drop

Flour is Up Fifty Cents—The Cattle Market

The sharp advance in cash wheat values has sent flour again on the upgrade. Both Manitoba and Ontario flour was yesterday advanced 50 cents per barrel. The demand for cash wheat for export has suddenly become urgent, and values are advancing. July wheat at Chicago jumped up to $2.20 yesterday, an advance of 10 cents above Tuesday's close. The October wheat option at Winnipeg, from being stationary for several days, suddenly advanced 12 cents to-day to $2.12. No. 1 northern spot at Winnipeg is quoted at $2.42 yesterday, two cents above Tuesday. Toronto cash quotations, track, lake ports, are seven cents up.

Manitoba wheat — No. 1 Northern, lake ports, $2.03 1-2, nominal; No. 2 northern, $2.00 1-2.

Manitoba oats — No. 2, 88 1-4c, track, bay ports.

American corn — $2.08, nominal, track, Toronto.

Ontario oats — No. 2 white, not quoted.

Mill feed — Car lots, delivered, Montreal, shorts $40 to $41; bran, $35; feed flour, per bag, $3.25; middlings, $44 to $45.

Hay—Baled, track, Toronto, car lots, No. 2, $12 to $12.50; mixed, $9 to $11; straw, $9.

Cattle Markets.

Union Stock Yards — Receipts 61 cars, with 598 cattle, 345 calves, 1,614 hogs, and 675 sheep and lambs.

Strong active market for choice cattle. Best heavy steers sold up to $12, the highest for this week. There was a firmer and better feeling all round. With plenty of pasture, there is a better demand for good stockers and feeders at a little firmer prices for the right kind.

Lambs a shade firmer.

Calves strong.

Hogs steady to firm, $15.75 fed and watered generally quoted, but a few lots selling at $16.

Resolution Will Not Go To The Senate

Sir Robert Borden Announces Abandonment of Motion to Prolong Parliament's Life—Consequently Progress of Resolution is Stayed—Need of Farm Labour Debated

UNANIMITY LACKING

OTTAWA, July 19.—Sir Robert Borden announced in the Commons yesterday afternoon that in view of the fact that Tuesday night's vote upon the resolution to extend the life of Parliament revealing a lack of unanimity the Government would not take any further action with regard to the resolution.

"The House will have noticed," he said, "that Tuesday night I did not make any motion for the sending of the resolution on to the Upper House for concurrent action. This was due to the reasons which I set forth when I introduced the measure, namely, that I should not press it unless it was received with practical unanimity in the House. The result of the vote showed something very far short of even practical unanimity. Under the circumstances, and having regard to the course laid down, I merely desire to communicate to the House what must be apparent to all. Namely, that the Government does not intend to take any further action on the question, even though the resolution carried in the House."

Hon. Dr. Pugsley and a large number of Liberal members loudly applauded.

OUTLOOK FOR FARM LAMOUR.

J. G. Turriff, Assiniboia, moved the adjournment of the House to discuss the question of farm labour. Mr. Turriff read reports from the West to show how urgent was the need of help.

Sir Robert Borden stated that conferences of all interests had already been held at which the question had been seriously canvassed. Efforts were being made also to secure the co-operation of the United States authorities. Altogether Sir Robert said the outlook was hopeful.

Mr. Robb, of Huntingdon, referred to a statement contained in an article read by Mr. Turriff to the effect that French Canadians would not work out west in retaliation for the stand taken by western members on conscription.

"That statement," said Mr. Robb, "is in keeping with other misrepresentations against the Province of Quebec which have been wasting paper and ink for some time back." As a matter of fact Mr. Robb said that farm hands could not be secured in Quebec though, unless from $2.50 to $3.00 a day was offered. It was a libel on the Province of Quebec to say that the people there would not work because of conscription. Labour in all industries everywhere was very scarce, and that did not only apply to the west.

Canada Seeks Loan From U.S.

Sir Thos. White in Washington Negotiating With Officials—Trade Balance in Favour of the United States

NEW YORK, July 17.—A special despatch from Washington to the Tribune this (Wednesday) morning, says:

The general financial situation between Canada and the United States growing out of the commercial relations between the two countries was discussed at a conference between the Secretary of the Treasury and Sir Thomas White, the Canadian Minister of Finance, to-day. The question of a large loan to the Canadian Government is understood to have been taken up at this conference.

Speaking of the commercial relations between the two countries, Sir Thomas White called attention to the fact Canada was among America's best customers, her purchases from the United States during the ten months ended with April 30 being valued at $502,209,543, while her sales to this country during the same period were valued at $288,829,775, leaving a balance of trade gainst the Dominion of $365,377,768.

This unfavorable trade balance was redressed to a considerale extent, declred Sir Thomas, by the Canadian orrowings in New York, by the sale of Canadian securities, as well as by Canada's favorable trade balance with Europen countries.

Since the entry of the United States into the war, said the Minister, Canadian borrowing in New York has ceased because the Liberty Loan was before the public and had of course, the right of way over all other issues. It would now seem, the Canadian Minister declared, that Canada can only continue to purchase in such large measure from the United States provided a reasonable degree of borrowing is allowed her Governments and municipalities in the United States.

Until quite recently exchange has been normal between the two countries, but latterly it has gone slightly adverse to Canada. The reason is that during April, May and June Canadian excesses of imports from the United States have more than proportionately increased. For April and May the excess was more than double what it was for April and May, 1916. The situation could be readily remedied by a loan or loans in the United States, the Minister said.

"The Postmaster's Daughter"

By LOUIS TRACY

Robinson was nearly struck dumb, and his fingers fumbled badly but he managed to exhibit two hitches.

"Ah, thanks," said Winter, and was off in a jiffy.

From the window of a darkened room Robinson watched the erect, bucy figure of the detective until it was merged in the mists of night.

"Well, I'm ——," he exclaimed bitterly.

"John, what are you swearing about?" demanded his wife from the kitchen.

"Something I heard to-day," answered her husband. "There was a chap of my name, John P. Robinson, an' he said down in Judee they didn't know everything. And, by gum, he was right. They knew mighty little about London 'tecs, I'm thinking. But hold on. Surely——"

He bustled into his coat, and hastened to The Hollies. No, neither Mr. Grant nor Mr. Hart had spoken to a soul about the knot. Nor did Bates. Of course, Robinson did not venture to describe Winter. Finally, he put the incident aside as a clear case of thought-reading.

CHAPTER XV.
A MATTER OF HEREDITY.

Shortly before noon on Monday occurred two events destined to assume a paramount importance in the affair which was wringing the withers of Steynholme. As in the histories of both men and nations, these first steps in great developments began quietly enough. For one thing, Furneaux returned to the village. For another, the London telegraphist who expected the day to prove practically a blank, was reading a newspaper, when the telegraph instrument clicked the local call.

Doris was checking and distributing the stock of stamps which had arrived this morning; her father was counting the mail bags in a small annex to the main room, the Knoleworth office having acquired a habit of making up shortages by docking the country branches. No member of the public happened to be present. The girl could have heard what the Morse code was tapping forth, had she chosen, but she had trained herself to disregard the telegraph when occupied on other work.

Suddenly, however, the telegraphist's pencil paused.

"Hello!" he said. "Theodore Siddle! That is the chemist opposite, is it not?"

"Yes," said Doris, suspending her calculations at the mention of the name.

"Well, his mother is dead."

"Dead?" she echoed vacantly. Somehow, it had never dawned on her that the chemist might possess relatives in some part of the country.

"That's what it says," went on the other. "'Regret inform you your mother died this morning. Superintendent, Horton Asylum.'"

"In an asylum, too," said the girl, speaking at random.

"Yes. Horton is the place for epileptic lunatics, near Epsom, you know."

"I didn't know. Does it mean that —that she was an epileptic lunatic?"

"So I should imagine, from the wording. If a nurse or a matron, they'd surely describe her as such."

"I suppose we ought not to discuss Mr. Siddle's telegram," said Doris, after a pause.

"Well, no. But where's the harm. I wouldn't have yelled out the news if we three weren't alone. Where's that boy?"

"Gone to his dinner. Father will take it. By the way say nothing to him as to the contents. Would you mind calling him?"

Doris hurried swiftly to the sitting-room and thence up stairs. The telegraphist explained the absence of a messenger, so Mr. Martin delivered the telegram in person.

Crossing the street, he detected a dead bee. He picked it up, horrified at the thought that the Isle of Wight disease might have reached Sussex. So it was an absent minded postmaster who handed the telegram over Siddle's counter, inquiring laconically: "Is there any answer?"

Siddle opened the buff envelope, and read. He glanced sharply at Martin.

"No," he said. "What's wrong with that bee?"

"I don't know. I have my doubts. When I have a moment to spare I'll put it under a microscope."

Siddle examined the telegram again —the handwriting was that beloved of Civil Service Commissioners. Unquestionably it was not Doris's. No sooner had his friend gone off still intent on the dead insect, than Siddle followed. He knew that the bee would undergo scientific scrutiny at once, so gave Martin just enough time to dive into the sitting room before entering the post office.

"Did you receive this telegram a few minutes ago?" he inquired.

The young man became severely official.

"Which telegram?" he said stiffly.

"This one," and Siddle gave him the written message.

"Yes," was the answer.

"Excuse me, but—er—are its contents known to you only?"

"What do you mean, sir? It would cost me my berth if I divulged a word of it to anyone."

"I'm sorry. Pray don't take offense. I—I'm anxious that my friends —Mr. and Miss Martin, should not hear of it. That is what I have in mind."

The telegraphist cooled down.

"You may be quite sure that neither they nor any other person in Steynholme will ever see the duplicate," h said confidentially. "I make up a package containing duplicates each evening, and it is sent to headquarters. If it will please you, I'll lock the copy now in my desk."

"That is exceedingly good of you," said Siddle gratefully. "You, as a Londoner, will understand that such a telegram from—er—Horton is not the sort of a thing one would like to become known even in the most limited circle."

"You can depend on me, sir."

Siddle hastened back to his shop. The telegraphist looked after him.

"Queer!" he mused. "Miss Doris guessed him at once. Phi-ew, I must be careful! This village contains surprises."

Doris, watching from an upper room, saw the visitor and timed him. She imagined he had despatched an answer. Being a woman, she sought enlightenment a few minutes later.

"Mr. Siddle came in," she said tentatively.

"Yes," said the specialist, smiling. "And I agree with you, Miss Martin. We must not talk about telegrams, even among ourselves, unless it is necessary departmentally."

Doris was silenced, but she read the riddle correctly. The chemist was particularly anxious that no Steynholm resident should be made aware of his mother's death. She wondered why.

She was enlightened when Furneaux paid a call about tea time. She took him into the garden. The lawn at The Hollies was empty.

"Well you entertained an acquaintance yesterday?" he began.

"Yes. Am I to tell you what happened?"

"Not a great deal, I imagine," he said with a puzzling laugh.

"No, but I annoyed him, as Mr. ——"

"No names!" broke in the detective hastily. "Names, especially modern ones, destroy romance. Even the Georgian method of using initials, or leaving out vowels, lend an air of intrigue to the veriest balderdash."

"But no one can overhear us," was the somewhat surprised comment.

"How true!" said Furneaux. "Pardon me, Miss Martin. Tell the story in your own way."

Doris had a good memory. She was invariably letter-perfect in a play after a couple of rehearsals, and could prompt others if they faltered. The detective listened in silence while she repeated the conversation between Siddle and herself. He took no notes. In fact he hardly ever did make any record in a case unless it was essential to prove the exact words of a suspected person.

"Good!" he said, when she had finished. "That sounds like the complete text."

"I don't think that I have left out anything of importance—that is, if a single word of it is important."

"Oh, heaps," he assured her. It's even better than I dared hope. Can you tell me if Siddle's mother is dead yet?"

The question found Doris so thoroughly unprepared that she blurted out:

"Have you had a telegram, too, then?"

"No. But Siddle has had one, eh? Don't be vexed. I'm not tricking you into revealing post office secrets. I knew she was dying, and when I saw your father take a message to the chemist's shop I simply made an accurate guess....Now, I'm going to scare you, purposely and of malice aforethought, because I want you to be a good little girl, and obey orders. Mrs. Siddle, senior, now happily deceased, was an epileptic lunatic of a peculiarly dangerous type. She suffered from what is classed by the doctors as furor epilepticus, a form of spasmodic insanity not inconsistent with a high degree of bodily vigour, and long periods of apparently complete mental saneness. Now, if I were not speaking to one who has shared her father's studies in bee-life, I would not introduce the subject of heredity. But you know, Miss Martin, that such racial characteristics are transmitted, or transmissible, I should say, by sex opposites. Thus, an epileptic mother is more likely to give her taint to a son than to a daughter....Yes, I mean all that, and more," he went on, seeing the look of horror, not unmixed with fear, in Doris's eyes. "There must be no more irritating of Siddle, or playing on his feelings—by you, at any rate. Treat him gently. If he insists on making love to you be as firm as you like in a non-committal way. I mean by that an entire absence on your part of any suggestion that you are repulsing him because of a real or supposed preference for any other man."

"Do you want me to believe that he is liable to attack me?" demanded the girl, her naturally courageous spirit coming to her aid.

"I do," said Furneaux, speaking with marked earnestness.

"Yet you ask me to endure his company if he chooses to force himself on me?"

"But it may be a few years?"

"No. That is not to be thought of. Leave it to me to devise a way. Besides you need not allow him so many opportunities that the strain would become unbearable. You are busy, owing to the certain increase of work brought about by the murder. Your time will be greatly occupied. But don't render him morbidly suspicious. For instance, no more dinners at The Hollies. No more gadding about by night, if you hear weird noises on the other side of the river. And you must absolutely deny yourself the pleasurable excitement of Mr. Grant's company."

"You are carrying a warning to an extreme limit."

"Exactly."

"And am I to keep this knowledge to myself?"

"In whom would you confide?"

"My father, of course."

"I know you better," and the detective's voice took on a profoundly serious note. "Your father would never admit that what he knows to be true of bees is equally true of humanity. You can trust the police to keep a pretty sharp eye on Siddle, of course, but the present is a strenuous period, both for us and for people with maniacal tendencies, so accidents may happen."

"You have distressed me immeasurably," said the girl, striving to pierce the mask of that inscrutable face.

"I meant to," answered Furneaux quietly. "No half measures for me. I've looked up the asylum record of Mrs. Siddle, senior, and it is not cake reading."

"There was a Mrs. Siddle, junior, then?"

"A Mrs. Theodore Siddle, if one adopts the conventional usage. Yes. She died last month."

"Last month!" gasped Doris, feeling vaguely that she was moving in a maze of deceit and subterfuge.

"On May 25th, to be precise. She lived apart from her husband. I have reason to believe that she feared him."

"Yet——"

She hesitated, hardly able to put her jumbled thoughts into words.

War Time Economy

COCOA versus TEA AND COFFEE

THE war is being fought in the kitchens of Canada, just as truly as it is in the trenches of France.

The housewife that is genuinely anxious to help the cause of our Empire will use Cocoa on her table in preference to tea and coffee, which—delightful as you may find them as mild stimulants—have no real food value, and hinder the proper digestion of starchy foods, bread, cakes and potatoes.

Saving at Home Serves in the Trenches

There is more nourishment in a cup of cocoa than in a cup of chicken soup, bouillon or beef extract. You require less of other foods when you drink cocoa. You save money on your table expenditures.

The money you save will enable you to purchase War Savings Certificates. For $21.50 you can buy at your nearest bank or Post Office a Certificate worth, in three years, $25.00.

Cowan's Perfection Brand Cocoa for the table, and Cowan's Maple Buds or Milk Chocolate Bars for most delightful confections will be found at the stores of all dealers throughout Canada.

Ask for Cowan's ACTIVE SERVICE Chocolate, just what our Soldiers in the trenches appreciate. Specially manufactured to meet their needs. 92

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

A DIVER'S STORY

By HOWARD C. BEACH

There are two situations either of which is calculated, when one is in it, to chill one's blood. One is up in the air, the other under water.

I have never been up in the air, but I have been under water many times. I am, or, rather, I was, a professional diver. I didn't adopt the calling because I considered it dangerous, for when properly done diving in armor is not dangerous. The same may be said of aviation. I became a diver in order to make a living. I ceased to be a diver after receiving a shock under water.

I was hired to go down to examine a yacht that had been overturned and sunk in a gale with a view to learning where the chains were to go under her to lift her. I was told that the owner was a scientific man, a great student, an investigator. He had invented a number of scientific devices that had made him a great reputation. The wrecking company told me that he was determined to go down with me, rather for the sensation of breathing under water than for being of service.

When we stood on the wrecking boat putting on the diver's uniform I cast a glance at my diving companion, on whose head they were about to put the helmet. Why I did not then and there refuse to go down with him I don't know. I suppose it was a dislike to do something unpleasant. Singular that I should have been willing to risk a horrible death rather than do something unpleasant. However, I presume it is the same feeling that compels a man to expose himself in battle to certain death because he is expected to do so.

Mr. Cheney, my diving companion, went down by one ladder, I by another some twenty feet distant from his. The water was clear, and the sun was shining upon it, so that I could see about me to a comparatively long distance. I kept an eye on Mr. Cheney, who struck the yacht at the bow, I amidships. She had settled on her keel, and her masts were nearly perpendicular. I was about to drop over the side to hunt for a place to get a support under her when my attention was attracted to Mr. Cheney. He had mounted the gunwale and stood with one hand on the rattlings. Then he began to go up hand over hand. He stopped a short distance from the surface and began to drop, sliding his hand along the upright ropes.

This was certainly not making investigations. It seemed to me that he was amusing himself as a child might do going up and down, being nearly balanced by the density of the water. Not liking his actions, I stood where I was, and when he had gone up and down a few times he let himself down on the deck and came toward me.

Divers usually carry a knife, since there is a probability of needing one. At any rate, I had one in a pocket in my diving suit, and Mr. Cheney had been provided with one. He was obliged to move slowly through the water, and meanwhile I was wondering what his intention was in coming to me. As soon as he reached me he gave me a push and at the same time made a grab for my signal line. In the tussle that followed I lost it, and he grasped it.

I would not have believed that so much strength and agility could be utilized under water. My antagonist got his arms around my body and, pulling his knife from his belt, cut the rope connecting my waist with the men above. Then he began to dance about on the deck, evidently delighted that he could jump so high and come down so gently.

I was some thirty feet under water, with neither life nor signal line, at the mercy of a madman, for his actions confirmed that glitter in his eye I had noticed just before his helmet was put on. Why the others had not noticed it I do not know, except that there are things which, though plain to some, are invisible to others. The only article connecting me with the world above was the air pipe. I was getting plenty of air, but the maniac had proved himself stronger than I—probably on account of his madness—and if he interfered with the supply of air I would suffocate.

Having danced to his satisfaction, Mr. Cheney started for me again. I could see by the way he held his head that he was observing my air tube to see where he could cut it, for he held his knife still in his hand evidently quite pleased whenever a beam of sunlight glittered on it through the water. I drew my own knife, determined, if necessary, to save my life by killing him. When he came within a few feet of me he jumped and, catching the tube above my head, severed it.

He must have pulled on his signal line, for I saw him rise rapidly. There was enough air in my helmet to prevent instant suffocation. I saw above me one chance for escape, the feet of my would be destroyer. I was just in time, by a spring, to reach an ankle with one hand. He tried to kick me off, but I not only hung on, I clutched the other ankle with my other hand. With a death grip I was drawn to the surface.

That is all I knew till I came to myself on the deck of the wrecking boat, my helmet removed and a number of anxious faces bending over me.

Mr. Cheney is now in an insane asylum. I am a retired diver. I have never since been under water.

Sheddy Tricks of Writing.

In "The Art of Writing" Sir Arthur Quiller-Couch, inveighing against the "trick of elegant variation," criticises a certain undergraduate's essay on Byron. In an essay on Byron, he says, Byron is, or ought to be, mentioned many times. "But my undergraduate has a blushing sense that to call Byron twice on one page is indelicate. So Byron, after starting bravely as Byron, in the second sentence turns into 'that great but unequal poet,' and thenceforward I have as much trouble with Byron as ever Telemachus with Proteus to hold and pin him back to his proper self." Among the truly wonderful variations recorded by Sir Arthur are "the gloomy master of Newstead," "the meteoric darling of society," "the apostle of scorn" and "the martyr of Missolonghi."

Don't Complain!

The world is full of complainers. Some complain of ill health, many of ill fortune and most of all of ill luck.

A pound of pluck is worth a ton of luck. It is not a perfect world. Who is well every day throughout the year without an ache, a pain or a cough?

Who is perfect in physique, in temper, in deed and word and conscience?

What man or woman is without a weakness or reason at times for misgivings or cause at times for repentance?

It is a world of foibles, fads and fanatics. If we were all perfect the preachers would be needless. Heaven would be on earth.

There is comfort in the thought that the striking differences we find among men and women make the world attractive. If all were alike the monotony would be unbearable.

Think of these things when you feel like repining over ill health, ill fortune, ill treatment or ill luck.

Misery loves company, and there are always "others."—John A. Sleicher in Leslie's

The Love of Trees.

That one should feel affection for great trees is natural. In the Minnesota forests I met a lumberman who told me he wept bitter tears when he got orders to cut down a fine hemlock. Every stroke of the ax seemed to him to be felt by the sturdy monarch whose life he was taking.

When I have revisited the "woods" in which as a boy I gathered nuts I have fancied the trees I used to climb recognize me. They looked the same. They hadn't aged. The shellbark hickory trees seemed a trifle more dangerous to climb than of yore, and the walnuts had gained noticeably in girth, so that my lengthened arm had barely kept pace with the expanding bark. I could still encircle their trunks and could have climbed them if necessary, but the rewards of a winter's store of nuts no longer appeal to me. The walnuts and hickory nuts one buys do not taste like those gathered with one's own hands.—Julius Chambers in Brooklyn Eagle.

Easy If You Know How.

Burned out electric lamps can be renewed by this simple method:

File off the tip carefully so that the globe does not crack. With a pair of tweezers twist the broken filament together. Obtain from the druggist a piece of yellow phosphorus for 5 or 10 cents. Insert a piece of it, about half the size of a pea, in the bulb. Cautiously heat the top of the globe by means of a Bunsen burner and melt a piece of chemical glass over the hole, closing it completely.

The phosphorus unites with the oxygen in the bulb to form phosphorous trioxide, a cloudy substance, which will settle in a few days. The globe is now filled with nitrogen. The greatest caution must be exercised in the use of the phosphorus. It must be handled under water entirely and with tweezers. Do not touch it.—Popular Science Monthly.

That Three Mile Limit.

The origin of the "three mile limit," the imaginary line three miles from the shore, which fixes the territorial waters of a sovereign state, is somewhat of a mystery. One explanation and the one usually accepted is that when it was agreed on by the nations three miles was the limit of range of the big guns of that time. If that were so and a proposal was put forward to revise the territorial limits in agreement with the effective range of modern artillery there would be a big shrinkage of the "high seas." France could claim jurisdiction from Calais to Dover and England from Dover to Calais, which would be awkward, while little of the Mediterranean would remain international waters with fifteen inch guns on Italy's "big toe" and on the many islands dotted about the middle sea.—London Opinion.

Her Gilded Gown.

During the reign of King George I. Lord Hervey, a cultured man, gave this description of the fine dress of a distinguished woman:

"The Duchess of Queensberry's clothes pleased me most. They were white satin embroidered, the bottom of the petticoat brown hills, covered with all sorts of weeds, and every breadth had an old stump of a tree that ran up almost to the top of the petticoat, broken and ragged and worked with brown chenille, round which twined nasturtiums, ivy, honeysuckles, periwinkles, convolvuluses and all sorts of twining vines, which spread and covered the petticoat. Many of the leaves were finished in gold, and part of the stumps of the trees looked like the gilding of the sun."

Try It on Your Doctor.

Translating a Greek word into its Latin equivalent will often give you a new or unexpected synonym—or a reversal of the process will do the same. For instance, if you refer to the human body as osseocarnisanguineoviscericartilaginonervomedullary and want to puzzle the anatomical experts by being still more pedantic, you could transfer that mighty word, section by section, into its Greek equivalent and describe the physical frame as osteosarchomatosplanchnochondroneuromuscular. And that would hold the doctors for awhile.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

He Was a Fibber.

"You're a tattletale," said small Harry to his little sister. "You always run and tell mamma everything that happens."

"Well, you are worse than I am," replied the small miss. "You tell her a lot of things that never happen at all."—New York Globe.

The Lobster.

The lobster is decidedly pugnacious, engaging in frequent combats with others of its kind, in which contests limbs are often severed, but this loss is soon repaired by the growth of new members, rather smaller, though, than the old ones.

Terrible Threat.

Aunt—Why didn't you scream when he kissed you? Niece—He threatened me. Aunt—Threatened you? Niece—Yes. He said if I did he'd never kiss me again.—Boston Transcript.

Made Up.

Mrs. Flatbush—She tells everybody her face is her fortune. Mrs. Bensonhurst—Well, she's made it nearly all herself.—Yonkers Statesman.

Between Friends.

"What foolish things a fellow will do when he is in love!"

"Oh, Margy! Has he proposed?"—Philadelphia Ledger.

This paint will save you money now and next time—

Saves you money now because a gallon of Lowe Brothers HIGH STANDARD Paint covers a great deal more surface than a gallon of ordinary paint.

You will need fewer gallons of HIGH STANDARD

It spreads easier, enabling your painter to do a better job in less time.

It is a long-wearing paint, too. You don't need to paint so often.

Saves you money next time because HIGH STANDARD fails only by gradual wear after years of service, and leaves a good surface for repainting.

A Courageous Physician.

Doctor—Mrs. Knagg, your husband needs six months' rest. Half of it he must spend in Europe. Mrs. Knagg—Oh, splendid! We shall be delighted to go there. Doctor—That's what I've planned. You can go for three months after he returns. That will give him a full six months' rest.—Pittsburgh Press.

Three Kinds of Feet.

A meeting of foot doctors brought forth the information that all feet are divided into three classes—namely, unflared, outflared and straight—the first two classes being scientific divisions for the afflictions known as pigeon toes and bowlegs. One doctor said, "Shoes are proverbially made to fit the eye and the pocketbook, but not the feet."—Popular Science Monthly.

A Bit of New York Life.

It is often little things that show most impressively the size of a city. During the last six months the people who used the subways in New York city carried into them on their feet 1,500 tons of dirt, an amount greater than even the most pessimistic farmer's wife would accuse the hired man of "tracking in" during plowing time.—Youth's Companion.

Shirts For His Feet.

Mrs. L. and Mrs. D. are adjoining neighbors in a suburb near New York. Each had just finished hanging out her week's wash.

"I declare," remarked Mrs. L. as she hung up the last sock, "to look at all those stockings one would think that I washed for a centipede."

"Me, too," returned Mrs. D. "Just look at those shirts."—Christian Herald.

Fisherman's Luck in England.

A Bath angler pulled up a lady's satchel containing £3; an Irish doctor hooked and landed a lady's bicycle; Lieutenant Kennard "caught" a signet ring in the river Avon, and on advertising it an owner came forward in the person of Major Hickley, who proved that his father, the late Admiral Hickley, lost it while fishing in the Avon twenty-five years before, and a Trent angler in Nottinghamshire "caught" an old stocking containing £4 10s. in gold and silver.—Bally's Magazine.

Mullein Stalks For Roman Funerals.

The mullein has had many uses. The Romans dipped the stalk into tallow and used it as a funeral torch. In the middle ages it was used as a candle wick by many people. It is reputed to have medicinal virtues for both man and beast, smoking dry mullein leaves and drinking mullein tea being resorted to by those having colds. It won in England by reason of its reputation as a healer of cattle diseases the name of "bullock lungwort."—National Geographic Magazine.

Funny Errors In Advertisements.

Laughable errors in illustrated advertisements are often apparent to the thinking man. It makes one wonder why the designers of the ads. don't get their information first hand from some one who really knows. Accuracy, even in advertisements, has the same attraction it has anywhere else.

For instance, when the seltzer bottle in an electrical sign on Broadway is filling the empty glass the level descends as fast in the bottle as it rises in the glass, yet the bottle is five times as big. It couldn't possibly be, according to physics.

Still worse is a picture of a piano with a pair of hands striking certain keys. Fortunate it is indeed that that piano can't sound, for the particular keys struck would be a jangling discord. Why couldn't the artist have gone to a musician for a pleasing chord among the infinite offerings of music?—Wall Street Journal.

Odd Numbers.

A hen is always given an odd number of eggs to be hatched. Why? There is no reason at all except superstition.

Salutes from warships, forts, etc., are always given in odd numbers, yet no valid reason can be adduced. It is a remnant of the old "odd numbers are lucky" superstition.

Vergil records all sorts of charms and spells practiced round odd numbers—never even ones. Seven is the favorite Biblical number, and old divines taught that it held a mystical perfection. It is an odd number.

Falstaff, in the "Merry Wives," is entrapped for the third time. He himself said, "They say there is a divinity in odd numbers," because of the old belief in odd numbers.

Physicians of other days always insisted that "bleedings" should be in odd numbers—one, three, five, etc., and never an even one.—London Mail.

The Irony of Fate.

"Speaking of the irony of fate"—

"Well?"

"I know an artist who earns money to pay his divorced wife alimony by drawing Cupids."—Birmingham Age-Herald.

Exceptional.

He—Would you say that Mrs. Gigobbo was an eloquent talker? She—Yes, indeed; and the best part of it is that she frequently knows what she is talking about."—Richmond Times-Dispatch.

A Surplus.

"I tell you," said the real estate agent, "there isn't a finer residence development on earth than this. Just look at the wonderful scenery."

"The scenery is all right," replied the man who was looking for a home. "The only trouble is there's too much of it between here and the city."—Milwaukee News.

The "Ear of Dionysius."

A cunningly constructed prison cavern, consisting of a large chamber connected with one of smaller dimensions situated near Syracuse, Italy, has gone into legendary history with the title of the "Ear of Dionysius."

The smaller chamber was unknown to the prisoners kept in this underground dungeon, and the tyrant by whose name it is known had a habit of secreting himself there to listen to the conversation of the convicts, who were mostly political offenders.

An ingenious device constructed at the smaller end of the larger chamber transmitted the sounds through the partition, thus enabling the suspicious ruler to hear even the whispered conversations of his "suspects."

Scotsmen Are French Citizens.

Every Scotsman is a French citizen, with all the rights and privileges of such, if he chooses to claim them. In other words, every Scotsman born in Scotland is also a Frenchman and is thus possessed of two nationalities, surely a unique position.

After his coronation at Rheims in 1429 Charles VII. promulgated a decree that, in return for the assistance rendered by the Scottish soldiers to Joan of Arc, who defeated the English and made his coronation possible, Scotsmen were for all time to be considered free citizens of France.—London Answers.

Raised by Machinery.

"A mechanical age, truly."

"How now?"

"I just saw an incubator baby being lulled to sleep by a graphophone."—Kansas City Journal.

Different.

"I hear you bought a bungalow on a bluff."

"Oh, no; the real estate man sold it to me on a bluff."—Florida Times-Union.

Saved Is Earned.

"I earned a penny today, papa!"

"Brave boy! And how!"

"Mother gave me ten, and I saved one!"—Puck.

Something New.

Many advertisers are constantly trying to think up "Something New" or "Different" and the results are startling to be sure, but certainly not convincing nor conducive to increase in the business of the advertiser.

The craze for originality is a mistake. People do not care for stunts or mental gymnastics. They do want to know the facts in regard to your business and whether you can offer better prices or better quality than your competitors.

Tell the facts in a straightforward, unassuming manner. You will gain the confidence of your patrons, and you will find that advertising pays abundantly.

Inflamed Eyelids

HEAT and fullness of the lids, feelings as though there were sand in the eyes—these are the symptoms of inflammation and granulation of the eyelids. Besides the discomfort and suffering there is danger of the sight being permanently injured by the scraping of the granules across the surface of the eye.

By its soothing influence Dr. Chase's Ointment allays the inflammation, and by its lubricating effects keeps the lids soft, and thereby removes the friction which causes irritation. Relief is obtained at once, and with a little patient use of this ointment complete cure is effected.

The Twilight Service.

Delayed hitherto by unfavourable weather, the opening twilight service was held on Sunday evening, at 8.30, and was most successful and encouraging as regards attendance and interest. A large volunteer choir, led the singing, which was exceptionally hearty. Special hymn books provided were of much assistance. Miss Armstrong kindly presided at the organ and Dr. Lee gave an earnest address from the words "Christ died for our sins"; 1 Cor. 15:3, and Rev. Mr. Higgs closed the meeting with the Benediction. Service will be held next Sunday at 8.30, weather permitting, and a large attendance is expected. Come and hear the singing and address, "Whosoever will may come."

Hastings Items Of Interest

HASTINGS, July 16.—The "12th" passed off very quietly here, the local Orangemen and their friends having gone to Warsaw to assist in the celebration there.

The S.S. excursion in connection with the Presbyterian Church, was held at Rice Lake on Wednesday last. The steamer "Rainbow" ran two trips to accommodate the children and their friends, and a pleasant day was spent on the Island.

The death occurred of Mrs. Alex. Fleming at the early age of 26 years. Deceased had been taken to Nicholls Hospital for treatment, but all to no avail, and on Wednesday night death came to end her sufferings. The body was brought to Hastings on Thursday morning and was taken to the home of Mr. Roy Fleming, where the funeral service was held on Friday afternoon. A very large circle of friends and acquaintances gathered to pay their last tribute of respect and to sympathize with the sorrowing young husband. Revs. Snell and Thomson addressed the gathering, and a very large cortege wended its way to the T. V. cemetery, where interment was made.

Attended Funeral.

Several of our people attended the funeral of the late Dr. Black in Warkworth on Sunday afternoon and report a very large gathering.

The infant child of Mr. and Mrs. Willis, town, was buried on Friday morning, death being due to pneumonia.

Mr. and Mrs. Jas. Scott, of Toronto, attended the funeral of their daughter, Mrs. Alex. Fleming on Friday last.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter Fowlds are holidaying with friends in Toronto.

The showery weather is not very favourable to haying and the difficulty is to save the crop.

Mr. Kingston of Campbellford, was in town on Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Prest have returned to their home in Peterborough after a pleasant visit with friends here.

Mr. E. Burnham, of Peterborough, gave us a call last week.

An electrical storm passed over this district on Sunday afternoon, but no damage is reported.

Dr. Huycke and family are holidaying at Gravenhurst.

Mrs. S. Ivey, of Stoney Lake, has been renewing acquaintances in and around town.

Mr. and Mrs. Jas. Buck have retired from the business of farming and have moved into town.

Mr. Hugh Robb, of Norwood, was in town on Saturday.

Mrs. George Johnson, Mrs. Sid Hunter, Miss Alice Johnson, Miss Marjorie Laing and Mr. A. Graham, of Lakefield spent Sunday with Mrs. N. Beavis and Miss Mae.

Mr. Archie Thomson occupied the pulpit of the Presbyterian church, Campbellford on Sunday last.

Rev. Mr. Wolland, of Norwood, called here on Monday.

Mr. Allan Greenley of Brantford, is on a vacation with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Alex. Greenley.

Mrs. Boyce and children are guests at the home of Mr. and Mrs. D. Scriver.

Mrs. W. Hart of Havelock attended the funeral of the late Mrs. Fleming on Friday.

Messrs. J. Tilson, L. Hess and Otter Scriver took a trip to Oshawa on Friday last and motored back.

MILLBROOK PERSONALS

MILLBROOK, July 18.— Miss Ida Sprague of Toronto, is visiting at the home of Mr. and Mrs. W. G. Pendry.

Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Mulligan, of Cleveland, Ohio, are visiting friends in town.

Mrs. Martin Pethick and daughter, Miss Lila, were visitors to Peterborough on Tuesday.

Mrs. E. Osborne and daughter Greta, of Newcastle, were guests of friends in town this week.

Mr. Edgar Finlay of Fraserville, was a guest of Mr. and Mrs. Martin Pethick on Sunday.

Mrs. Geo. Brown was a visitor to Peterborough on Tuesday.

Mr. James Christie of Peterborough, was in town on Thursday.

THOUGHT CHILD WAS DYING

"Cholera Infantum"

DR. FOWLER'S Extract of Wild Strawberry Cured Her

Mothers should look well after their children during the hot summer months, as this is the time of the year this trouble is most prevalent. It begins with a profuse diarrhoea, the stomach becomes irritated, vomiting and purging set in, and the child rapidly loses flesh, and becomes weak, prostrated and languid.

Mrs. B. A. Cirwell, Rossway, N.S., writes: "I can recommend, most highly, Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry. A friend of mine whose little daughter was ill with cholera infantum was given up by the doctors. The little one's mother asked me to come in and see the child. I told her I had a bottle of Dr. Fowler's" and asked her if she would try it. When the bottle was half used the child was well. This cure was a miraculous one, for I thought the child was dying at the time."

There is nothing can take the place of Dr. Fowler's.

There is nothing just as good.

Do not accept a substitute, and thus endanger your life.

HARD FIGHTING ON RUSSIAN FRONT

Brusiloff Takes Prisoners And Machine Guns

NOVICA CAPTURED BY THE RUSSIANS IN A VERY SUCCESSFUL NIGHT ATTACK

General Brusiloff's Forces However Have to Withdraw to Eastern Ends of Village Where Two Enemy Counter Attacks Were Beaten Off---Germans Penetrate French Lines on Half a Mile Front But Are Driven Out Again This Morning

A SUMMARY OF TO-DAY'S WAR CABLES

Special to The Examiner:

PETROGRAD, July 19.—Russian troops captured Novica as a result of a night attack, but due to their heavy losses withdrew to the eastern end of the village where two enemy attacks were repulsed, according to to-day's official statemegt. "As a result of to-night's attack we occupied Novica, but suffering great losses withdrew to the eastern end of the village where two enemy attacks were repulsed," the War Office said. "On Tuesday we captured near Novica three machine guns and 228 prisoners."

(By Carl D. Groat, United Press Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, July 19.—America and her allies must make a tremendous air and sea offensive against Germany if they would check the U-boat menace, naval authorities have been warned to-day.

President Wilson has been urged to consider the plan. In the same breath, they predicted Germany will come out victorious if only the present defense anti-submarine work is continued. One million tons of shipping, it was officially estimated, is lost monthly from submarine, mine and wreck and other causes, while perhaps one-third that amount is the total built to replace it. Decreased totals of ships sunk do not mean improvement necessarily. A recent total low number of ships sunk showed an actual increase in tonnage destroyed above that of the previous weeks. There ought to be a naval policy directed toward an offensive plan, said one authority to-day. "Germany will win if she keeps on at her present rate. If we gamble on an offensive we may lose ships, but the chances would be in our favour."

LONDON, July 19.—The recapture of British advanced posts east of Monchy Le Preux which Field Marshal Haig's men were forced to leave under German attacks Wednesday ,was announced in an official report to-day.

LONDON, July 19.—The tenaity in the German internal situation was increased if anything to-day,according to despatches received here, by anxiety as to what policy the new Chancellor might indicate in his Reichstag speech this afternoon.

BERLIN, via London, July 19.—Successes for German troops on both the western and eastern fronts was announced in to-day's official statement.

PETROGRAD, July 19. — An extraordinary session of the Cabinet Council yesterday morning considered transferring the Government to Moscow, it was announced here to-day. Three serious outbreaks of malcontents and opponents to the Provisional Government have been reported from Petrograd this week, German money and German agents being largely blamed. These demonstrations may be responsible for the Cabinet Council's consideration of a transfer of the Government's business to Moscow, where the disturbing elements would be less likely to interfere.

LONDON, July 19. — Chancellor Michaelis will bid for a "German peace" in his Reichstag speech this afternoon, according to reports received from Swiss sources to-day. They declared the Chancellor's peace formula would conform strictly to the instructions of the German General Headquarters, and be based on the military situation now regarded as favourable to Germany.

NEW YORK, July 19. — "There is much destruction evident in the streets of Petrograd as a result of yesterday's riots," declared a despatch from the Russian capital to the Jewish Daily Forward to-day. "Many houses have been shattered by machine gun fire." The despatch also reported that a delegation from the army at the front had arrived at Petrograd to give formal assurance of their loyalty to the Government.

PARIS, July 19.—German troops yesterday during an attack on a front of half a mile east of Gauchy, succeeded in penetrating first line French trenches, but were hurled back at daybreak by a counter-attack, to-day's official statement reports.

The attack was preceded by an intense bombardment. "Artillery fire was active everywhere," the War Office said. "Especially between the Somme and the Aisne and on the left bank of the Meuse. South of St. Quentin after an intense bombardment yesterday evening at 9 o'clock the enemy attacked east of Gauchy penetrating our first line trenches, but were hurled back at daybreak. In Avocourt Wood the Germans bombarded in violent degree. Their counter attacks against our recent trench gains failed."

WASHINGTON, July 19.—The Allies have invited the United States to join in the coming Inter-Allies War Council at Paris, the State Department announced to-day.

NEW YORK, July 19.—An Associated Press cable from London says: According to statements of lobby correspondents of all the morning newspapers, Churchill's appointment as Minister of Munitions, has aroused a storm of angry resentment among Conservative members of the House of Commons, while some Liberals also regard it with disapproval. There is talk of presenting the Premier with a signed protest against the appointment.

ZURICH, July 19.—Munitions factory of the Hungarian Iron and Steel Rolling Mills at Englesfield, Budapest, were completely burned on Sunday, according to word received here. The damage will exceed a million crowns.

LONDON, July 19.—Summarizing military events of the past week, Major-General Frederick B. Maurice, Chief Director of Military Operations at the War Office, said to-day to the Associated press: "The British front has been notsworthy only for the fact that it has seen be heaviest fighting in the history of the war, with the losses severest on the German side, and the results generally favourable to the British. On the French front the Germans still are carrying on their policy of using picked troops for local operations, aimed at exhausting and harrassing the French. The result has been nil, and the policy is a confession that the Germans are incapable of attempting any really great effort."

AN ASHBURNHAM HOME HAS A LITTLE SCARE

A resident of Ashburnham had the experience this morning, about three o'clock, of a man trying to get in the door of his home. His wife was awake at the time, and on the man of the house getting up he made away, presumably over the back fence.

Ashburnham residents feel they should have some police protection if it can be had.

THE MILITARY SERVICE BILL WILL BE UP AGAIN THIS AFTERNOON

Third Reading Will Probably Take Place To-morrow With a Majority of Sixty in Favour of the Measure

"LE CANADA'S" OPINION

OTTAWA, July 19. — After a few days' respite the legislators will again undertake consideration of the Military Service Bill this afternoon, when the fight on the divinity student exemption clause will come up. It is now rumoured that the government will amend the clause to exempt only those who started their studies before the war broke out. The third reading will probably come to-morrow by consent. The vote on the third reading will be very similar to that on the second and the bill will carry with a majority of around sixty. It will then go to the Senate and should become law next week.

LE CANADA'S OPINION.

MONTREAL, July 19.—"What one Parliament does another may undo," says Le Canada, editorially this morning. It reads in part: "We are going to have elections. The people will be able to make their voice heard and to impose their wishes on the ministry which will govern them.

"The assurance of this fact must needs be soothing to us. It is possible that before appealing to the people Sir Robert Borden may attempt to pass measures which the people do not want, but even so, the electorate will be more assured what one parliament does another may undo. Thanks to the firmness the diplomacy and the prestige of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, he have grounds for hoping that nothing irreparable will be done by a moribund parliament, the mandate of which expired and which cannot continue to exist for more than three months.'

A New Gun For The Allies

AN ATLANTIC PORT, July 18. — Emile Bachblet, of Mount Vernon, N. Y., arrived to-day from Europe, where he said he had placed a new and powerful gun which he invented, in control of the allies.

Busy Days For Tax Collector

Tax Collector Green is doing a land office business these days. People are bringing in the salmon-coloured tax bills, together with sufficient currency to liquidate the indebtedness which they represent. "It's the most unwelcome bill I have to pay," said one fat lady to an acquaintance. "I have three tax bills," confided her companion. A great many taxpayers are paying the whole of their taxes now instead of making two instalments of it.

DISTRICT NURSE HAS HAD A BUSY MONTH

ANOTHER MEMBER OF THE 93rd BATTALION HOME FROM OVERSEAS

Pte. Geo. H. Rowe of Lakefield is Still in Serious Condition and Will Have to Undergo Further Treatment---Letters From Peterboro' Soldiers--To-day's General Military News.

Another member of the 93rd who is reported as having returned to Canada is Pte. George Henry Rowe, of Lakefield. Private Rowe is still in a serious condition, and will undergo further hospital treatment before returning to his home in Lakefield.

Pte. Rowe enlisted in the 93rd in December of 1915, and after reaching England, was drafted to the 52nd Battery, and went to France, where he was wounded on the 29th of October, 1916, and since that time has been in the hospital in England.

Mrs. Fred. Griffin, 473 Bolivar St., City, has received the following letter from her son, Lance-Corp. Milton Griffin, who went overseas with the 4th C.M.R., of Hamilton, last March:

June 28th, 1917.

My darling Mother, Dad and the Kiddies,—How under the sun are you all? My goodness, it seems months since I heard from or seen any of you. I guess its months since I seen you alright enough, but not since I heard from you, as I have received two letters from Florence and also one from yourself since I wrote you on the 22nd.

Well, mother, we haven't had very warm weather here lately. It has been quite cool, especially at nights. I heard you had a snowstorm on the 24th of May. Is that right?

I have been waiting for the letter from you with those addresses you spoke of, but have not received any so far. Well, mother, how is your mail reaching you. Do you get all my letters? I have been writing to you so much lately that I have not much news for you this time.

Has Pastor Doner received the card I sent him last week? Also one to Aunt Bertha Reid.

I wonder how long I will be here before going over to France? People say the drilling is so hard here, and that the soldiers are not treated right, but I could not say that. As for the meals, they are as good any way as we would get at home, and the drill is a little heavier and far better discipline on parades and more strict. That is all the difference. I like it fine, dear mother, so don't worry about me. I'm just O.K. I'd be lost if I were out of it. Well, dear mother, I'd love to be home again sometimes, it is very lonesome, but that is all in the game, isn't it mother. I'm pretty near a soldier now, and I'm proud that I ever joined the army (soldiers), and glad I did not wait to be conscripted. If some of the Peterborough fellows knew what the fellows over here think of them, they would enlist pretty quickly. It seems a pity that so many able-bodied men, young fellows especially, can stand behind the candy counter and silk ribbon counter when they are needed over here so much. A young girl, and there are plenty of them, could easily take their places and let those fellows help win this awful war.

Well, dear mother, I hope you are all well at home and having a good time. We have plenty of scenery around here, and most of our Sundays are spent on a big hill with plenty of nice shady trees, quite close to the camp, and the fellows have a fairly good time here. There are a few Peterborough boys here who wish to be remembered to you all.

Well, good-bye dear mother for this time.—From your loving son.

Milton.

Corp. Griffin would like any of his friends to write to him to the following address:

Lance-Corp. Milton Griffin (No. [illegible]), 8 Co, 8th Canadian Reserves, Upper St. Martin's Plains, Shorncliffe, Kent, care of Army P.O., London, England.

Mrs. A. W. Rutherford, Hunter Street, has received the following letter from her husband, Private A. W. Rutherford, who enlisted in the 93rd Battalion, and is now in France. The letter reads as follows:

"Just a line to let you know I am well, but it is pretty hot. I hope it is not as hot where you are. We have been building railways ever since we came to France. We are in different places and are moved from one place to another, just where there happens to be a piece of railway to build. We do not work fast but there are so many of us to do it that it does not take long to put down a few miles of track.

"We were inoculated to-day, and I guess we will have a couple of days' rest. I hear the Russians are fighting again. It ought to help bring the war to a close, and I think Greece will be in with the Allies pretty soon. Well, I think this is all now, so have as good a time as you can and do not mind what people say. If any woman is entitled to a good time it is surely a soldier's wife. So remember what I say and go out all you can and enjoy yourself."—Your loving husband.

Private Rutherford is now with the 2nd Canadian Labour Battalion.

Mrs. Armstrong, Hart Ave., has received a letter from her son, Pte. Cecil L. Armstrong, late of the 93rd Battalion, but now in France, which reads in part:

France, June 20th, 1917.

Dear Mother,—Just a few lines, hoping you are all well, as this leaves me enjoying the very best of health. I had a letter from Howard Hall, and he is well, and I hope to see him soon. I know where Cecil Bennett is buried. He has a nice grave, with flowers on it, and I will remember the place too. I would like to have a snapshot of his grave. Poor fellow, I felt sorry when I heard he was killed, as we always were good friends.

I was talking to Bill Sheperson last night. He looks well, and I was glad to see him, and Dick Staples is with us.

Remember me to all my old chums and tell them a few lines are always very welcome over here.—Your loving son,

Cecil.

Pte. Cecil L. Armstrong, Batt. Runners H. S., 1st Canadian Batt., C.E.F., France.

Mr. J. Murray, 503 Parnell street has received the following letter from his son, Pte. Jack Murray in France with the Machine Gun Section of the [illegible]th Battalion.

My Dear Father,—As I have a pretty good chance of writing just now I ,though I would drop you a few lines to let you know that I am well and in good health, hoping to find you and all the family at home the same. I wrote to Ada a few days ago and also to Jim. I hope they both got my letters alright. I have not much news to tell you, only the war is still on, I suppose you all know that. And as luck happens we are still on top for we are surely knocking Hell out of the Germans now for what they did to our fellows at the beginning of the war. Well they are getting well paid back for it now for we are winning now at every stage of the game, and I expect to be back in Canada about the last of March, next year, that is providing I am living. I have been here, in France now for nearly twelve months and I have noticed a difference since I came here first,

THE DIE IS CAST IN GENERAL ELECTION

Premier Announces That It is Not His Intention to Have Extension Resolution Sent on to the Senate

THE OTTAWA SITUATION

Ottawa, July 18.—The die for a general election is definitely cast. Premier Borden made the brief announcement to Parliament this afternoon. It was not his intention, Sir Robert stated, to submit the necessary motion to have the resolution for the extension of the Parliamentary term sent on to the Senate for approval. Failure to proceed farther with the resolution was due to the fact that there was no unanimity, or even practical unanimity, in relation to it. The vote was 82 to 62.

"Under the circumstances, and having regard to the course laid down," said the Premier, "the Government does not propose to take any further action on this matter."

The Premier's declaration was applauded by both sides of the Chamber.

Liberal Party Voted Unipodly.

In connection with yesterday's divisions in the House of Commons, it is to be noted that for the first time since the conscription issue came before the House the whole Liberal party in the Commons presented a united front on Hon. George P. Graham's amendment demanding that Parliament should proceed forthwith to perform the second half of its duty in regard to war organization. The first half is the mobilization of men. The second half is the mobilization of resources in food, money, munitions and transportation. On the first half of the problem, as to the wisest means of securing men for the front, there has been and still is honest division of opinion in the Liberal ranks. On the second half of the problem there is a united demand for drastic and vigorous, though belated, Governmental action.

No Party Split.

It is being made to appear in the Conservative press that, even on Mr. Graham's amendment, there was a party split, since Dr. Michael Clark of Red Deer, and Mr. Albert Champagne of Battleford, who had been regarded as supporters of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, voted with the Government. Neither of these members has acted for months past as if he were a member of the Liberal party in the Commons.

Mr. Champagne's Break.

Mr. Champagne broke with the Liberals of Saskatchewan some four years ago. When a nominating convention was held in his constituency two years ago another Liberal candidate was nominated in his place. During the last Provincial elections in Saskatchewan he worked for the defeat of the Martin Government, and for the past three years has been regarded as having entirely broken with the Liberal party. He has been in close association with Hon. Robert Rogers in regard to Saskatchewan politics.

With regard to Dr. Clark, it will be recalled that last year he practically took the ground that there should be no criticism of the Government during war time. Since then he has not worked in unison with his former colleagues. It was generally understood here before the session opened that he had come to an arrangement with the Conservatives of Alberta, by which he was not to be opposed by them at the next election. During the Alberta Provincial election last May he declined to take part in the campaign on behalf of the Liberal candidate. During the present session Dr. Clark has apparently found most of his friends on the Conservative side of the House, and it is known that he has had frequent and prolonged conferences with Hon. Robert Rogers, Hon. Arthur Meighen, Capt. Tom Wallace, and other party manipulators on the Government side. His break with the party has been well known here for a considerable time. His speech of last night marked the final severance, containing, as it did, effusive eulogies of Sir Robert Borden and unqualified criticism of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Hon George P. Graham, and the Opposition as a whole. It was a speech of a supporter "Peterborough Presents Possibilities Unsurpassed."

THURSDAY, JULY 19, 1917

MR. BUCHANAN'S POSITION.

Mr. W. A. Buchanan, Liberal M.P., and formerly of Peterborough, who has supported the conscription bill, but who on Tuesday voted against the proposed extension of parliament, states his reason logically in an interview given yesterday. There can be little fault found with the position taken by the western M.P., who says:

"I voted against extension simply because I was not prepared to assume any further responsibility without consulting the people. I supported conscription and will vote for it on the third reading, too, and I want the people who elected me in 1911 to decide whether they are prepared to renew their confidence in me or not. I think conscription can be better enforced by a new Parliament and I want to see conscription enforced, without fear or favour. Should I be a candidate again and successful at the polls, it will be as a supporter of conscription and a vigorous win-the-war policy. Since I have voted for conscription I do not seek to avoid facing my constituents and asking for their endorsement. Then I feel that I will be better able to serve my constituents and my country in these critical times."

DEHYDRATION.

When grandmother draped the rafters of the attic with long strings of quartered apples she was employing a principle of fruit preservation that in this scientific age assumes the imposing term, dehydration. Commercial evaporators have displaced grandmother's simple method, which remains but a happy memory forever associated with happy days of October when the corn cobs were hung aloft for next year's seed, and the cellar was stored for the winter's siege.

Dehydration is fast becoming a familiar expression in the present system of household management. It is repeated with particular insistence in current periodicals devoted expressly to women's interests. Practically, the operation denoted is but an elaboration of grandmother's primitive plan of preserving apples. By the removal of the constituent element of water, fruits and vegetables may be preserved at home for use during the winter, thereby delivering an effective blow at the high cost of living in general, and at the kindly canners in particular who made so much money last year they may recommend home canning to housewives.

The dehydration propaganda is being widely diffused in the United States, and the method demonstrated at women's meetings. It is abroad in Canada, at least in Ontario and, let us hope, may be explained to the women of Peterborough before the season of fresh fruit and vegetables passes. The fact that food controllers are calling upon housewives to do their own preserving not only encourages the hope that the canning companies are at last receiving slightly less consideration than the consumer, but also that in these serious times the women will endeavour by their efforts to obviate in a large measure the customary expenditure for winter delicacies they are urged to preserve at home. And in this emphasis on the co-operation of the women, there is evidence of another cycle completed. With a few alterations grandmother's kitchen is to be revived for the new dehydration. The dried apples are to be multiplied to the inclusion of practically all the products of the garden. Such, at any rate, is the desire of the authorities who bear the responsibility of the campaign for thrift and economy. The years of progress that have marked the cycle have seen women steadily relieved of many traditional occupations of the home. Factories appropriated both the work and the worker. The present propaganda of which dehydration is a feature, seeks to restore the status quo ante and the most serious obstacle to that end is that most women have to be instructed in preserving methods, both new and old. Preserving might soon have become another lost art but for the agitation that is now centred around it. Dehydration may at once reclaim and advance it.

THE OTTAWA SUGGESTION.

The Toronto Globe says: The Prime Minister announced that he would withdraw his resolution for the extension of the term of Parliament unless it had the virtually unanimous approval of the House. It was carried on Tuesday night by a vote of 82 to 62, a majority of 20 only, and it is now believed that an election will be held within a few weeks.

The petition would have no moral sanction, and would assuredly be rejected by the Imperial authorities, if it had been carried through the Canadian Parliament by anything less than an overwhelming majority. Knowing this, and knowing beforehand, that any approach to unanimity was impossible, the Prime Minister introduced his resolution as a manoeuvre to put the onus of a general election on his opponents. The responsibility will not be wholly theirs. So far as they can see, an extension of the life of Parliament would be merely an extension of the life of the present government, with no change of men or methods. Sir Robert Borden could have introduced his resolution with greater authority if he had given an indication of his intention to reconstruct his government, coalition or no coalition, and to frame a win-the-war policy of national organization. There was nothing in his speech, or in the speech of Sir George Foster, that promised anything better in the future than in the past, excepting the welcome imposition of an income tax. In asking that its own life be prolonged the government owed it to the people to present its full war programme. Having rejected the Graham resolution, urging the mobilisation of the material forces and resources of the nation for war, it ought to frame alternative measures for the same purpose.

The people, though divided upon military conscription, are almost a unit in demanding progressive financial and economic legislation. They are frankly dissatisfied with the manner in which the war has been conducted, and before Parliament would be justified in extending its own life and the life of the government, it should have guarantees that the Administration will formulate and carry out a policy for the wholehearted participation of Canada in the war. The Prime Minister's address discloses no reason why the appeal for extension was brought forward at this juncture, to interrupt the progress of the Military Service Bill, which should have first place in the minds of members who put the winning of the war above party or personal considerations. The public will share Mr. Mackean's view that the extension resolution should have been deferred until the Military Service Bill was on the statute book, and until the government had announced its other war policies.

THE CASE IN IRELAND.

The political situation in Ireland, where John Redmond is losing ground to the irreconcilable element, the Sinn Feiners, looks very unfortunate on the surface, but it may be that a great good may grow out of it, namely a kindlier feeling between the Home Rule party under Redmond, and the north of Ireland Unionists, says the Ottawa Journal-Press. Two things are clear. One is that if John Redmond and his chief colleagues were to choose to endorse the Sinn Fein idea of complete separation of Ireland from the British Empire they would find a majority of Irishmen behind them. The other thing clear is that John Redmond and his party, co-operated with by the north of Ireland, would constitute an unquestionable majority over the Sinn Feiners on the principle of retention of Ireland within the Empire. So the situation is that the north of Ireland has a choice between driving John Redmond, or if not him, most of his supporters, into the arms of the Sinn Feiners, who aim at Irish separation, or of aiding Redmond to keep Ireland an effective part of this Empire. Surely such a case should influence Ulster to give countenance to the idea of Home Rule for Ireland of the Redmond type. The alternative seems to be government of Ireland by England by force. Obstinacy by Ulster in the circumstances will be neither common sense for Ulster nor true loyalty to the Empire.

Perhaps, therefore, the coming convention in Ireland, to which all Irish parties are invited to send delegates, but which the Sinn Feiners say they will not attend, may create between the other Irish parties a better atmosphere than has heretofore existed. United, they can dominate the Sinn Feiners easily enough, and it will be to the joy of us all in the rest of the Empire. Divided, the Sinn Feiners may beat Redmond, and if they are allowed to do so, unrest and unhappiness for Ireland must continue indefinitely. Even if England wanted to let Ireland go, Ulster would launch into civil war before it would tolerate interference by the Sinn Feiners, or or probably even their unfettered neighborhood.

The solution of the Irish question now must be the alliance of Redmond and Carson.

REFORM IN GERMANY.

The general opinion is that very little will be effected by the substitution of Michaelis for Bethmann-Hollweg, says the Toronto Star. The deposed Chancellor had apparently been trying to keep on good terms with all parties, and to exercise a moderating influence. He formed a programme of his own, and endeavoured, says a correspondent of the New York Times, "by gentle, steady pressure and suggestion to impose it upon a changeful Sovereign, oscillating between vistas of brilliant ambition and realizations of cold facts; upon the puissant military caste represented by Field Marshall von Hindenburg and General Ludendorff, and a blundering, unbrilliant Parliament."

It is doubtful whether much can be done in Germany by gentle measures. We are apt to be misled in this respect by a wrong view of British history, and by Tennyson's much-quoted phrase, 'Freedom broadened slowly down from precedent to precedent." That is a half-truth. Freedom was not won in England by a gentle and uninterrupted evolution. It was won largely by violence.

The despotic power wielded by the Tudors fell into the weaker hands of the Stuart. Parliament resisted, and a long and bloody civil war closed with the triumph of Parliament, the execution of the King, and the establishment of a republic. The monarchy was restored, but the spell of divinity was broken, and a second revolution led the way to the establishment of parliamentary government. Under George the Third there was a reaction toward despotism, and it was not until well on in the nineteenth century that progress was renewed.

Anyone who reads the debates in Parliament and the story of the agitation in the country for the Reform bill will receive an impression quite different from that of peaceful evolution. Advocates of reform spoke seriously of the danger of revolution. Opponents of reform talked as if concession to its spirit would be the beginning of anarchy. Democracy, which we now regard as a commonplace and an accepted article of political faith, was then spoken of in trembling accents. The word Radical was a term of reproach, much like the word Atheist.

Before the revolution had made considerable progress in reform, and the Czar and some of his predecessors had looked upon reform with a friendly eye. But the reformers found their efforts thwarted by the bureaucracy, and they finally decided that the only effective way was to smash the dynastic machinery. Their animosity was not against the Czar personally, but against the system which he helped to sanctify.

It will be useless for the Reichstag to protest and pass resolutions unless it is prepared to persist in the withholding of supplies until its will is carried out. Holding the power over the purse with a firm hand, it could control administration and public policy. But nothing effective can be done without such a conflict as will cause a crisis, and possibly without civil war.

Unfortunately the Kaiser and the war lords have in their hands such an instrument as no tyrant in England or in France possessed. They have an army against which any rising of the population would be vain, would be a mere provocation to massacre. That army is ruled by an iron discipline, rendering mutiny futile. The outlook for reform therefore, is dark.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

The people who think the political situation at Ottawa is a puzzle would agree that it is as clear as sunlight alongside of Capt. Burnham's explanation of the crisis. In a telegram to a local paper yesterday West Peterborough's representative dragged in Rule 17, Bishop Fallon, two French barbers, and a lemon tart.

Judging by the number of times they have fallen for worthless cheques and confidence games generally, Lindsay's merchants need a guardian.

The average cost of living for a working man's family for food alone in June of this year was $11.89 per week, an advance of nearly 40 per cent. over the same month last year. The soldier's family have, however, to struggle along on the same monthly allowances as decided upon in August of 1914.

NATIONAL SERVICE APPEAL.

Effort will be made to Secure 7,000 Men Needed to Harvest the Crops of Ontario.

Toronto, July 19.—"We need and expect to get from 5,000 to 7,000 men for the Ontario harvest," declared Dr. W. A. Riddell, superintendent of the Trades and Labour Branch today upon his return from Ottawa, where he held conferences with the committee of the Dominion Cabinet on the farm labour situation. Hon. Dr. Roche, Minister of the Interior, has asked the National Service Board to issue an appeal for harvest help. The information contained upon the National Service cards will be used to direct the board to men available for labor upon farms.

ADMIRALTY HEAD WAS LABOURER IN THE U. S. ONLY FEW YEARS AGO

Of the British Cabinet changes announced yesterday the most significant is the promotion of Sir Eric Geddes of the post of First Lord of the Admiralty.

Here is a career scarcely less romantic than that of Lloyd George himself. Geddes is but 41 years old. A few years ago he was a day laborer in a Baltimore and Ohio station yard. To-day he is head of the British Navy.

The Geddes appointment shatters every tradition of British procedure and British naval history except the new Lloyd George motto of 'push and go.' Geddes has never been in Parliament, never was in politics, but to-day he becomes a Cabinet Minister of first rank. Geddes never was a sailor. His connection with the Admiralty in any capacity whatever began two months ago. To-day he is First Lord, controlling the destinies of British Sea Power, with all that implies.

THE SUB. IS HIS PROBLEM

The significance of Geddes' appointment as it will affect naval policy remains to be seen. Tremendous as has been the task of the Admiralty, and successful as it has been in keeping Germany bottled up and our sea routes open, the fact remains that in the submarine affair the Navy has so far failed. The failure, if not checked, may end in disaster. And no matter when this war ends there will never again be security for the British Empire or for any other decent seafaring nation until the submarine is mastered.

One would deduce from Geddes' rapid promotion that he has a submarine solution. Time will tell. He was appointed to the Admiralty in May, when there was a considerable shake-up following criticism. His appointment then was at head of a newly created department of naval munitions. At that time his appointment was expected to have two far-reaching results, the speeding up of naval supplies, and the abolition of red tape in all Admiralty departments through which he would have to work. Apparently he has been a success.

Whether he will require a more aggressive policy at sea we cannot tell yet. Some critics declare that the only way to destroy the sub. menace is to build a fleet which can destroy their bases, and until the British fleet can do that it is not as it should be. Others claim that our present naval troubles are the result of a false naval policy which has been primarily defensive. Geddes, with two months' experience, is certainly not hampered by any traditions.

A KITCHENER "DISCOVERY."

When war broke out Geddes was known only as a railway man and among railway men. He was deputy general manager of the North-Eastern. Kitchener called upon him first for transport work, was struck by his ability, and transferred him to the War Department. When Lloyd George became Minister of Munitions he nabbed him for first lieutenant as deputy director-general. In the battle of the Somme, when railway congestion threatened to tie things up, he went to France and untangled the mess for both the French and British armies. Thereupon he added a new title, "Director-General of Transportation." In May he was brought back to the Admiralty, when his post gave him charge of transport, victualling ordnance and shipbuilding.

Geddes was a Scotch boy, born in India, educated at Oxford, intended for the army, but he "ran away" to America as a boy, spent four years at Homestead, Pa., and with the B. & O., spent the next six in India on light railway work, and returned to England in 1903 at the age of 27 to join the North-Eastern, where he stuck till war broke out.

He is the only man to hold the combined ranks of major-general and vice-Admiral.

Famous Whizz Bang Boys Coming Soon

Returned Soldiers From Whitby Military Hospital to Give Big Performance at the Grand Opera House on Friday, July 27---A Great Programme by Boys Who Have Done Their Bit in France.

It will be good news to Peterborough citizens to know that they are going to have an opportunity of seeing and hearing the famous Whizz-Bang Boys, the returned soldiers' company, which is to give a big concert in the Grand Opera House on Friday, July 27.

All members of this troupe are at the present time patients in the Whitby Military Hospital, and the aim of the Company is to secure funds to provide recreation and entertainment for their more unfortunate brothers who are unable to get about. Not one member of the troupe receives any remuneration, and the whole of the profits are given to a committee to spend as they see fit. This committee is appointed by the men, and consists of one officer and eight men.

The show itself is a high-class one and has met with great success wherever it has been produced. The Whizz Bang Boys have played in most of the larger towns and cities of Eastern Ontario, and in every place they have recived offers for a return engagement. The stage setting is quite unique and the boys promise to entertain you every bit as well as they fought for you Somewhere in France. This seems a large bill to fill but they can do it; so come along to their entertainment, and be convinced for yourself. The prices are most reasonable, the scale of prices ranging from 25 to 50 cents.

Here are some interesting personal notes about the Whizz-Bang troupe:

Sergt. Annis, who acts as interlocutor, was a member of the 14th Battalion. He is a Western man, residing in Edmonton, Alta. He was severely wounded in both legs on the 13th of June, 1916, at the Battle of Zillebeke. He has lost the power of his right foot and has to use crutches.

Sergt. Whitnall was with the 2nd C. M. R. and is a resident of Vernon, B.C. Sergt. Whitnall lost his right arm at the battle of Zillebeke the same day that Sergt. Annis was wounded. He has been very unfortunate as septic poisoning has set in a number of times caused by lying out in No Man's Land several hours before he could be rescued.

Pte. Woodgate was severely wounded in the right knee. In an operation that was performed on his knee he had a piece of bone removed and a silver tube was put in its place. Pte. Woodgate was a member of the 58th Battalion and his home is in Merriton, Ont.

Pte. Janaway, who acts as one of the end men in the troupe, was a member of the 35th Battalion, and suffered severe injuries to his right hip and leg and has to use crutches. He hails from Hespeler, Ont. Pte. Janaway has had vast stage experience and toured the British Isles with the best Minstrel troupes over here.

Pte. Brugger, the elocutionist of the troupe, was a member of the 75th Battalion, and is a resident of Toronto. Pte. Brugger was very badly wounded in the left arm and has lost the complete use of his left hand. He was wounded at the historic Ypres Salient, where so many of the brave Canadian lads have made the supreme sacrifice.

Pte. Hill, also a member of the 75th Battalion, was wounded at the battle of Courcelette, and Toronto is his home. Pte. Hill suffered severe wounds to his back and legs. Hill and Brugger were pals before they enlisted, and each thought the other killed in action, until they met in the hospital at Whitby. Needless to say it was a very happy reunion.

Gunner Taylor also hails from Toronto and was a member of a trench mortar Battery in France, and is suffering from shell shock. He was wounded in May, 1916. Gunner Taylor is an accomplished violinist, and has had a wide experience on the concert stage.

Opl. Healey belonged to the 1st Battalion, and is also suffering from shell shock. He was twice buried by shell explosions in the fall of 1915, on the famous Messines front. He had almost completely recovered, but was unfortunate enough to be in hospital at Ramgate, England, when that city was severely bombarded by Zeppelins. One bomb struck the hospital that Opl. Healey was a patient in, and he suffered a complete relapse and was invalided home to Canada last November. Opl. Healey is a resident of Detroit, Mich.

Gunner Dufton was wounded in the summer of 1915, and was a fellow patient of Opl. Healey's at Ramsgate. He recovered from his wounds and went to France again with a trench mortar battery and had only been in the trenches five days this time when he was severely wounded in the left hip. He was sent to hospital in England, and in due course arrived at Ramsgate again where he once more met his old pal, Opl. Healey, and they came back to Canada on the same boat. Healey and Dufton have formed a Damon and Pythias alliance, and are inseparable companions. Gunner Dufton's home is in Toronto.

Pte. Bentley, the celebrated handcuff king, is a resident of Hamilton, Ont., and was with the 4th C. M. R. in Flanders. He was a victim of one of the Huns' fiendish gas attacks, and although he suffers greatly at times, he is a striking example of Canadian pluck and heroism.

Pte. Price is Pte. Bentley's assistant and was a member of the famous 48th Highlanders of Toronto. He was wounded in the chest and suffers now from a weak heart. He is a native of Toronto.

L.-Cpl. Fowler is an original member of the 3rd Battalion of Toronto and resides in that city. He passed safely through the terrific battles of Ypres and Festubert, only to fall a victim during one of the quiet (?) times.

Bandsman Seddon hails from Hamilton, Ont., and was serving with the 58th Battalion in France. He was wounded at the battle of Zillebeke a year ago last June. Bandsman Seddon is an accomplished musician, and toured this continent with the famous Kilties Band.

Pte. Edwardes, the property man of the trope, was an original member of the 4th Battalion, and is a native of Hamilton, Ont. He went to France twice and was wounded the last time at the battle of Zillebeke. He is an accomplished clarionet player, but on account of his wounds will be unable to play again.

Sergt. Staton, the manager of the troupe, is a qualified surgeon, and devotes his time in promoting amusement for the patients in the hospital. Sergt. Staton has had two sons killed in this war and has two more at the front now.

Major Archibald, the President of the troupe, is a returned officer. He went overseas with the 8th C. M. R. and served with the 7th Field Ambulance in France. He is the chief medical officer of Whitby Military Hospital.

Mrs. Knox, who is accompanist of the troupe, is Musical Directress of District "D" of the Military Hospital Commission. Her only son has been wounded in action.

BLONDIN WAS NOT HISSED.

Says the Only Trouble on the Ferry was the Cries of Babies.

Montreal, July 18.—Hon. P. E. Blondin has wired to LePresse denying the story published here and in Toronto that he had been the subject of a disturbance at Three Rivers on Sunday. After saying that the report was false, he adds that the "cries of a couple of babies" did not justify the publicity they received.

HOW CANADIAN PRIVATE WON VICTORIA CROSS

Pte. John Chipman Kerr, Born in Nova Scotia, Captured Sixty German Prisoners Largely Through His Own Efforts—A Thrilling Story of Bravery Against Great Odds.

"An authenticated story of one against sixty odd," is the story just allowed through the censor's hands of how John Chipman Kerr, Canada's sixth and latest V. C. hero won his Victoria Cross.

Pte. Kerr, the son of a Canadian militia captain and born at Fox River, Nova Scotia, was transferred to a battalion at the front on June 8th, 1916, in the course of the reformation of the Canadian division, and on June 22nd the reorganised battalion went back into the line in the same position in Sanctuary Wood, where they had first suffered. On Sept. 15th they were sent to the chalk pits on the left of Courcelette.

ENEMY STRENGTH UNKNOWN

Meantime, the attacking parties had advanced to the capture of Fabeck Graben, a difficult trench to take, as the men had to go forward in oblique fashion. The centre was taken, and Capt. Harstone rushed his company, Kerr amongst them, to fill the gap, the Fabeck Graben fell. But its taking was not complete. The enemy, in unknown strength, remained possession of a stretch of 200 yards, wherein he was sandwiched in between different portions of the Canadian force. His hold on this position was strengthened by the fact that he also held in great force Zollern Graben, which adjoined.

This disposition was fraught with great danger to both the opposing troops, neither of which knew the other's strength in men and munitions, but the enemy had the advantage of knowing every inch of the ground, concealed machine guns, and snipers' nests. Capt. Harstone decided on a bombing expedition to oust the enemy from the trench, and he sent word to this effect to the brigadier through his battalion headquarters. The assault, however, had consumed all the bombs, and before the supply could be replenished night had set in.

Meanwhile, an elaborate plan to capture this particular portion of Fabeck Graben and also Zollern Graben was in course of preparation by the staff, but a brigade message gave Capt. Harstone an allotted time in which to carry out the bombing expedition.

BOMBING-EXPEDITION.

A squad of a dozen men was detailed under Capt. Patterson to execute this minor operation, and Pte. Kerr was selected for the post of first bayonet man. His duty as such was to precede the party, dispose of the enemy sentry in a manner which would not arouse the whole garrison, seek the latter's whereabouts, and advise the bombers of their target.

Kerr climbed the block, or boundary line, established in the Canadian trench, and made his way toward a similar obstruction erected by the enemy. The other men followed him. The German sentry was alert and hurled a bomb over the parapet. Kerr saw the missile hurtling towards him, and bent his right arm in front of his body the better to protect himself. It was a near call, for the bomb blew off the top of Kerr's forefinger and wounded him in the side. Bombers of both sides then became busy, and neither could see the other nor the effect of their missiles.

STOOD UP IN FULL VIEW

Regardless of his wounds and of the enemy, Kerr scrambled to the top of the battered parados. Here he obtained a full view of the enemy. The small attacking party could easily have been overcome by the number of Germans that crowded the trench, but this did not enter into Kerr's calculations.

He had only two bombs with him, and after making excellent use of them he opened fire with his rifle. This, however, had became clogged with mud and jammed. With his bombs expended and his rifle useless he remained at the top of the trench directing the aim of his bombers. Then he seized the rifle of the second bayonet man to make reprisals for his own hurt. He seemed to bear a charmed life, as, though he was in full view, the wild aim of the Germans passed him by.

JUMPED INTO TRENCH.

Under continuous pressure the enemy retired, and as soon as they had pounded the first bay, which hid them from sight, Kerr jumped into the trench and grimly followed. The place was thick with dead and dying Germans. Prepared for German treachery, Kerr rounded the first bay without incident, holding his bayonet fixed. They had retired to the other extremity of the trench.

Kerr discovered this when on rounding the third bay of the trench he came face-to-face with a heavily-built German, who at sight of the bayonet instantly threw up both hands. There stood the wounded Canadian facing, not this one man, but sixty others behind him, in a trench amply provided with ammunition and weapons. He smiled with amusement when one aong the sixty waved a white rag at him.

Kerr signalled to the Germans with his rifle to climb over the parados at the same time calling to his comrades to hurry along as he was in touch with the enemy. the attacking party now numbered only nine, one having been killed and three others in addition to Kerr wounded.

GERMANS MEEKLY OBEYED.

When the other eight Canadians came on the scene the opposing forces were roughly seven to one in favour of the enemy. Zollern Graben was close at hand, and the Germans had a plentiful stock of munitions, including a machine gun, yet they refused to make one last bid for their freedom.

Instead, they followed the pointed instructions of their captor and made their submissive way down a communication trench into captivity, while Pte. Kerr proceeded to the dressing station, thence to the base and across the channel to England, oblivious of the fact that he had been recommended for the Victoria Cross.

300 MILES TO ENLIST.

Pte. Kerr is described as a typical specimen of the best Canadian manhood—over six feet tall in his socks and an open air advocate. When war came he was homesteading at Spirit River, Alta., and as there were no recruiting sergeants there he with a dozen other ranchers, walked in fifty miles to the railway and booked passage for the 300-mile trip to Edmonton. Here they enlisted.

German-Magyar Insincerity

NEW YORK CITY, July 19.—Judging by recent reports from Budapest and Vienna, a systematic attempt is being made to mislead the world as to exact conditions in the Central Empires. Count Karolyi is reported to have said that "'one of the pre-requisite conditions of peace is the demoralization of every country." The sentiment expressed in this phrase is indeed noble and to be commended. It does not differ materially from the aims of the Allies, but from previous knowledge of Magyar statesmanship we must doubt the sincerity of this statement and refuse to believe that it is to be applied to Hungary. Democracy as generally understood, involves the right of each nationality to develop freely and to guide its own destiny without hindrance from any other nation. Hungary is the exact antithesis of democracy, and it is determined to remain one, as evidenced by the recent statement of Count Esterhazy that the Hungarian state must remain intact, in other words, that the Magayrs must be permitted to retain their hold on their subject nationalities. Hungary is composed of at least four distinct nationalities, and yet in spite of all the high sounding phrases about democracy there is not a single Hungarian statesman who would be willing to concede to these nationalities the rights enjoyed by the Magyars. Democracy in Hungary means full privileges to the Magayrs and no privileges for the non-Magyars.

Would Be Wrong.

Theodore Wolff, in a recent editorial in the Berliner Tageblatt says: "It would be wrong and unwise, even if possible, to force other people under our yoke and to destroy their independence." This sentiment will no doubt find support among all lovers of freedom and liberty. But, coming at a time when Germany is in no position to subjugate other nations, it loses its force. If it is wrong to subjugate other people, why is it not wrong to keep in subjection those people who have previously been subjugated? Yet Mr. Wolff has absolutely nothing to say about the liberation of the Poles of Prussia, of the Danes of Schleswig-Holstein, the French of Alsace-Lorraine, not to speak of the numerous suppressed nationalities of Austria-Hungary.

Magyar and German statesmen are evidently pleading for a peace on the basis of the status quo ante. The war arose from this very status. War terminated upon such a basis would be a lost war for the Allies. Opponents of Germany should not be misled by the latest German and Magyar peace talk.

16TH CENTURY ARMOUR.

Only $120,000 Offered for Two Suits —They Were Withdrawn.

Two suits of Wilton armour, heirlooms in the family of the Earl of Pembroke, were put up at auction at Sotheby's in London, recently but as the bidding fell below the reserve price they were bought back by Lord and Lady Pembroke.

The highest bid for one of the suits was $70,000, while $50,000 was offered for the other suit "on behalf of a client abroad." Each bid was $2,500 under the reserve price.

In the current issue of the Burlington Magazine, Charles Foulkes casts doubt upon the pedigree of the suits of armour. The Earl of Pembroke and Montgomery the 15th of his line, has published a long defence of their authenticity as having been worn by Anne de Montmorency, Constable of Frances and Louis de-Bourbon, the Duke of Montpensier, at the battle of St. Quentin in 1557.

MUSIC IN THE HOME

THE SONG AND THE SOLDIER

Incessant Demand For Music From the Trenches.

"We want bullets and mouth organs," writes Tommy Aitkins to the folks at home. The same request in all the languages of warring Europe is expressed in thousands of letters from the trenches of France and Belgium, of Russia, the Balkans and Asia. For the army of to-day needs music as much as it needs ammunition.

It is music that eases the tension of existence in riddled trenches and exposed positions and makes the long, hot march endurable. Officers, recognising the seditive influence of music in this most nerve-racking of all wars, have encouraged the men to sing and have made urgent appeals for banjos, whistles and all sorts of small instruments.

And the music itself is different from that used in other wars. No longer is it the thrilling bugle strain, the stirring trumpet call. That is now reserved for the recruiting station and the barracks at home. The man at the front gets most comfort from music of a gentler nature.

THE KIND OF SONGS THEY SING

If, as Kipling says, "The soul of a regiment is in its songs," it becomes a matter of considerable interest to study the musical preference of the various fighting armies.

With the English and Canadians the 'jolly, robust tunes are the order of the day, and "Marching through Georgia" and "John Brown's Body" vie in popularity with "Tipperary." American love songs as well as American marching songs are favourites with the "Tommies," for "the sweetest girl" is, of course, a conspicuous figure in his lyrics. Our boys, when they get over to Europe, will find the musical fare pretty much what they have long been accustomed to.

The Russian armies are unique in fighting to the accompaniment of majestic choral music. Journalists, returning from the eastern front report that one of the most inspiring experiences they have known was to hear a Russian army corps render one of these chorals. Almost all the men are gifted with fine voices. They also sing the lovely folk melodies for which their land is famous.

The German armies reflect the musical development of their country in the vast number of beautiful songs they sing. Schubert, Schumann and a host of modern composers, supply the musical needs of the Kaiser's men. And, strange as it may seem, the theme of their songs is not "blood and iron," nor even the patriotic appeal, but reveries of home life, golden haired maidens and blue-eyed children.

Love is the burden of the Frenchman's song, in war as in peace, and when he is not singing the "Marseillaise" he is chanting the praises of Fifi, or Nanon, or Lisette. If he be from Brittainy and the northern provinces his song is of a sturdier character; if he is from Picardy and the south it is sadder and more passionate.

So the armies of all nations to-day turn in their music away from the thrill and in horror of the battlefield to the home scenes and the home ties, each in its own peculiar fashion. These are the things even the staunchest comrades are loath to discuss with one another, but where speech fails, music speaks. And it is this bond of music, this socializing influence of song that, in victory or defeat, does more than anything else to confirm that feeling of brotherhood and unity that strengthens the poor human spirit for the superhuman task before it.

So it is throughout the world. Music fulfils a need nothing else can supply.

THE FALLACY OF AN OLD-AGE LIMIT.

Like the Allied Generals the Great Violin Maker did His Best Work in Mature Years.

The alleged axiom put forward some years ago to the effect that a man should be chloroformed at the age of 40, has been long ago blown to smithereens. Various observations brand such an assertion as mere piffle. No more striking example is furnished than the ages of the Allied Generals who have won their everlasting reputations in the present war. Military Chiefs in the sixties is quite the rule and even seventy and over is no barrier. One of music's very greatest contributions came from a man of mature years.

Antonio Stradivarius, reputed the greatest of violin makers, lived to the ripe old age of 93, and he remained in harness pretty well to the last. His finest works were produced when he was from 56 to 81. Stradivarius was born in 1644. As a pupil of Amati he made a few violins from the time he was 23, though he produced few in the next twenty years. It is thought that during this period he spent his time experimenting more than in actual making of fiddles. During that time, those he did make differed little form those by Amati.

But when 46, there began to appear violins of a style of all his own. These models are said to have had a greater fulness and the arching and proportions reached greater perfection. He regulated the thickness of the wood with great exactitude. His varnish was more brilliant. At the age of 56, Stradivarius left off experimenting altogether and convinced that he had reached his goal, he showed the ability of the great master in the utmost care and precision. Very rarely did Stradivarius left off experimenting at model he had evolved, and then it was only to satisfy the fad of some artist. From between 1725 and 1730 the characteristic stamp of the master is said to vanish. This is accounted for by the fact that many of these models were made only under the direction of Stradivarius, who was now a hoary headed old man. At his death there were found in his workshop many unfinished fiddles which were completed by others. Hence the uncertainty of the productions of his final period.

He only made a few violas, all of large size. His 'cellos were more numerous. In all the number of his works is estimated, at a little over 1,000. As mentioned before, the large number is accounted for by his living to a very old age and his being able to work right up until almost the last. He is reported to have acquired considerable wealth.

SHOULD THE YOUNG BEGINNER BE URGED TO PLAY FOR FRIENDS?

"You know Marguerite is only eleven, and hasn't had many lessons yet," said the proud mother to the child's uncle and aunt as she, with some difficulty urged Marguerite to play for them one of her newest exercises, which was the first one to have a sort of tune to it. After some coaxing, tinged with threatening this little girl proceeded to wade through her exercise. The parents and visiting relatives enjoyed it thoroughly. Marguerite did it unwillingly, not because of a desire to disobey or refuse to carry out her mother's wish, but because she like most children was a little shy and sensitive.

All children love music. It is their nature to break out in song when they are happy. But on the question of playing before company the wisdom of urging a small child to do this is doubted by some. No less a person than the conductor of the New York Philharmonic Society is reported on the negative side of the question. Josef Stransky says, "There is one point that would seem well for mothers to recognize and practice and that is to keep music as an individual delight for their children, and to pester them with the terrifying thought of playing for others. Many a sensitively constituted child takes ineradicable dislike to music on this very account, that is, being forced to regard it as a vehicle for show. Those not so constituted and playing well enough for people to listen to them, are likely to accumulate a goodly stock of vanity in the process. If music with children is not made a matter of forced display, and if they are led along with an attractive naturalness in its imparting, the way will be found by the child to make it a matter of happiness to others by playing for them when the proper time is reached."

There is something new in Mr. Stransky's viewpoint, and it is well worth considering.

THE DISPENSER OF MUSICAL CHEER.

One evening we drove down the road, which winds along the shore to the little house of a habitant fisherman, one Pierre. Our object was to arrange with Pierre to get his boat the next evening to go out, when the tide came in, fishing for tommycod. As we neared the house, the faint strains of a fiddler's dance music were heard in the quiet stillness of a summer night in Bonavenlure County. A few more minutes and it was apparent there was something on at Pierre's. It was a grand Soiree. Here was music and dancing. Friends and neighbors were on hand—and the Cure too. As one watched the merriment there came to mind the old fiddler in Drummond's "Le Vieux Temps."

An' w'en Bonhomme Latour commence for tune up hees fiddle,
It makes us all feel very glad—l'enfant! he plays so well,
Musique suppose to be firs' class, I offen hear, for sure
But mos' bes' man, beat all de res', is ole Bateese Latour—
An' w'en Bateese play Irish jeeg, he's learn on Mattawa
Dat tam he's head boss cook Shaintee den lettle Joe Leblanc
Tak' hole de beeg Marie Junean, an' dance upon de floor
Till Marie say "Excuse to me, I cannot dance no more"—
Away she go—horraw! horraw! plus foot Bateese, mon vieux
Camille Bisson, please watch your girl—dat's bes' t'ing you can do.
Pass on de right an' tak' your place Mamselle Des Trois Maisons
You're s'pose for dance on Paul Laberge, not Telesphore Gagnon.

The hero that night at Pierre's Soiree was the fiddler. The chief enjoyment was the dancing and the chief necessity for the dancing was the music. The old man had been a familiar figure at many a dance in those parts. He loved music. His nature responded to it. He felt what he played. And this feeling he had the faculty of imparting to others. To him his favorite instrument was more than wood and strings. It was almost human, a person, a beloved companion. His regard for it finds a parallel in the case of the proud old Scotch musician who on the occasion of a quarrel with another said: "As fer settin' fute over yer duresill, Allan Durean, sooner than do ye that honour, I'd break ma violin wi ma ain hand, an' aon that ye has ma word an' oath"—and to break his violin would be to destroy something to him second only to his dour Scotch honour.

As the fiddler played at Pierre's, one could not help seeing what an influence his music had on those guests—his friends. His music stood for something in that out-of-the-way countryside. And so every community has its current of helpful influences going out from many a humble personage, who so frequently is the dispenser of musical cheer.

Many a man is out of work for the simple reason that there is no work in him.

Peterborough Backyard Gardeners Create Demand For Bug Exterminators

The demand for insect destroyers has increased considerably this summer; according to a prominent Peterborough dealer. The fact that there is a greater demand for small quantities of paris green arsenate of lead and other spray mixtures is due to the many vacant lot gardens.

Paris green has advanced considerably in price but there has been only a slight increase in the price of other mixtures. The increase in the price o' paris green is due to the scarcity of arsenic used in its composition.

Three years ago a pound tin of paris green sold for 25 cents; last year it sold for 50 cents and this year a tin costs 65 cents.

BRITISH POSTAL DEPARTMENT HAS DONE GREAT WORK

Net Revenue of $25,000,000 Annually—Handicapped For Trained Men

LONDON, July 17.—The annual Parliamentary review of the work of the Post Office department brought out interesting facts, which suggest the great additional requirements that will be imposed on the American postal service while an American army is serving in France.

It may well be doubted whether any Government department confronts a more difficult task than the Post Office in handling the immense volume of business under difficult and unaccustomed circumstances, which is forced upon it.

The British Post Office has not only lost some 75,000 of its employees, most of them highly skilled and specialized workers, by reason of enlistment in the army, but it has been compelled to give employment to the largest possible number of men who have been injured in the service.

Notwithstanding all the handicaps of increased and difficult service, decreased staff, and the poor average character of workers, the annual report of the department is regarded as decidedly favourable.

Comparisons between the postal service of the United States and Great Britain are difficult, because it is necessary to remember that the British Post Office operates the telegraphs and telephones of the country as well as the mails. Also the parcel post business in England includes a large proportion of the service rendered in the United States by the express companies.

Net Revenue $125,000,000.

The net results of the department's operations give the Government a net revenue of about $125,000,000 annually, after paying all expenses. In addition to this, the department is a useful arm of the Government in that it collects large amounts in duties and taxes, licenses and excises, and premiums on insurance policies issued by the National Health Insurance Commissioners.

The yearly expense of the department in all its services is about $625,000,000. Since the war opened, it has been found impossible to maintain the same efficient telephone service as formerly. Nowadays it is almost impossible to get a telephone installed in an English home or office in less than six months to a year.

This is one of the inconveniences of metropolitan life. The department is unable to find men to do the work. Like everything else in the warring countries this industry must take second place to the necessities of the army, the navy and the production of munitions.

COMMANDEER BRANT HOUSE.

"His Majesty the King," Demands the Property," Read the Notice.

The first case of any "commandeering" of property by the government for the use of the returned soldiers is the taking over of the Brant House, Burlington, as reported by the Military Hospitals Commission.

Some months ago the proprietor of the hotel made an offer to the commission to lease the premises for $7,000 a year for a convalescent hospital. The commission sent its engineers out to report, and in a week a lease was prepared for the proprietor to sign. Then according to an officer of the department, the proprietor refused to sign and stated that he wanted $12,000 a year.

The next move was the sending of an officer to Ottawa to get a document which could take the premises, as the building was needed and the commission had first secured a verbal agreement.

"His Majesty the King demands the property," read the notice which the officer got from Ottawa and served on the proprietor, and now the man has to carry out the verbal agreement, which the commission claim he had made with them.

ARTHUR BALDWIN IS ENTHUSIASTIC

Says Good Tanlac Did Him is Worth More Than All the Money in Toronto

"Honestly, I never would have believed there was a medicine on earth that could help me like Tanlac has," said Arthur A. Baldwin, residing at 22 Macdonnell Avenue, Toronto, a few days ago in telling the Tanlac representative of his restoration to health. Mr. Baldwin is engaged in the rubber manufacturing business in Toronto.

"Up until the latter part of last winter I was as healthy a man as you could find anywhere, but about four months ago my health began to fail. I think it was caused by close confinement, as my work is indoors, and until a short time before my troubles began I had always been accustomed to working outdoors. I began to lose weight, and in just a few months' time I fell off 20 pounds, and I hardly had enough strength and energy to keep going. My sleep was poor and I would get up every morning all out of sorts and feeling about half dead. I couldn't take interest in my work or anything else. I had no appetite, and the little I crammed down did not agree with me and would lie in my stomach in a hard knot and would not digest. I was continually belching up sour gas and always had a bad taste in my mouth. Often I wouldn't even go to the table and would skip my meals without even noticing it. I had dizzy spells and felt right faint, and it was difficult at times for me to get my breath. I really was in no shape to work, and my will power is all that kept me on my feet. I felt like it was only a matter until I would be down and out entirely.

"My sister-in-law kept insisting that I try Tanlac. I never was much of a hand to take medicines, but I finally decided to try Tanlac, and it is nothing short of wonderful how I have improved, and I wouldn't take all the money in Toronto for the good this medicine has done me. I am now on my third bottle. I have a fine appetite, can eat anything that I want and everything agrees with me perfectly. The gas on my stomach and sourness has been overcome and I am no longer bothered with that hard knot in the pit of my stomach. I sleep good, and while I haven't weighed recently, I know I have gained considerably in weight, and I feel much stronger and better in every way. In fact, my troubles have all been overcome, and I feel it my duty to make this statement so others who are suffering like I did may know about this remarkable medicine."

Former 109th Battalion Man Is Drowned

LINDSAY, July 18.—Private Castle, of London, England, (who enlisted with the 109th, in Lindsay), a returned soldier, passed through all the horrors of war in France, and was invalided to the Ira A. Kipp convalescent home, near Gananoque, only to be drowned a short distance from the shore, and with him in the calm waters of the St. Lawrence, Miss Campbell, a nursing sister of South Orange, N.J., also perished. Another girl reached shore. Their boat was capsized when the three tried to change places, while boating, late Tuesday afternoon.

The two bodies were recovered and Miss Campbell's will be shipped to her home at South Orange, Wednesday. Major Birdsall of the hospitals commission, Kingston, wired relatives of Castle in London.

Mr. W. J Carlisle, Secretary of the Soldiers' Aid Commission, received a telegram this morning asking for information concerning Castle's relatives or friends. Several in town remembered the dead soldier, and it is believed he came to Lindsay from an outside point to enlist.

THIS IS LATEST. TEMPERANCE EVASION

KINGSTON, July 19.—In order to evade the Temperance Act the latest thing here is a tiny bottle which contains "one swallow" as the tipplers refer to it, or one drink. These are carried in the pocket and as the carrier gets dry he drinks the liquor and throws the bottle away and thus he is not caught with the goods.

Woman Victim of Sand Point Shooting Likely To Recover.

ARNPRIOR, Ont., July 19. — Mrs. Leitch, the widow of Lieut. Bruce M. Leitch, the victim of the Sand Point shooting, had considerably improved yesterday. Excellent hopes are now held out for her recovery and she will be taken to Montreal for hospital treatment.

An inquest was opened this morning on the body of Lieut. Leitch. Nothing new developed. William Bennett, who did the shooting because Leitch had won and married his former sweetheart, is still in a critical condition in the Arnprior Hospital.

WAR VETERANS' MOVE TO SAVE THE PUBLIC FROM BEING EXPLOITED

TORONTO, June 17.— A delegation of the Great War Veterans' Association, consisting of Mr. E. R. Whitton, president; Mr. W. E. Turley, secretary; and Mr. J. J. Shanahan, treasurer, waited on the Board of Police Commissioners at their fortnightly meeting this afternoon and requested that instructions be given the police to exercise greatest vigilance in investigating cases of alleged misrepresentation by returned soldiers or others, and who sell goods or publications on the strength of their infirmities, resulting from wounds, or misrepresent themselves as agents for the Great War Veterans' Association, Military Hospitals Commission or other such organizations. The delegates claimed that returned soldiers were being exploited by firms or the sents, the veterans being employed as tools for the disposal of articles, oods and publications of practically no value.

Public is Sympathetic.

The statement of the delegates in part was that the public, believing they were helping a returned soldier, purchased far more readily than they otherwise would, not knowing that the firm was capturing nearly all the profits. The delegates cited numerous cases. They asked that the commissioners co-operate with them and assist in stamping out the evil. The Commissioners were asked to do all they could to maintain the dignity of the returned soldier and conserve the respect of the public for the men who have "done their bit." Those soldiers who had transgressed had been easily led.

Unfortunately there were many firms and people who realised that the returned soldier salesman makes a double appeal to the buying public on account of his wounds. Seemingly reputable firms employ returned soldiers to hawk publications of questionable nature and value. It seems, claimed Messrs. Whitton, Turley and Shanahan, that a certain class of agents and firms use returned soldiers to create a feeling of aversion against them as a class, by having them appeal to the public for money without giving value for the same or honestly stating the purpose for which money is desired. The firms to blame have been very careful in the wording of anything they write or publish and so far it has been practically impossible to get after them.

"Get the Business."

An instance of how the agent of one firm in Meaford, Ont., instructed returned soldier employes to solicit the public was cited. The delegates said they could furnish names if necessary. The soldiers were told: "Now you fellows, remember that this country owes you more than you can ever get. Go out and hustle them. Tell them you were shot in the stomach, gassed—anything at all. Get the business. If you can cry, so much the better. Tears bring money. Go to it, and don't forget it."

"Now, gentlemen," continued the spokesman of the delegates to the Police Commissioners, "we are not imagining things. Similar words are being repeated every day in all parts of Canada. Firms have covered Ontario with men who have been instructed to adopt the tactics outlined to you. Petty trinkets have been hawked by men who have told similar stories. People whose sons are at the front have been made the special prey of these returned soldiers and the firms employing them. Entering a town or village, the agents quickly make themselves acquainted with the residents who have a personal interest in the war through some one dear to them being on the firing line. We respectfully submit that the Board should do all in its power to put an end to this intolerable situation."

The Commissioners promised their assistance, and if sufficient proof can be secured, charges may be laid in the Police Court.

German Diplomatic Representatives at Christiania Dismissed by New Imperial Chancellor.

AMSTERDAM, July 19.— Chancellor Michaelis has recalled the German diplomatic representatives at Christiania and retired them from the service, according to official word received here. Presumably this action is taken as a result of the Norwegian bomb plots discovered by the arrest of Baron Rautenfeld, German diplomatic agent.

Government Will Soon Give a Decision Respecting the O'Connor Cold Storage Report.

OTTAWA, July 19.—Archie McCoig asked before the orders of the day were called in the Commons, what action the Government intended to take on the O'Connor cold storage report. Sir George Foster said the matter was under the consideration of the Government and action would be announced shortly.

Canada is a vigorous young domain, its resources hardly touched. What it needs is builders and farmers and manufacturers, men who can forward industry and commerce. What it needs least of all is a titled race to reap the rewards of the efforts of others, and it is a hopeful sign that Canada appreciates that fact.

AUTHORITIES ARE AFTER LUBIN WAS IN PETERBOROUGH SUNDAY

Man Who "Touched" a Number of Lindsay Residents, Spent Sunday in Peterboro'—Local Police Have Been Notified

LINDSAY, July 19.—G. A. Lubin, wanted in the Town of Lindsay, for theft and fraud. Description: Nationality, French-Canadian, speaks English with a French accent; occupation, clerk, or bookkeeper. Has been working at the Arsenal here as a machinist; height, about five feet six inches; weight, about 160 lbs.; fair hair, fresh complexion, blue eyes; twenty-seven years of age; walks erect, clean shaven, nice congenial fellow to talk to, fond of society, especially the ladies. Dressed in navy blue serge suit, cuffs on the pants; white fedora panama hat, black boots, new. Arrest, Hold and wire.

The above is a description of the affable, smooth-tongued French-Canadian, whose whereabouts is sought by Chief Short, and whose record, while in town, was referred to on Tuesday. The Chief is mailing the description to all the leading police centres in the country, and it is expected Lubin will be run to earth before many days.

Lubin took the 8.15 G.T.R. train out of Lindsay on Saturday evening, and went as far as Peterborough. He put up at the Munro House and spent Sunday in the city. A Lindsay man, who registered at the hotel Sunday, states that Lubin went to his room about 11 o'clock, but when the Lindsay man went to call him Monday morning it was found that his bed was not disturbed. He had taken the midnight C.P.R. train on Sunday for the East, and it is believed to have headed for Montreal.

Some of those from whom Lubin borrowed money totalled up the loans on Tuesday and it was shown that he had secured over $200 by this means. One man was "touched" for $35.00, and another for $27.00. Lubin was an entire stranger to the Quebecers in town and was not known in the citadel city.

Two Pictures For Council To Consider

Picture No. 1—Time, winter, year 1916-17. Place, Peterborough, Ont.

Peterborough City, a lovely town—very modern in some ways, and not so modern in many more ways, with a beautiful river running through it, many death traps made by the Government and companies along its course.

A great agitation lasting several months, several citizens writing letters in the press, meetings held, household conversations and public meetings with the topic discussed thoroughly, that of having suitable supervised swimming places.

Employers of labour in factories taking or sending petitions to employees to sign, merchants, doctors, and people in every walk of life signing a petition.

Three or four deputations being asked by our accommodating and obliging Council to meet them some evening.

A certain evening appointed, certain deputations other than the swimming beach deputation all there together.

Other deputations heard first and were promised consideration, some of them with only a few hours' formation.

Swimming beach petition the last to be heard, presenting their views and a largely signed petition.

They were also promised consideration.

One by one all the other deputations were granted consideration.

The swimming beach deputations were notified to have more meetings before committees of councilmen.

One afternoon the deputation met the specially selected Council committee, and at the same time two other citizens met the Council to block the grant as asked for to provide accommodations. Their argument was this.

It was not a patriotic movement; it was not a deputation asking for this composed entirely of taxpayers.

Arguments from petitioners were that it was the duty of the people at home to care for the soldiers' families, and that the soldiers are not taxpayers.

Meeting closed. Aldermen in attendance very nervous. Other business to attend to. Congenial goodbye. See you later.

Picture No. 2—Time, July 18th, 1917. Place, Peterborough. River at end of Douro Street.

A bundle of clothes — on river bank — examined and found to be those of a young man, Employee No. 38, not registered at the Leonard Construction Co.'s building operations.

Conclusion:

A proper swimming place, with a caretaker, would have prevented this, most likely.

What was the value of this young man's life? What of others?

The Council not doing anything to recover the body of this poor, friendless boy. You cannot expect them to do so when they have no interest in the living that go swimming.

MILITARY NEWS

up till now. We go to church every chance we get and also to Holy Communion every time we go to church. I have been there three times now since Easter and every chance I get I go so you need not worry much about me for I suppose we have to take things as they come and make the best of it. I guess things have changed quite a bit in Peterborough since I left it, but it won't take it long to get settled down again after the war. There are good times coming yet for some of us anyway.

My Dear Father I guess I have told you about all for this time, but will write to you every chance I get. I won't wait till I get an answer like I have been doing but will drop a line any old time at all, so I say goodbye, hoping to hear from you soon and will close with best love and respect to all. I remain,

YOUR SON JACK.

P.S. "Put A Co., on your letters."

The Examiner has received the following letter form a former member of the 247th Battalion:

June 26, 1917.

Just a little letter which I feel it is my duty to write and let you and the people of Peterborough know that we are still in Blighty and don't feel any the worse of it, although our Battalion was sadly broken up and scattered all over England. We hung together as much as possible, but to our sorrow have had to part. I suppose old Peterborough is just the same as ever, pretty dead. Well I tell you it can't be any deader than this place is. I saw an old pal here the other day, Pte. Cecil Kylie of East City. He sure does look good. He was up to Sandling when I saw him. We left there the day after, but I sure had a great old talk with Cecil. I met a few of the old 93rd Battalion boys, Pte. Dick Lynch of No. 4 platoon, one of our old-time boys, and a few others, including an old north-ender, Pte. Norman Allison, formerly of the Belmont battery. Norman looked fine, and I tell you I sure was surprised to see him wheeling up the street. I looked twice before I spoke. I also saw a number of Peterborough boys with the 93nd Battalion whom I cannot name. Also saw a number of 93rd officers who got a Blighty and were sent overseas, and I sure was surprised to see them. Got a letter from Bill to-day. He is still fine and had to leave poor little John at Sandling, but I managed to keep Philip with me. The news here is scarce. I remain,

DYNAMITING HAIR SEALS.

Novel Means Adopted to Destroy Salmon Killers in B.C.

The European war has furnished an idea to the provincial authorities, says a Vancouver despatch, who have for years been seeking to exterminate the hair seals which kill enormous quantities of salmon at the mouth of the Fraser. Note was taken of the favourite basking places of the seals on the Fraser sandheads.

One of these was mined with high explosives and charges of metal were placed in cans below the surface of the sand, which the next high tide smoothed over. At low tide the seals returned to their places in the sun and were not disturbed.

The next day nearly 200 seals gathered on the sands and the explosive was touched off by a battery from which wires led to the seal ground. The explosion killed every seal.

Other blasts will be set off, for this is the big sockeye salmon year and protection of the run is vital.

KING AT CANADIAN'S GRAVE.

His Majesty Expressed Regret that any had to be Marked, 'Unknown.'

London, July 17. — During the King's recent visit to Vimy Ridge, says the Times correspondent, what most engaged his attention were the scattered graves with which the ridge is dotted. Wherever a cross marked the resting place of soldiers, the King went to inspect. Before one grave, "To an Unknown Canadian," he stood for a long time. The grave was well tended, with flowers rising to wreathe a broken trench helmet, with which the cross was surmounted.

"It is heard that any of these brave fellows should be unknown," he said. The world ought to know every one of them."

More than once His Majesty expressed appreciation of the careful, reverent way in which the dead are buried.

LETTER FROM PRIVATE ECOBISHON

Peterboro' Soldier is With the Headquarters Staff in France

Private Percy Ecobichon, writing from "Somewhere in France," to his parents, Aylmer street, sends the welcome news that he is well and with the headquarters staff at present. The following verses, enclosed by the young warrior, must express the sentiment of many of the lads at the front. May the wishes soon be granted:

"JUST FOR TO-NIGHT."

Backward, turn backward, oh Time in thy flight,
Take me to Canada just for to-night,
Far, far away from the noise of this war,
Where machine guns rattle and big guns roar;
Back where it's peaceful, quiet and serene,
Away from these trenches and all that they mean,
Back where, instead of the shriek of a shell
We hear peaceful noises and know all is well.

The memory of home is in my mind now
As I sit dreaming, I oft think of how
My mother caressed me and called me her boy;
What does she think now of her own pride and joy?
He's fighting for freedom, for home, and for right,
And the Kaiser is fighting against him for might;
That's why I wish while through trenches I climb,
That I could but reverse the great hand of Time;
And while I'm writing these lines that I might
Return to thee, Canada, just for to-night.

Just to be home, just for one peaceful night,
Away from the worries and trials of this fight,
Away from the Kultur, away from the crime,
Away from the trenches, shell holes and slime;
Must I keep dreaming and longing in vain
To stroll down the path with my sweetheart again,
And once more to love and be loved as of yore,
Oh, God! Isn't that what You gave us life for?

Could I but to-night, while big guns roar,
Knock and be welcomed at mother's front door,
Be kissed once again by those dear lips so rare
And once again fondle the now silvery hair,
See dad on the doorstep enjoying the breeze,
With two kiddies claiming the use of his knees,
Then would I flee from this ghastly sight
And return to thee, Canada, just for to-night.

No honour that's gained on the battlefields here
Can compare with the love of the ones we hold dear,
Their true love embodying all that is best,
Take me back, Father Time, to my home in the west,
Away from this land that is barren and cursed,
Where the bold lust brings out in man all that is worst,
Oh! just for one night to be back home again,
Where is peace on earth and good will to all men.

Oh God! who is watching dear Canada's best,
Fighting, dying and lying in rest;
Instil in us courage to fight the good fight
And at length know the triumph of right over might.
(As I sit penning this very poor theme
I wonder if Time, like an ever flowing stream,
Will ever turn back in its merciless flight
And take me to Canada just for to-night.

Signaller P. Ecobichon.

BLIGHT ON LOCAL POTATOES SAYS GOVERMENT EXPERT

Examined Mr. John Riddell's Patch on Homewood Avenue and Advised Use of Bordeaux Mixture—A Preventive of Many Ills of the Garden.

The presence of a potato blight has been verified by Mr. George Partridge of the Department of Agriculture, Ottawa, who examined yesterday the garden of Mr. John Riddell, Homewood Avenue. A short time ago Mr. Riddell suspected that all was not well with his potatoes, and sent a package of the stocks to Ottawa for analysis. In reply, it was stated that a representative of the department would visit Peterborough shortly and the plants would be examined on the ground.

Mr. Partridge arrived yesterday, and after visiting the Riddell garden unhesitatingly declared that a blight had settled on the patch. It was revealed in some of the hills which were of a sickly green colour, and the growth of the stocks had been retarded. It was stated that this was probably due to some weakness in the seed. Mr. Partridge strongly advised spraying with Bordeaux mixture, and the sooner this work was done the better for the crop, which is otherwise unusually promising.

Bordeaux should be used every ten days or two weeks until the end of August to obtain the best results.

Mr. Riddell referred to the precautions of a neighbour, Mr. Jonathan Smith, who began spraying his potatoes when the stocks were a few inches above the ground. He has continued the applications throughout the season, and as a result possesses a crop that is vigorous, richly coloured and the foliage without a blemish. Mr Smith is a firm believer in the efficaciousness of Bordeaux mixture and recommends it for the prevention of what may be termed fungus blights on all garden plants. He sprayed his rose bushes and other shrubs which have come through the attacks of mildew without a sign of it. The foliage is almost in perfect condition in contrast with the shrivelled condition of some of his neighbours' plants.

The Bordeaux formula is one pound of copper sulphate dissolved in one gallon of water, and one pound of unslacked lime, dissolved in a gallon of water in a separate container. The bluestone is diluted by adding four gallons of water, and the lime diluted to the same extent. Both ingredients are then mixed in one vessel, making a total quantity of ten gallons of Bordeaux. For larger quantities the ingredients are proportionately increased. This should be put on the plants in a fine spray.

Mr. Riddell stated that he was informed that some of the most promising hills might be marked, and their potatoes kept for next year's seed, unless there was an assurance of otherwise obtaining good seed for next year.

If it is desired to poison the Bordeaux mixture, paris green or arsenate of lead should be added. This is particularly applicable to potato plants at the present time. The warning which Mr. Riddell's precautions have evoked should be heeded by householders who proudly regard their potato patches in their present promise of a big crop.

Peterborough, July 19th, 1917.

Editor Examiner, City:

Dear Sir,—J. H. Burnham has sent a telegram of a great many words, telling how he is amused at the gossip of two French barbers, discussing the fact that an Irishman is an oppressor.

The next thing we can expect J. H. Burnham will tell us will be some of the gossip he has heard from the cab drivers in Ottawa.

If J. H. Burnham would get down to brass tacks and arrange to have the government pay half the cost of the high level bridge he would be doing more good than he has ever done since he has been in Ottawa, earning eight dollars a day and having an easy time with his feet on the table. Mr. Burnham says that the fate of Canada hangs on a balance if there is a general election. He need not worry about this. The only fate that hangs on a balance is that of a few rake-off men like Allison and his friends.

Yours truly,

VOTER.

LOWER PRICES FOR FARM PRODUCE

Merchants Buy Below Prices Quoted on the Market

The prices of farm produce have been lowered considerably during the last two weeks and the merchants are enabled to buy at lower prices than are quoted at the market, which prices are the highest in the district.

Eggs this week were bought at 30 to 33 cents per dozen.

Dairy butter at 30-35c. per lb.

Creamery butter, 35c. per lb.

In Lakefield, nine miles north of the city, eggs have sold for three weeks for 28c. per doz.

Salmon Sausage Now.

Salmon sausage will be a new form of food to be shortly placed upon the market by a Fraser river company which has recently been incorporated.

Rebuilding The Court House Well Under Way

New Roof Will Be Flat—Will Construct a Basement

The process of rebuilding the Court House, burnt when the cornice caught fire under the iron roof on December 19th, is going steadily ahead under the direction of Mr. Wm. Blackwell, architect, and Finnie & Gordon, contractors, who at present have eleven labourers, two stone masons and one carpenter employed.

Changes in Building.

The new or altered Court House will be built on the old lines, with slight alterations in the plan. On the old lines there was no basement. This is being corrected by a deep cellar under the offices of the Court House, and which will be finished in the course of a week.

The walls, which are slightly weakened by the fire, (Messers. Finnie & Gordon found, after a thorough investigation, strong and firm, and will be completed by a fire wall. The roof, which is to be flat, will be tar and gravel.

Completed in December.

The building and renovating will be completed at the end of the year, provided the steel trusses ordered at the Dominion Bridge Works in Toronto, are delivered as scheduled. The trusses, costing $2,000, are the only materials ordered from outside the city. The stone used in the foundation is river stone from the Otonabee.

Clearings for week ending July 19, 1917, $672,504; same week last month, $807,833; same week last year $495,142; same week two years ago, $331,759.

Anti-conscription Letter Writer No Longer a Munitioner.

BRANTFORD, July 18. — The upshot of C. L. Henderson's letter to Mayor Martin of Montreal, supporting the anti-conscriptionists, is that he is no longer an employee of the munitions plant of the Steel Company of Canada here. He drew his final pay after receiving the suggestion from the superintendent that it was ready for him if he wanted it, though Henderson claims that he was told to go and get it.

Cavan Farmer Seriously Hurt

Mr. H. A. Earle Who is Well Known in Peterboro' Could Not Hold His Runaway Team

Mr. H. A. Earle, a farmer of the 4th concession of Cavan, and a brother-in-law of Mr. James T. C. Lang, was seriously injured on Tuesday evening, when he was run over by a reaper. While cutting hay his spirited team took fright at the noise of a passing waggon that rattled along the road. They bolted across the field, and although Mr. Earle clung to the reins and used every effort to check them, he was unable to subdue them. He attempted to jump clear of the machine, but instead, fell beneath it. One of the wheels passed over his body above the waist, breaking a number of ribs and causing a congestion of blood in one lung. Dr. Turner of Millbrook is attending him, and it was stated today that his condition could not be exactly learned.

WEDDING BELLS

DEGEN—HAYTON.

A very quiet wedding took place at the parsonage of the George street Methodist church last evening when the Rev. A. Thomas, M.A., B.D., united in marriage Ellen Elizabeth Hayton, daughter of Mrs. McGee, Sherbrooke street, and George Albert Degen, son of Mr. J. F. Degen, one of the city firemen.

The couple were unattended and after the ceremony repaired to the residence of the bride's mother, where a wedding breakfast was served to about thirty-five friends and relatives, including the members of the Fire Department. Mr. and Mrs. Degen will reside at 348 Aylmer street.

MILITARY NEWS

Following the regular weekly meeting of the Army and Navy Veterans, which was held on Monday evening, a large committee met at the quarters last night for the purpose of securing a piece of property in the city for the erection of a soldiers' memorial club. This building will be erected to the memory of the soldiers from this city who have taken part in the present great war, and will have a large place for meetings with recreation rooms. The committee were out to-day looking over two sites, and will take an option on one of the sites at once. Just as soon as the deal can be closed, building will commence, and the returned soldiers will have a place which they will always own.

The work of the Veterans has grown to such an extent that proper offices are now demanded with modern filing cabinets in order to successfully carry on the work. The Veterans have every encouragement to go on with their building operations, which they will do, confident of success in carrying out the enterprise.

THE RESTLESS SEX.

Robert W. Chambers's great new novel in Cosmopolitan is making a hit. Everyone is talking about it. If you haven't started "The Restless Sex," begin with the second instalment in August Cosmopolitan.

You will find the story of Stephanie Quest one of the most absorbing novels you have ever read. It is one of Mr. Chambers's best works.

It is not only a novel of ingenius plot construction, but it is a great narrative of a girl's struggle against man-made conventions.

Get August Cosmopolitan to-day. It is full of great stories and great pictures by the foremost writers and artists of to-day.

IN MEMORIAM.

In loving memory of our dear mother, Matilda Fanning, who departed this life July 19, 1916:

Sleep on, dear mother,
Thy labour o'er,
Thy willing hands will work no more.

'Twas God's own will;
He thought it best
To take thee home;
With Him to rest.

Dragging The River For Body Of Young Man Believed Drowned

Further Enquiry Discloses His Identity—Harry Cubitt a Resident of Peterboro' For Seven or Eight Years

The body of Harry Cubitt who is presumed to have been drowned while bathing in the river opposite Douro street during the Wednesday noon hour, had not been recovered up to three o'clock this afternoon.

It was learned to-day that the missing man had been a resident of Peterborough for seven or eight years, and during the greater part of that time had boarded with Mr. Joseph Collins, 266 Munroe avenue, Ashburnham. He was born in England, and brought up in a home for boys. There are no relatives of his in Canada, but it is understood that he has a brother with the British forces in France.

Cubitt was about twenty-three years old. He had been working with the Leonard Construction Company since April 18th. Usually he ate his dinner with Mr. Harry Flinders, 61 Smith street. Yesterday was no exception to that practice, and the two men climbed the hill above the Quaker Oats Company, and after dinner Cubitt expressed his intention of going in for a bathe. Flinders declined to accompany him, and Cubitt set out for the swimming beach at the foot of Douro street. He was last seen crossing the bridge at the power house. He left his coat, overalls and dinner box where he had rested, his other clothing were found on the shore at the swimming place.

Searching Last Night.

It was stated that Cubitt was doubtless seized by a cramp when he entered the water only a few minutes after his midday meal. At any rate, his drowning was generally accepted, and searching parties dragged the river until late last night without success. Yesterday afternoon, P. C. Wigg obtained a big Klondyke canoe from the Peterborough Canoe Company and the grappling irons from Lock No. 7, and pulled up the river to Douro street. Mr. George Foster, Mr. Collins, P. C. Wigg and others searched for the body last night, and this afternoon Mr. W. H. Denham of the Quaker Oats Company, engaged two men to continue the search.

BODY FOUND.

The body of Harry Cubitt was recovered at ten minutes to four this afternoon.

MUNITION INSPECTOR WINS.

Not Subject to Shop Discipline when in Factory Carrying out Contracts.

Toronto, July 18. — That an inspector under the Imperial Munitions Board has a right to be present in a factory carrying out contracts for the board, and that he is not subject to "shop discipline" was the ruling upheld by Judge Morson to-day, when he dismissed with costs the appeal of J. J. Scollan against the conviction of Magistrate Kingsford. On June 15th, Scollan was fined $5 or ten days, for assaulting Owen Hurst, an inspector under the Imperial Munitions Board.

Scollan, who is the general superintendent of the Canadian Allis-Chalmers Co., had requested Hurst to stop reading a newspaper in the factory, as it was against the rules. When Hurst refused to obey the order he was ejected by Scollan.

Why Wait for 'War to learn real food values? It is what you digest, not what you eat, that furnishes strength for the day's work. Many foods tax the digestive powers to the utmost without supplying much real nutriment. Shredded Wheat Biscuit is all food and in a form that is easily digested. It is 100 per cent. whole wheat. For breakfast, dinner or supper it takes the place of meat, eggs and potatoes. You don't know how easily you can do without meat or potatoes until you try it. Delicious with sliced bananas, berries, or other fruits, and milk.

EXEMPTIONS ARE LEFT TO THE TRIBUNALS

Sir Robert Borden Withdraws Proposal That Divinity Students Be Exempted—Its Inclusion in Bill Might Result in Rush to Theological Colleges

PROVISION IS BROAD

OTTAWA, July 20. — The House again went into committee of the whole on the Military Service Bill yesterday afternoon.

Charles Marcil asked if there was anything on the bill to provide for a delay of some time to permit a professional man to wind up his business before being taken. Mr. Meighen declared that there was.

Hon. Rudolphe Lemieux brought up the question of insurance premiums. The companies, he said, raised premiums for men going to war. This increase might in many cases mean that a man would have to drop his premium and lose the advantage of all that he had already paid. He asked if the Government would not either make up the extra cost or provide for a maximum rate beyond which the insurance companies would not charge. Many honorable gentlemen had received a letter along this line.

Hon. George P. Graham stated that insurance companies were for the protection of a vast number of widows or orphans and they must maintain themselves in a position to carry out their contracts. Insurance premiums taken out before the war had not been subjected to increase for war risks. New policies, however, contained a war-risk clause. In fact few of the companies cared to take war risks.

Mr. Graham had no objection to the Government assuming the extra cost, but if the Government undertook to fix rates it might as well put the companies out of business. He protested against such a course being taken.

Hon. Dr. Pugsley asked whether it was true that the United States had undertaken to insure all men for $4,000, the Government paying the premium.

Sir Robert said that the Minister of Finance had been absent until noon yesterday. He would bring the matter to his attention. It was not a matter which could be dealt with in the bill. Neither could it be dealt with by imposing on the companies a maximum rate. This would bring about disaster.

Sir Robert Borden did not think that the United States had undertaken to insure all men.

Leave Clause Unchanged.

Sir Robert Borden moved that the clause exempting clergy and divinity students be reconsidered. On further consideration, he said, it was found that the words "divinity students" included a wider body of persons than at first consideration. Moreover, it covered a class of those who would not desire exemption. It was suggested that these students be left with other students to take advantage of exemption which might be permitted in the tribunals. He moved that the clause be left as before without the inclusion of divinity students.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier questioned the meaning of the word "clergy." He declared that the two great denominations, Anglican and Roman Catholic, had ordained priests whom they called the clergy. Did the word in the Act also apply to ministers of Presbyterian, Baptist, and other dissenting bodies?

Sir Robert Borden declared that ministers of all recognized denominations were included. He thought that the word "clergy" should be used in the meaning "given in the Standard dictionary."

Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux declared that in the United States there was a clause exempting divinity students. He thought it should remain in this Act.

Sir Robert thought it were better to have the exemption left to the tribunals rather than to make a broad provision.

Mr. Lemieux referred to the qualification in the class providing that orders, whose ministers should be exempted should be "exclusively religious" in character He declared that the Trappist Monks, though a religious body also gave their attention to farming. Would they be exempted?

Mr. Lemieux did not think that any harm would be done by adopting the same course as the United States. It had been declared that it might result in a rush to theological colleges, but the exemption might be confined to those who took up theology before the act was passed.

Irish Members Have Done Duty In World War

Major Redmond's death in battle has made a noticeable difference to the mood of the House of Commons towards an Irish settlement. It is noted that two of the most brilliant Nationalias in the House have fallen in this cause—Major Redmond (or, as men still cannot help but call him, Willie Redmond) and Professor T. M. Kettle. But there has been a review of the service and losses on both sides by the London correspondent of the Manchester Guardian.

Mr. John Redmond has lost his brother, but he has still a son who is at this moment in the heart of the fighting—Captain W. A. Redmond. Some time ago Captain Redmond, through an accident in the trenches, had a shoulder bone broken, and for some part of the time of his recovery he was again a familiar figure in the House. He is now back again in the fighting line. Then there is Captain Stephen Gwynn, who is serving in the Leinsters. Another Nationalist member who is serving is Captain Esmonde. Mr. Hugh Law has a son in the fighting—Lieutenant Law. Mr. William O'Malley, brother-in-law of Mr. T. P. O'Connor, has had a son killed. Sir Thomas Esmonde's gallant young midshipman son went down with his ship at Jutland. Captain D. D. Sheehan, one of the O'Brienite members, has two sons in the army. One of them was terribly wounded at Gallipoli, and the other received the Military Cross from the King at the Hyde Park investiture the other day. This is an imperfect record from memory of the personal service and sacrifice of the Nationalist members.

The Irish Unionist members have a notable record. The first member of Parliament to fall in this war was Captain Arthur O'Neill. He was succeeded in the House by his brother, Captain Hugh O'Neil, and he in turn is now in the fighting line. Sir Robert MacCalmont is, or was until lately, the youngest general in the Army. Sir Edward Carson has one or two sons fighting. Mr. Hugh Barrie has lost a son. The Lord Chief Justice of Ireland (until lately Mr. James Campbell) has a son fighting. Mr. Wm. Moore and Mr. MacCraw both have sons fighting. Mr. Robert Thompson has a son serving. Mr. Mitchell-Thompson is on military service. Mr. Coote's son was invalided home recently and underwent an operation and Major Kerr-Smiley is on service abroad.

WHEAT PRICES UP SIX CENTS

Ontario Flour Up Another Twenty-Five Cents—The Cattle Market

Another strong bull wheat market sent prices sky-flying again yesterday, July wheat at Chicago going up to $2.41 at the high point, and closing at $2.40, an advance of 14c above Wednesday's close. The October option at Winnipeg closed 11c up from Wednesday's close, after having reached up to $2.30 at the high, or 18c above the close, Wednesday, yesterday's closing price being $2.23. Alarmist reports of crop damage from drought in the spring wheat belt are understood to be responsible for the excited buying. Ontario flour was boosted another 25c higher yesterday.

Cattle Markets.

Union Stock Yards — Receipts 38 cars, with 599 cattle, 59 calves, 935 hogs, and 411 sheep and lambs.

Good active market and everything cleaned up at steady prices. There were several small lots of extra choice stable cattle in, and these sold strong from $11.85 to $12.50, three steers at the latter price. There was a fair run of cattle and small stuff in for a Thrusday market. Quality was mixed, but anything good held firm at this week's prices.

Good butcher cows were slightly firmer.

There is a good market and fair demand for choice quality stockers and feeders.

Sheep and lambs steady.

Calves steady.

Hogs steady at $15.75, fed and watered.

Use Cocoanut Oil For Washing Hair

If you want to keep your hair in good condition, be careful what you wash it with.

Don't use prepared shampoos or anything else, that contains too much alkali. This dries the scalp, makes the hair brittle, and is very harmful. Just plain mulsified cocoanut oil (which is pure and entirely greaseless), is much better than anything else you can use for shampooing, as this can't possibly injure the hair.

Simply moisten your hair with water and rub it in. One or two teaspoonfuls will make an abundance of rich, creamy, lather, and cleanses the hair and scalp thoroughly. The lather rinses out easily, and removes every particle of dust, dirt, dandruff and excessive oil. The hair dries quickly and evenly, and it leaves it fine and silky, bright, fluffy and easy to manage.

You can get mulsified cocoanut oil at most any drug store. It is very cheap and a few ounces is enough to last everyone in the family for months.

OF INTEREST TO FARMERS

Reports from various parts of the country indicate the flush of egg production is past and in consequence receipts are declining rapidly at consuming centres.

When draft mares are used for farm work, the income from the sale of colts each year makes the cost of horse labour much less than when the work is done by geldings.

The hog makes a mature product quicker than any four-legged animal, and in these strenuous times should be the mainstay in our efforts to increase meat supplies.

Cultivation of the corn is as essential in a damp season as a dry one. In a dry season it conserves moisture and in a damp one it prevents compacting on the soil.

J. D. McGregor, Brandon, seeded a field to sweet clover last year. It wintered well, says The Northwest Farmer, and has been pastured by sheep up to the present time. They seemed to relish this pasture as well as any other, and the sweet clover withstood the pasturing well.

With a shortage of more than 1,000,000 hogs this year at the eleven principal markets of the United States, as compared with last year, coupled with the high dressing percentage of the porker, as compared with the sheep or the steer, it would seem that the top is not yet.

In the management of the dairy cows it is very important that the milking be done at regular periods. That is at the same hour night and morning as nearly as possible. The more equally the twenty-four hours are divided in which the milking is done twice, the more uniform will be the quantity and the quality of the milk produced.

"The Postmaster's Daughter"

By LOUIS TRACY

"Yes. That's so," said the detective instantly. "Never mind. It's a fairly decent world taken en bloc, I ought to speak with authority. I see enough of the seamy side of it, goodness knows. Now, forewarned is forearmed. Don't be nervous. Don't take risks. Everything will come all right in time. Remember, I'm not far away in an emergency. Should I chance to be absent if you need advice, send for Mr. Franklin. You can easily devise some official excuse, a mislaid letter, or an error in a telegram."

"I think I shall feel confident if both of you are near, and the ghost of a smile lit Doris's wan features.

"We're a marvellous combination," grinned Furneaux, reverting at once to his normal impishness. "I am all brain; he is all muscle. Such an alliance prevails against the ungodly."

"Is Mr. Grant in any danger?" inquired Doris suddenly.

"No."

The two looked into each other's eyes. Doris was eager to ask a question which Furneaux dared her to put. The detective won. She sighed.

"Very well," she said. "I'm to behave. Am I to regard myself as a decoy duck?"

"A duck, anyhow."

She laughed lightly. Furneaux would vouchsafe no further information, it would appear. For a girl of nineteen, Doris was uncommonly gifted with clear, analytical reasoning powers.

The detective returned to the Hare and Hounds, and went upstairs. He met Peters on the landing.

"The devil!" he cried.

"My dear pal!" retorted the journalist.

"Are you living here?"

"Why not?"

"Why not, indeed? Where the eagles are there is the carcase."

"Your mis-quotation is offensive."

"It was so intended."

"Come and have a drink."

"No."

"I say, 'yes.' You'll thank me on your bended knees afterwards. The South American gent is having the time of his life. I've just been to my room for Whitaker's Almanac wherewith a certain Don Walter Hart purposes flooring him."

Wally Hart had, indeed, succeeded in running to earth the Argentine magnate, and was giving Winter a most uncomfortable quarter of an hour.

"Ha!" shouted Hart, when Furneaux came in with Peters. "Here's the pocket marvel who'll answer any question straight off. What is the staple export of Argentine?"

"How often have you been there?" demanded the detective dryly.

"Six times."

"And you've lived there?" This to Winter.

"Yes," glowered the big man, fearing the worst.

"Then the answer is 'fools,'" cackled Furneaux.

Wally laughed. He had remembered, just in time, that he had no right to claim acquaintance with the representative of Scotland Yard, and there were some farmers present, each of whom had a "likely animal" to offer the buyer of blood stock.

"Glad, I think you are right," he said.

"You wanted me to say 'sheep,' I suppose?"

"Got it, at once."

"As though one valuable horse was not worth a thousand sheep."

"Just what my friend, Don Manoel Alcorta, of Los Andes ranch, Catamarca, always held," put in Winter drawing the bow at a venture.

Hart cocked an eye at him.

"Sir," he said, "I would take off my hat, if I were one in Steynholme, to any man who claims the friendship of Don Manoel Alcorta, a sincere patriot. I suggest that we crack a bottle to his immortal memory."

"My doctor forbids me to touch wine," said Winter mournfully.

"But these bucolic breeders of browns and bays employ wiser medicos, I'll go bail. Landlord, a quart of the best, and six out, as they say in London."

Six glasses were duly filled with champagne. When it was consumed, Hart buttonholed Peters.

"A word with you, scribe," he said. "Good-day, gentlemen, I leave you to your nags. Treat Mr. Franklin fairly. The friend of Don Manoel Alcorta must be a true inn."

Winter heaved a sigh of relief when the professional revolutionist had vanished.

"He's a funny one," commented one of the farmers.

"A bit touched, I reckon," said another. "Wot's 'e doin' now to the other one?"

They looked through the window. The two were standing in the middle of the road, and Wally was shaking Peters violently. The argument was not so fierce as it appeared to be. Peters had been commanded to bring both detectives to dinner that evening; when he demurred, trying to hedge on the question of Winter's identity, Hart grabbed him by the shoulder.

"Do as I tell you," he hissed. "Of course I know now that the big fellow in the man Grant heard of a week ago. I was an idiot to take him seriously about the Argentine. Bring the pair of 'em, I tell you. We will make a night of it."

"I'll try," said Peters faintly, "but if you stir up that wine so vigorously I won't answer for the consequences."

Winter wishing devoutly that would-be sellers of horse flesh were not so numerous in the district, noted the names and addresses of the local men, and promised to write when he could make an appointment. Then he escaped upstairs whither Furneaux soon followed. Winter had secured an extra bedroom overlooking the river, which Tomlin had converted into a sitting room. Thus he held a secure observation post both in front and rear of the hotel.

"Well, how did she take it?" inquired the Chief Inspector, when he and his colleague were safe behind a closed door.

"Sensible girl," said Furneaux. "By the way, Siddle's mother is dead. Telegram came this morning. Things should happen now."

"I don't see why."

"No. You are still muddled after floundering in the mud of South America. What possessed you to let that cheerful idiot, Wally Hart, put you in the cart?"

"How could I help it? I was extracting some really helpful facts about Siddle and Elkin from Tomlin, and the others when a shock-headed whirlwind blew in and nearly embraced me because I claimed acquaintance with the El Dorado bar in Buenos Ayres. From that instant I was lost. Like St. Augustine on the gridiron, no sooner was I nicely toasted on one side than I was turned on to the other. That grinning penny-a-liner, Peters, too, helped as assistant torturer. Wait till he asks me for a 'pointer' in this or any other case. He sold me a pup to-day but I'll land him with a full-sized mastiff."

"No, you won't. He has done you a lot of good. You were simply reeking with conceit when I met you this morning. It was 'Siddle this' and 'Siddle that' until you fairly sickened me. One would have thought that I had not cleared the ground for you, left you with all lines open and yourself unknown to the enemy. Sometimes you make me tired."

"Sorry, Charles," said Winter patronizingly. "I had a bit of luck on Sunday I admit. The chance turn taken by the conversation with Doris, with the result that I was able to occupy a strategic position on the cliff, and hear every word that Siddle uttered, was really fortunate. But is not that just what men mean when they prate of success? Opportunity knocks once at every man's door, says the old saw. The clever man grabs almost instantly. The indolent one, often a mere gabbler, opens his eyes, and his mouth weeks afterwards, and cries, 'Dear me! Was that the much-looked for opportunity?' Of course, Robinson's by-play with the sack and rope was merely thrown in by the prodigal hand of Fate."

"Stop!" yelped Furneaux. "Another platitude, and I'll assault you with the tongs."

It was the invariable habit of the Big 'Un and the Little 'Un to quarrel like cat and dog when the toils were closing in around a suspect. Woe, then to the malefactor. He was a perilous state.

"Let's cool down, Charles!" said Winter, opening a leather case and selecting with great care, one out of half a dozen precisely similar cigars. "We're pretty sure of our man, but we have not a scrap of evidence against him. How or where to begin ringing him in I haven't the faintest notion. If only he'd kill Grant we'd get him at once."

"But he won't. He trusts to Ingerman playing that part of the game. He is as artful as a pet fox. I bought soap and a pound of sal volatile but he did up each parcel with sealing wax."

"Sal volatile!" smiled Winter. "I, too, went in for soap, but my imagination would not soar beyond a packet of cotton wool. It was the lumpiest thing I could think of."

"And perfectly useless!" sneered Furneaux. "I must say you do fling the taxpayers' money about. Now my little lot will keep the electric bells in my flat in order for two years."

"You forget that constant association with you demands that I should frequently ping my two ears," retorted Winter.

Furneaux would surely have thrown back the jest had not a knock on the door interrupted him.

"Who's there? I'm busy," cried Winter.

"Me-ow!" whined Peters's voice.

"Oh, it's you, Tom. Come in!"

The journalist crept in on tiptoe.

"Hush! We are not observed," he said. "Wally Hart threatens to choke me if you two don't dine with him and Grant to-night."

There was silence for a little while. The detectives looked at each other.

"At what time?" said Winter at last.

Peters was astonished, and showed it.

"Why, I assured him it was absolutely impossible," he cried.

"Well, it isn't. In fact it suits our plans. I want exercise, and shall walk back from Knoleworth. Furneaux will make his own arrangements. Tell Grant that I shall drop in without knocking."

"And tell him I shall arrive by parachute," added Furneaux.

"In case of accidents, and there is a shoot-up, with myself as the unresisting victim, my front name is James," said Peters.

"The only good point about you," scoffed Winter.

"You're strong on names to-day," tittered the journalist. "Don Manoel Alcorta was a superb effort as an authority on gee-gees. Wally tells me his donship is the recognised expert south of the line on seismic disturbances, and spends his days and nights watching a needle making some scratches on a sensitive plate."

"He would be useful here in a day or two," said Winter.

"Ah, thanks! Is that a tip?"

"Not for publication. What you must say is that this affair looks like baffling the shrewdest wits in Scotland Yard."

"My very phrase — my own ewe lamb. Pardon. I shouldn't have alluded to sheep."

"The only known representative of the yard in Steynholme is Furneaux," smiled the Chief Inspector.

Furneaux was drumming on a window pane with his finger tips.

"True," he cackled. "Just to prove it he now informs you that Siddle finding trade slow, has called on Mr. John Menzies Grant!"

Pay of Bank Presidents.

John Skelton Williams, comptroller of the currency, in an official report says the national banks with a capital of $5,000,000 or more pay their presidents an average salary of $44,400 a year, while the presidents of national banks with a capital of $50,000 or less receive on the average a salary of only $1,068 a year.

There are 7,578 national banks. Most of them have a capitalization of less than $50,000. It may be soothing to the twenty dollar a week clerk to know that so many bank presidents get an average of only $19.38 a week, yet there is no pronounced movement on the part of bank presidents to retire from office and enter the field of clerkdom. Possibly the poor bank president finds ways of adding to his modest salary. If he does not he must find it hard to keep up appearances in these days of high costs of living.—New York Mail.

WOMAN A PHYSICAL WRECK

Tells in Following Letter How She Was Restored to Health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Milwaukee, Wis. — "Before taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I was a physical wreck. I had been going to a doctor for several years but he did me no good. A friend told me about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, so I decided to give it a fair trial, and it gave me relief from bearing down pains which had been so bad that I would have to lie down. I also used the Sanative Wash and it has done me a great deal of good, and I am not troubled with a weakness any more." — Mrs. P. L. Hall, 1220 Booth Street, Milwaukee, Wis.

The most successful remedy for woman's ills is Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. It has stood the test for forty years, which would be impossible if it did not have genuine merit.

VIVID DESCRIPTION OF AIRMAN'S FLIGHT

Details Also Given of Hurtin His Perilous Bombarding Tour to the Krupp Works.

Sergeant Gallois, the French aviator who was the first to bombard the Krupp works at Essen, has described his perilous flight:

"Four of us, Lieut. Ardisson de Perdiguier, Sergeant Durand, another comrade and myself, left our base at nightfal with tha intention of reaching Essen. Soon afterwards we ran into foggy weather and lost sight of each other. I flew at an altitude of 1,900 metres and passed over Metz and Thionville, following the course of the River Moselle, which, however, rapidly disappeared in the mist.

The Stars His Compass

"The batteries fired at me crossing the Rhine, and as I passed over Metz a searchlight played about the sky. At Thionville I heard another aeroplane nearby, but I made it out to be Ardisson's. Afterwards I was compelled to travel by the aid of the compass, the stars and the moon.

"At Treves I saw a heavy bombardment, which I calculated was directed at my comrade. Therefore I knew I was travelling in the right direction. I did not see Coblenz. I saw the reflection of the moon on the Rhine and found Bonn. From there to Dusseldorf there was a regular sea of electricity, which increased as I got further north.

"Cologne was a blaze of luminosity, and at Dusseldorf there were all kinds of lights, blue, red and white. All the time the anti-aircraft guns fired as I passed, and around Cologne the gunners were accurate in the range.

"Leaving there, I saw, like cliffs on the horizon, a brilliant illumination which seemed kilometres in length, stretching to the left of Essen, while southward was another long line of lights coming from the factories. Arriving over Essen, I rose to about 2,000 metres. I circled around, searching for a place where the lights from the workshops appeared densest. Then I threw the first bomb. After counting ten I dropped the second and then the remainder of the ten I carried at similar intervals. I could not tell whether the bombs exploded, but they probably did. It was impossible to distinguish their effect, owing to the flaming furnace chimneys.

Returned the Same Way

"My duty done, I turned homeward, not having seen my comrades again. The motor worked with wonderful regularity all the time. I came back exactly the same way as I went, and was fired at many times.

"I was thoroughly exhausted, and was suffering from my eyes, which were affected by the strain and wind, as I had lost both pairs of goggles at the start, and was often obliged to put my head outside in order to see the director. When nearing the base, owing to the darkness, I could not tell exactly where I was. I thought possibly I was still over the German lines, and decided to continue westward as long as the petrol lasted. I had a few litres left, and was driving onward, when suddenly I recognised a pre-arranged signal and managed to land just at dawn at the same place from which I had departed. The distance covered was 466½ miles."

Sergeant Gallois, who is 38 years of age, applied four times for the aviation corps, unsuccessfully, because he was declared to be too old, but was accepted on the fifth application, although he had no knowledge of flying. He rapidly learned piloting, and overcame the difficulties in night flying.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

An Error Brings an Error

By MARTLAND MALTBEE

Alan Forbes had been engaged to Jennie Hatch for more than a year, and, since his salary was not sufficient to warrant marriage and his prospects of a raise were poor, the two reluctantly determined to give up each other, calling their engagement off.

Jennie had an aunt, an old woman, who lived alone. She was very poor—at least she was supposed to be—and Jennie devoted a great deal of time to her, the old lady being very feeble. About the time that Alan and Jennie decided there was no hope for them the aunt grew worse and died suddenly. On her deathbed she told Jennie that she would find in a crevice in the chimney enough money to bury her and what was left over would be hers.

The day after the funeral Alan received a note from Jennie asking him to meet her at the aunt's house. She had a surprise for him. Alan went to the house at the time mentioned and found no one there. On a table was a little pass book showing deposits of some $12,000. The book bore a number, but not a name.

In turning over the leaves of the book a bit of paper fell out of it. Alan saw the words "Dearest Jennie" written in a man's hand. Yielding to a desire to know who was thus addressing the girl he loved in such endearing terms, he overcame his scruples against reading what had been written. The writer, who signed himself Dick, broke with "Dearest Jennie" on account of a story he had heard reflecting on her good name.

Here was a terrible revelation. Alan, not wishing to see Jennie again until he had made up his mind what action to take with regard to her, went away, leaving the book and the note just as he had found them.

Now, Jennie just before her lover's entrance had gone upstairs and was busying herself putting the house to rights, for it was hers as well as the deposits recorded in the pass book which she had found in the chimney. She had laid the book on the table to show Alan when he came, but a will she had also found she had put in a desk.

When Alan came in Jennie did not hear him, nor was she aware of his going. Noticing that the time she had asked him to come had passed, she concluded to go downstairs and wait for him there. She waited an hour, and, since he had not come, she surmised that he had not received her note. She was greatly disappointed, for she had counted on showing him her inheritance.

Since Alan did not put in an appearance, Jennie sent to his home to learn the reason. She was told that he had gone out about the hour she had expected him and had not returned, nor did he return that day or the next or at all.

His disappearance at a time when their marriage was not only possible, but the wherewithal for their future comfort had been provided, was a terrible blow to her. Moreover, it was a mystery. Had Alan been spirited away, or had he been killed? There was no answer.

Jennie concluded to live alone in the house she had inherited. She had faith that some day Alan would come back to her, and she would receive him in the home that had been provided for them. But year after year passed, and he did not come.

One day an old man came to the house and asked for Jane Hatch. Jennie told him that Jane Hatch had been dead several years. He appeared to be very much cast down. Jennie informed him that she was Jane Hatch's niece and had been named for her aunt. At this the man opened his heart to her, telling her that he had been betrothed to her aunt in their youth and had wronged her, having listened to a story to her injury.

Meanwhile Jennie on taking the pass book to the bank had discovered the note that had driven Alan away, though it had not occurred to her that it was the cause of his going. She now produced the note and returned it to the visitor. This led to her telling him the story of her own bereavement. What had not occurred to her occurred to her visitor. He suggested to her that Alan had come into the house while she was upstairs, found the note in the pass book and, supposing that it was for the living instead of the dead Jennie, had taken himself away.

"My mistake," he said, "has embittered the lives of two generations. This paper shall do no more harm." And he threw it into the fire. Then he added: "I have brought this trouble upon you. I will make it my business to find your lover. If he is alive I will return him to you."

The stranger began a systematic course of advertising for Alan Forbes, and at last one of the notices reached Alan's eyes. He communicated with the advertiser, who at once went to see him.

One morning while Jennie Hatch was attending to her household duties she went from the upper story down to her living room. There stood Alan Forbes. Jennie uttered a cry.

"I have come," said Alan, "to ask your forgiveness for having made what some would call a blunder, but which I now see was a crime. Instead of condemning you unheard I should have listened to your explanation."

"It was all a horrid mistake!" cried Jennie, staggering toward him. He received her in his arms.

What the Peon Likes.

The peon of southern Mexico has various appetizers that are unknown to the peons of the north. One of the queerest is "water wheat," which is not exactly what its name suggests, but the eggs of a kind of fly. The "water wheat" fields are ponds in which the peon places bundles of reeds a few feet apart so that their tops are just above the surface. On these reeds, or rushes, the insects deposit their eggs in incredible numbers. The peon then removes the rushes and shakes off the crop.

The Mexicans make the eggs, which resemble fine fish roe, into small cakes and sell them in the markets. The purchasers eat them either as we eat cheese or mixed with cornmeal and the eggs of fowls. The peons also eat the insects, which are about the size of our houseflies. Their method of preparing them is to pound a quantity of the flies into a paste and boil them with cornhusks.

PUT CREAM IN NOSE AND STOP CATARRH

Tells How To Open Clogged Nostrils and End Head-Colds.

You feel fine in a few moments. Your cold in head or catarrh will be gone. Your clogged nostrils will open. The air passages of your head will clear and you can breathe freely. No more dullness, headache; no hawking, snuffling, mucous discharges or dryness; no struggling for breath at night.

Tell your druggist you want a small bottle of Ely's Cream Balm. Apply a little of this fragrant, antiseptic cream in your nostrils, let it penetrate through every air passage of the head; soothe and heal the swollen, inflamed mucous membrane, and relief comes instantly.

It is just what every cold and catarrh sufferer needs. Don't stay stuffed-up and miserable.

Practice Makes Perfect.

They were at the theater, and the young lady was immensely taken with the leading man. "Watch," she said, "with what precision he steps across the stage. Every stride is of exactly the same length."

Her escort was just a little jealous.

"Yes," he said cruelly. "I imagine that habit was acquired from walking the railroad ties."—New York Times.

Ought to Work Both Ways.

"But you will have to be identified, madam, before we can cash your check."

"I don't see why. I didn't have to be identified when I deposited the money here."—Chicago Tribune.

An Exception.

"Do you believe," asked young Dudleigh, who is only five feet tall, "that brevity is the soul of wit?"

"Not in your case," replied Miss Biffington in a tone redolent with acrimony.

Misapplied Adage.

"I amassed by industry the fortune which you squander in idleness," said the reproachful father.

"Well," replied the gilded youth, "that's the rule. Business before pleasure."—Washington Star.

Sennacherib's Invasion of Judah.—II Kings 18:13-19, 37.

Golden Text: God is our refuge and strength, a very pleasant help in trouble. Ps. 46:1.

1. Verse 13-16. Why is it that God sometimes allows the righteous to be overwhelmed with calamity?

2. What is the compensation, if any, when an innocent nation is overpowered by an unscrupulous nation, and compelled to pay an enormous tribute?

3. What is the character of an invader who, to satisfy his greed, allows a church to be stripped of its valuable ornaments?

4. Verses 17-22. Judah has paid Sennacherib a ransom of about $1,000,000 as a condition to withdraw his army and after the money was in his possession he immediately made a demand on Hezekiah to surrender the whole country to him; how would you characterize Sennacherib's action?

5. Verses 23-25. When a man tries to settle a dispute with another by threats, what does that indicate as to the character of the former?

6. Verses 26-29. In doing business with a bully, who makes his propositions with threats, what is the best attitude to take?

7. Verses 30-37. When we are made a very lucrative proposition which involves doubting, or sinning against God, how should we treat it?

8. Under what circumstances, when in company with another, is it wise to remain silent?

9. Chap. 19:1. When facing what looks like national or family ruin, what should be a Christian's demeanor?

10. Verses 2-7. When is great trouble and having come to the end of our own resources, what else can we do?

11. In times of distress, how much help do we get from attending church, consulting with Christian friends, or meditating on God's promises?

12. If Hezekiah's spiritual experience had been fully developed would he have sent to Isaiah for instruction, or have obtained it direct from God?

13. If we depend upon God in times of great peril why are we sure to get from him the help we need?

14. Verses 8-19. From the fact that the King of Assyria was engaged in war with Libnah and could not then carry out his threat to besiege Jerusalem, would you say or not and why, that God always influences circumstances in the interest of his own people?

15. If we are frightened when we are threatened with calamity, why are we not displeasing to God? (This is one of the questions which may be answered in writing by the members of the club.)

16. Verses 20-27. Taking this story as a suggestion, what proof is there that God always hears and answers the prayers of his children?

17. Verses 28-34. When God says to the wicked, "I will put my hook in thy nose, and my bridle in thy lips," what does it mean to them, and signify to the Christian?

18. What are God's promises to the righteous to to their earthly prosperity?

19. All Hezekiah's fears as to the invasion of Jerusalem by Sennacherib were over; should that teach us we should never fear, and if not, what does it suggest?

20. All agree that it is useless to worry, but why should you say or not that worry is one of the worst of sins?

Lesson for Sunday, July 29, 1917: God's Gracious Invitation. Isa. 51.

Making Macaroni

Where does macaroni grow? A knowledge-thirster asked this question recently when his own particular restaurant down Soho failed to supply the favorite spaghetti. Macaroni, however, does not grow on bushes, and it is not a natural product of the land which also sends us organ-grinders and ice-cream merchants. It is composed of ordinary every-day flour, eggs, and milk, made into a batter and kneaded. When the paste is of the required stiffness it is fed into a rolling-machine and pressed out in layers until, from a substantial-looking mole, it dwindles down into hundreds of emaciated sticks. It is then folded, chopped into ribbons, and is ready for sale. War has banned a very substantial quantity of macaroni from arriving at British ports. So Mr. Gennari, London, has come to the rescue of the restaurants, and manufactures the real article on the spot. At the back of his establishment in Soho now stands a thriving factory, which turns out macaroni for the market by the mile, so to speak.

Not Good Enough.

Some people say that things that were good enough for their fathers and their grandfathers are good enough for them. They are not! This is an age of progress. It is well enough to have ancestors, but it is greater to be an ancestor. Far off the coast of Maine is a jagged ledge of rock, known as Saddleback Island, on which the only means of landing is by a derrick to which a sort of chair is attached. A lighthouse is maintained on this ledge, managed by a keeper and two assistants, with ten men on duty at all times.—Exchange.

Text of a Good Book.

That is a good book which is opened with expectation and closed with profit, wrote Bronson Alcott. It is a wise book that is good from title page to the end. One masterpiece, fairly mastered, prepares the reader to master the great pieces of literature. The encyclopedia of details may be left for less occupied and thoughtful moments.

Consistent Expectation.

"The fashions for women are getting more youthful every year," commented one man.

"Does that meet with your disapproval?"

"Not a bit. If it goes on this way a few seasons more my wife will be willing to give up her automobile and ride in a baby carriage."—Washington Star.

The Old Time Skipper.

Inmates of the wardroom on an American man-of-war often allude to the captain as the old man or the skipper. The latter is not, as many suppose, a slang term, but a sound word, of excellent etymology and valuable as carrying within itself an interesting bit of commercial history. Skipper is simply shipper, and it comes down from a time when every commander was as well part owner of vessel and cargo, or, literally, the shipper. There are still local shipyards along the Atlantic coast, some of them the outgrowth of private yards, where the "vessel owners" of years ago built their own ships to carry their own and their neighbor's crops to market.

Heading Them Off.

Mrs. Villadom—Why do you want to call on the Boremes tonight? Mr. Villadom—Because if we don't they're certain to come over here. It will be easier to go home when we're tired of them than to ask them to go home.

When Bathtubs Were Curiosities.

The British Medical Journal asserts that a century back the English were a dirty people. England can hardly have been worse than the French. In 1713 Jean Baptiste de la Salle published "Les Regles de la Bienseance et de la Civilite Cretiennes," a manual for the guidance of youth, which has run into over fifty editions and is still in print. We are told that "for the sake of cleanliness it is well to rub the face every morning with a white towel in order to remove the dirt. It is not advisable to wash with water, for this exposes the face to the chills of winter and the heats of summer." This precept continued to appear in the manual until the edition of 1782.

Drawing the Line.

A London tailor made his pile and retired to a Welsh castle, where he set up as a squire. But the tailor had hardly got established as a squire when a London hatter retired and set up in a neighboring castle as a squire also. It was disgusting.

A friend, apropos of the former hatter's coming, said to the ex-tailor:

"Will you call on him?"

"Not I," was the reply. "One must draw the line somewhere."

"And so," said the friend, "you draw it round the neck, eh?"

Steep Farming.

A slope in the valley of the Ollantaytambo, Peru, with an angle of about 45 degrees, or steeper than the roofs of most houses, is covered with transverse ridges, showing that the entire surface was cultivated in former times. Parts of the same slope are still cultivated.—National Geographic Magazine.

Selling a Pair of Shoes.

I spent a couple of hours the other day in a shoe factory.

"These," said the head of the firm, pointing to a dainty pair of boots, "we sell wholesale at $10."

"What does the customer pay for them in a store?" I inquired.

"Sometimes not less than $20," he replied.

So it appears to cost as much to sell a shoe as to make a shoe.

The farmer who raised the calf that yielded the skin, the butcher who removed the hide, the tanner who converted it into leather, the railroad which hauled it 2,000 miles and the factory which carefully made the leather into a shoe, together split fifty-fifty with the exclusive shop which retails it to your wife.—Girard in Philadelphia Ledger.

GREAT MEN'S FAVORITES.

An episode of the late Lord Kitchener in India, relates that the great man went up to one of the frontier stations on one of his usual inspections. One night after dinner the officers started a phonograph going, and asked their guest if there was any particular tune he would like played. Kitchener said that he would find something himself and after looking through the records they had, chose, not Grand Opera, not some popular song, but "Lead, Kindly Light." The selection of that great hymn might surprise some but not those who knew the great soldier best.

The Right Honorable A. J. Balfour is according to a writer on international statesmen the founder of the Handel Society in England, and has written a number of articles and a book on Handel, of whose works he possesses a magnificent and unrivalled collection. Prior to the outbreak of the war Mr. Balfour was a constant attendant at the concerts of the London Symphony Orchestra and an admirer of the works of Wagner.

Of Lord Northcliffe, who is now in the United States, Marconson says in his sketch of the great newspaperman: There is one definite rule in Northcliffe's scheme of life that anyone may well heed. Save in a great crisis, his work for the day ends when the time for dinner begins. No guest in any of Northcliffe's houses will talk shop from that moment on. Then you see Northcliffe the Boy, the dynamic Peter Pan who will never grow up. I like to recall an evening at Elmwood, the smallest of his country places. There were only a few of us down there. After dinner Northcliffe said: "Let's have the phonograph." He stretched himself on a large couch, puffed away at a great cigar, and luxuriated in American ragtime that ranged from "Down in Tennessee," to "Alexander's Rag-time Band."

Restoring An Emperor

The political changes in China persist in mixing themselves in the modern mind with the comic operas of the time of Gilbert and Sullivan. Gen. Li Huan Hung asked the boy heir to the throne, which he usurped as head of the army, to take the throne back again and to punish him for his misdeed. And the boy emperor responded to the request for punishment by appointing Gen. Lung to be a duke of the first-class! Evidently a dukedom in China is more irksome and undesirable than in our own empire.

Speaking of the comradeship of the Catholics and Protestants in the Irish forces, an officer told a story of how a well known Irish Unionist, a stanch Protestant, had repeatedly risked his life to save old political opponents. Volunteers' New Duties

Before starting out on a route march the West London Companies of the London Volunteer Regiment were inspected in Hyde Park by General Sir D. VARIETY AT THE FRONT

"Down in a pleasant little clump of willows on the eastern slope hidden from observation a young staff officer and the writer sit down to eat their ration lunches. The civilian picks some violets and presses them in his notebook. A big black and red butterfly wings past and everywhere overhead in a cloudless sky the larks are singing with incredible disregard for the booming of the guns (I have heard their notes at dawn in the momentary lulls of a terrific barrage). Then the ominous hum of a Boche plane sounds and presently several shells come whistling through the air to "crump" 200 yards away in a cloud of inky smoke and dust scattering fragments of jagged iron with high pitched, evil whine. Not far from here we visit the ruins of a big German dugout whose now half caved-in entrance yielded up no less than seventy-eight Hun prisoners to the prowess of one Canadian captain and two privates at the taking of the ridge. Over in trenches which we left some time ago, the boys were singing in the sunshine and a colored private, a very capable man, his officers declared, for all his racial light heartedness, was lolling on a rubber sheet reading a book.

LACK COAL FOR WAR

Menace to Canada from Ineffective Demurrage Rules

"The Canadian public should have a clear realization of what is aimed at in the revision of these demurrage rules," said Mr. J. E. Dalrymple, Vice-President of the Grand Trunk. "The situation is unprecedented. In every territory on the continent there is a demand for cars that cannot be fully met. It is useless to look to the car builders for relief. If the situation is to be prevented from becoming more serious, there must be the greatest possible co-operation between the shippers, the consignees and the railways. Every car available must be kept moving and every car must be loaded to its capacity. Any measures adopted to prevent the undue holding of cars for loading and unloading are therefore of national advantage. Rules that were probably equitable under normal conditions are in the war hampering the efficiency of transportation."

"The coal supply of Canada," continued Mr. Dalrymple, "is largely controlled by the number of cars available. The railroads have exceptional opportunities for knowing just how serious the fuel problem is. No Canadian coal can be obtained for our use. Supplies of Nova Scotia coal hitherto entering on our line at Montreal and Portland can not be procured, and as we can only get a limited quantity through Depot Harbor and through Midland, Ont., we are obliged to rail our coal from the Pennsylvania mines. Not only are we obliged to do that, but we have to send our own cars down there for service between the mines and tidewater on the lakes, that is to furnish foreign roads with equipment of Grand Trunk ownership for the movement of coal for railway use. The increased mileage we are called upon to perform, by reason of this abnormal condition, at the four points mentioned is equal to 132,466,000 ton miles."

"That is the situation as regards railway fuel. If the railways cannot muster sufficient cars to keep a supply of coal on their lines for locomotive purposes their operation will be interferred with, and that would be a national calamity. Precisely similar difficulties face the country in connection with a general fuel supply for commercial and household purposes. Every available car must be used to the fullest advantage, and no individual is entitled, at this critical period, to hold a car for a day or for an hour when it might be released. It is the duty of every user of coal to obtain his winter supply, as far as possible, without waiting until bad weather comes along, bringing with it transportation difficulties and the always pressing demand for fuel. Better demurrage rules help to bring pressure to bear upon the delinquents who selfishly hold up cars and thereby hurt every other shipper. With all cars loaded to rated capacity and every car kept on the move, as far as practicable, the facilities at the disposal of the nation's business should give a good account of themselves."

ENGLAND'S INVADERS WERE VERY RUTHLESS

Spaniards of Sixteenth Century Might Find Rivals in Present-Day Hun Forces

Recalling the chances of a German invasion, a paper in England had the following: Leaving out of account the incursions of the Stuart Pretenders, and the later landings of the French and Spaniards on the coast of Ireland and Wales, the last time an enemy invaded England was more than three hundred years ago. On that occasion towns and villages on the coast of Cornwall were fired and pillaged, and the inhabitants subjected to outrage and torture, just as the Huns are treating the nations they have overrun to-day. On the morning of July 23rd, 1595, soon after the sun had dissipated a thick fog in Mount's Bay, four Spanish men-of-war hove to off the entrance of the harbour of Mousehole, and landed several boatloads of armed men, who proceeded to sack and burn the town. After committing all sorts of atrocities in Mousehole, the marauders marched up the steep hillside, and burst the village of Paul.

Ransacked and Destroyed

The only house in Mousehole to survive was the still-existing Keigwin Arms. Jenkin Keigwin, the then owner, is supposed to have been killed by a cannon-shot, and to this day curious visitors are shown a veritable cannon-ball, which usually reposes on a windowsill in one of the bed-rooms of the quaint little inn. On the day following the sacking of Paul and Mousehole the invaders marched on to Newlyn and Penzance, three or four miles away, and there the same ruthless procedure was followed, both villages—for Penzance was no more than a village then—being ransacked and destroyed.

Some Spaniards Stayed

These villages show little sign of that invasion to-day; but a strain of Spanish blood is said still to be evident in some of the families who are supposed to be descendants of such of the invaders as settled down in the neighbourhood. Certainly some of the names and the foreign appearance of some of the people lend colour to the tradition. In the village of Newlyn there are numbers of men and women with swarthy skin, long dark hair, and flashing eyes, who gesticulate violently and converse garrulously in a manner not usual with the English race. Yet it is the English language they speak, and many of their sons and brothers are fighting now in the British Army and Navy.

Sea Holds Untold Treasures

Within the last five hundred years one thousand million pounds' worth of gold has vanished. About one-third lies at the bottom of the sea. The treasure of fleet vessels which strews the route from England to India alone has been estimated at eighty millions sterling. In 1798 the British frigate, De Brook, wrecked off the American coast, took with her into the depths of the ocean gold worth $10,000,000, the spoils of an intercepted Spanish treasure fleet. Another British warship, the Hussar, went down with over a million sterling in gold in 1780, and another million was lost in the Lutine, in 1799, though a portion of this has been recovered.

The Barking Wolf.

The prairie wolf, the coyote of the Mexicans, is the American representative of the old world jackal. It is thirty-six to forty inches long, with a tail measuring sixteen to eighteen inches. Its color is usually a yellowish gray on the back and sides, with black cloudings. The under parts and inside of limbs are of a dirty white tint. The cry is a sort of snapping bark, and for this reason the animal is known as the barking wolf. It lives and breeds in burrows and has its young in April, often ten at a time. It hunts in packs and is very fleet.

Russian Lines in Galicia Broken

Extremist Agitations Cause A Retirement

RUSSIAN EXTREMISTS HOLD MEETING WHILE GERMANS ARE BREAKING LINE

One Regiment Voluntarily Retired in Front of the Enemy and as a Result Other Units Had to Drop Back---Strong Fortress of St. Peter and St. Paul Held By Revolutionists, Is Stormed by Troops Led By Minister of War Kerensky---General Attack on French Lines on Aisne Front a Complete Failure.

A SUMMARY OF TO-DAY'S WAR CABLES

BERLIN, via London, July 20.—The statement of the German War Office says the Germans broke through at three points on the Russian lines in Eastern Galicia.

PETROGRAD, July 20.—The Russian failure to hold the Germans in Eastern Galicia, says an official statement, was due to extremist detachments holding meeting and discussing the advisability of obeying orders which the regiment had refused to obey. The 60th Elynov Reigment voluntarily retired before the attacking Germans and as a result neighbouring units had to retire.

KERENSKY LED HIS TROOPS AGAINST REVOLTERS IN PETROGRAD FORTRESS

(By Willitm G. Shepherd, United Press Staff Corresepondent.)

PETROGRAD, July 19. (Delayed) via London, July 20.—Minister of War Kerensky personally led his troops in the assault which resulted in the capture of the fortress of St. Peter and St. Paul from Petrograd rioters today. The Government forces crossed bridges and took the stronghold amid machine gun fire. This is the first word that has come from Petrograd indicating that the revolters there had succeeded in establishing themselves in the formidable fortress of St. Peter and St. Paul.

SUCCESSFUL RAIDS BY BRITISH.

LONDON, July 20.—Successful raids and the capture of several prisoners last night opposite Gavrelle and north of Ypres, are reported in to-day's official announcement. The enemy's artillery was more active than usual northwest of St. Quentin and southwest of Lens.

LONDON, July 20. — Germany is desperately trying to wear out France's military strength before American troops get on the battle line. Such is the explanation given to-day at the War Office for the unremitting Hindenburg offensive on the Champagne and Aisne fronts.

LONDON, July 19.—Having brought up heavy reienforcments all along the line the Germans and Austro-Hungarians in Eastern Galicia have started what apparently is a tremendous offensive against the Russians. From Brody, near the northeastern border of Galicia, southward to below Kaluaz, the operations are in full swing, but have not yet developed to an extent where particulars of the battles in their entirety are available.

The latest German official communication announced that the Germans have accepted the gage of battle thrust upon them by the Russians, and in a counter-attack on the line guarding Lemberg from the east have defeated the Russians over a wide front near Zlochoff, which lies on the Tarnopol-Lemberg railway line, about forty miles distant from the capital.

To the north of Volhynia, and still farther north on various sectors to the Baltic Sea, especially around Smorgon and Dvinsk, heavy artillery duels are being fought. Near Lutsk, in the famous Volynian fortress triangle, the Germans report the capture of many Russian prisoners.

THE OFFICIAL REPORT.

The Petrograd War Office statement follows:

"As the result of a night attack our detachments occupied the village of Novica, to the south of Kaluaz, but, suffering great losses in this operation, withdrew to the eastern end of the village. Two enemy attacks on the above-mentioned detachments were repulsed by our fire.

"In the engagement near Novica on Tuesday we captured three machine guns, eight officers and 220 men.

"Roumanian front: Fusillades have occurred.

'Caucasus front: Our scouts attacked three Turkish cartels ten miles south of Petrakals, seized prisoners and burned the bridges across the River Karahut-Zarasi."

PARIS, July 20.—A general attack last night by the Germans on the whole sector of the Aisne front between Craonne and Vauclerc employing large bodies of troops, was unsuccessful. The War Office announces that the French withstood furious assaults and maintained their positions everywhere. The ground before French positions was strewn with German dead.

PARIS, July 20.—The Matin says: The programme of Prussian militarism set forth by Chancellor Michaelis may be summarized in two words, "Hold out and bluff."

THE WEEK'S SHIPPING LOSSES.

PARIS, July 20.—Losses of merchant vessels by submarine attacks during last week were three vessels of more than 1,600 tons, and two of less tonnage. Four merchantmen were unsuccessfully attacked. No fishing boats were lost.

FIERCE FIGHTING AT CHEMIN DES DAMES.

PARIS, July 20.—The German assault on the French lines at Chemin Des Dames reached unprecedented ferocity to-day in hand-to-hand fighting interspersed with cannonading of extreme violence, according to the French official report.

GENERAL PERSHING VISITS BRITISH LINES.

PARIS, July 20.—Accompanied by two of his staff officers, Major-General Pershing left Paris to-day for a visit to the British front as the guest of Field Marshal Haig. He will study the British army and its working organizations.

AMSTERDAM, July 20.—Philip Scheidemann, the German majority Socialist leader, voiced open dissatisfaction at Chancellor Michaelis' speech, according to despatches received to-day from Berlin. The Socialist complained of the Chancellor's vague word as to internal reform. Scheidemann opposed the German submarine policy, declaring it was doing more harm than good.

COPENHAGEN, July 20. — The German Reichstag yesterday evening passed a peace resolution fostered by a coalition of the Centre, Liberal and Socialist party members, according to despatches received here to-day. The vote was 134 to 116. The coalition peace resolution declared Germany didn't desire peace with annexations.

In moving the adoption of the resolution Centrist Leader Erzesbach declared: "If the enemy interprets this resolution as a sign of weakness, the Germans will prove they are capable of victory." The situation precludes any misunderstanding. The Kaiser is magnanimous. Michaelis will make peace encompassing free development.

POTATO CROP IS THREATENED WITH A SERIOUS BLIGHT

Inspector at Guelph O.A.C. Says Millions of Bushels May Be Lost Unless Precautions Are Taken

USE BORDEAUX MIXTURE

"Ontario should produce 28 million bushels of potatoes this year. It may not produce 13 millions if the blight is not vigorously attacked."

This alarming statement was made yesterday by Mr. J. B. Dandeno, Inspector of Agricultural Classes at the O.A.C., Guelph.

Calls for Prompt Action.

"Late blight of potatoes or rot as it is more commonly called, has already appeared in Ontario. So far as I know, it has not in twenty years appeared so early in the season. In view of the fact that so many schools, in school and home gardens, have undertaken the growing of potatoes for the first time, and also because of the large amount of small plots in cities, towns and villages, managed by people without experience in growing potatoes, it will be sad indeed if the plots undertaken with such zeal and enthusiasm should be allowed to go to destruction because of lack of information at the right time.

Here is the Remedy.

"Potato blight is here and this is the remedy: Apply Bordeaux mixture for the 'blight,' with arsenate of lead for the 'buga,' and apply thoroughly. Blight is 80 per cent. preventible if vigorously attacked now. Arsenate of lead may be obtained from the drug store or hardware store in paste or dry form. It should be mixed with water—about a heaped dessertspoonful of either dry or paste in two gallons of water.

How to Apply.

"Bordeaux mixture is obtained by dissolving one-half pound of blue stone (copper sulphate) and one-half pound of quicklime (unslacked) each separately in granite basins in a small amount of hot water. Then both these mixtures should be mixed together and sufficient water added to make five gallons. The arsenate of lead may be added to this mixture in the proportions named above at each spraying. Application should be made in the form of a spray. A watering can will do if there is no spraying machine at hand. All the mixture should be used up, and should not be left standing in a metal vessel. Paris green will do instead of arsenate of lead, but is not so persistent in clinging to the leaves in wet weather."

INSTRUCTION FOR WOMEN IN CANNING VEGETABLES

BRAMPTON, July 19.—The Patriotic Vegetable Production Committee of Brampton is holding a four-day demonstration in canning this week. Mrs. Worland, one of the Women's Institute lecturers, whose home is in Lambton County, is giving instructions in the most economical and the most profitable methods for the canning of fruits and vegetables. There was a large attendance, showing the interest taken by the women in this laudable enterprise. Beets, beans, tomatoes and peas were canned during the afternoon session. The desire is to educate the women to do the work which it is thought is more likely to be profitable, than to have central places for the reception of vegetables and the canning done by an expert. The demonstrations will go on during the remaining days of the week.

Faith is the thing that enables men to eat hash.

The king can do no wrong—if the other fellow holds all the aces.

If a man falls in love, only the woman in the case can rescue him.

LADY HENDRIE'S APPEAL TO THE WOMEN OF ONTARIO

The Organization of Resources Committee of the Province of Ontario has asked for the co-operation of the woman power of the Province in dealing with the all-important matters of Food Conservation, Thrift and Economy.

The food problem is of the utmost seriousness. The situation has been stated by our Food Controller to be desperate, and in the United States Mr. Hoover recently has said that if it is not squarely faced, the whole world will soon be hungry, and that our civilization will have to meet the sternest menace with which it has yet been threatened.

To the end that Ontario women may do their full part in meeting the situation, a convention has been called in Toronto, when women from all parts of the Province may be present to voice their determination, and to state the contribution they can make to the solution of the problem.

As Chairman of the Committee of Arrangements I take this opportunity to call upon Ontario women to regard this conference as a call to National Service.

The convention will be opened with a public meeting, to be held July the 23rd at 8 p.m., in Convocation Hall, University of Toronto. All are cordially invited to this meeting.

On the following day, July the 24th, a conference will be held in the Canadian Foresters' Hall, Toronto. This conference will be attended by women delegates from all parts of the Province, whose duty will be to discuss practical problems, and to decide as to the formation of some organization for the purpose of dealing with them.

I wish most earnestly to impress upon all delegates the acuteness of the Food Crisis, and to urge that they shall make a very special effort to attend the convention.

Government House, July 18th, 1917. LENA M. HENDRIE.

HOW LIEUT. GILLHAM OF 93rd BATTALION WON MILITARY CROSS

Officer of Peterboro' Battalion Led His Platoon at Great Risk and Remained With His Men After Being Wounded —Canadian Militia Hospital Figures—To-day's General Military News.

The story of how Lieut. H. C. Gillham, formerly of the 93rd Peterborough County Battalion won the Military Cross for gallantry at the front is told in the London Gazette, just published. The officia account of Lt. Gillham's exploit states that Lieut. Harper Canfield Gillham, whose platoon was held up at great risk, led the party and succeeded in silencing a gun. He was wounded but remained with his men.

An item in the Examiner last night about the Army and Navy Veterans of Kingston was very misleading, inasmuch as the date line of the article was omitted and as a result the paragraph read as if applied to Peterborough. The Peterborough Veterans will, however, in the near future be considering the question of larger quarters.

TORONTO, July 19.— The unprecedented spectacle of men wearing the uniform of the United States Flying Corps being drilled on the Campus of the University of Toronto, by officers of his Majesty the King, is the outcome of a reciprocal arrangement now being entered into between the British authorities and the American Congress.

American cadets to the number of 100, representing the advance guard of American aviators to be trained in Canada, are already here and housed in the residence of the University along with their comrades of the British service.

The Officer Commanding the Royal Flying Corps told the Star to-day that it has been arranged that the Royal Flying Corps shall train American aviators in Canada and bear the expense of such training, and in return the American Government will build and provide aerodromes in the States for the purpose of training Canadian and British pilots during the winter when training is not possible in this country. It is claimed that this arrangement which will include several other features not yet definitely decided upon, will result in a tremendous financial saving to the Royal Flying Corps.

The American Government will bear the entire expense of providing aerodromes and of training the men during the time they are on American soil.

Ottawa, July 20.—The number of men under the care of the Military Hospitals Commission fell from 7,416 to 7,476 between June 30 and July 9, though arrivals since that date may be found to have neutralized the reduction.

The latest total, 7,476, includes 6,660 convalescents, with 628 in sanatoria for tuberculosis, and 488 in other institutions.

The number of Canadian soldiers invalided in England reached its maximum, 12,583, on May 25. The following week showed a decrease of 80; this was succeeded by a decrease of 415 reported on June 8; the return for June 15 showed a further decrease of 773; and figures just received show a fall of 1,284 between June 15 and June 22.

The total of 20,010 for June 29 is made up thus: In Canadian hospitals, 10,226; in sanatoria for tuberculosis, 74; and in British (that is non-Canadian) hospitals, 9,710. Of the total, 10,353 were sick and 9,657 wounded. There were 709 officers among the invalids.

CHUMS.

Let's have a look at the chart, nurse, 'shell shock and right arm off';
Shrapnel wounds in the leg, nurse, gee! I'm a bloomin' toff,
Lying here just like a Duke, nurse, fed up with jelly and tea,
If ever a fellow was lucky, that same little fellow is me!

I wonder what happened to Bill, nurse, (will that noise in my head ever stop);
I ain't seen or heard of old William since the time we went over the top,
And these were the last words he whispered, shaking my hand with a grin,
"Say ain't this a lovely pickle for Ontario men to be in!"

Whenever we got into billets, old Bill and I we would yarn
About the folks way back home, nurse, where Bill and I were born.
That little place way back home, nurse, where the pines and maples grow,
And the lakes and rivers wash the breast of old Ontario.

We grew to be men together, old Bill was my constant chum;
We used to walk on the Twelfth, nurse, to the tune of the fife and drum,
And when the call came we enlisted, (we had never dreamed of war),
For a land as fair as Canada is a land worth fighting for!

And now I'm lying here, nurse, all dolled up like a queen,
So nice and clean and comfy (bless you, how kind you've been);
But still I'd give a fortune, and, nurse, you'll understand,
If I could see old Bill again, and clasp him by the hand.

Just see the sun is sinking, like a red ball in the west,
And in the west is Canada, the land I love the best,
Where Bill and I were born and bred, I love it more and more;
A land of strong red-blooded men, a land worth fighting for.

ACT IN ABEYANCE PENDING ELECTION

Why Not Spend Your Holidays On A Farm?

The Organization of Resources Committee of this city is anxious to give the farmers of this district all the available assistance in the harvesting of the crops. Men who will get holidays are urged to spend them this year with some farmer. Mr. G. A. Gillespie has a list of names of farmers who need help during the harvest weeks. This is an opportunity of performing voluntary work of real value, and at the same time receiving a fair wage for it. Mr. Gillespie states that the problem is a serious one, that in other section of the country it is being solved, but in the absence of the will to help and of the appreciation of the needs are found the reasons for the local apathy. It has been proposed to hold a meeting to stir up a livelier interest, and an announcement to that effect may be made shortly.

SAYS GERMANY WILL NOT MAKE ANY MORE PEACE OFFERS

New German Chancellor Proves That He is Militarist to the Core By His Maiden Speech to the Reichstag

A DEFIANT ADDRESS

Special to The Examiner:

AMSTERDAM, July 20.— Germany will not make another peace offering. The peace she desires to conclude is that of victory, and it is the Allies who must hereafter make overtures to end the war. This was the challenge flung to the world by Chancellor Michaelis, the new Premier of Germany in his maiden speech of that office, delivered yesterday in the Reichstag. Dispatches from Berlin to-day quoting the Chancellor, emphasized in the most vigorous possible fashion the fact that Germany's new pilot is military to the core. "We cannot again offer peace," the Chancellor said. "If our enemies abandon their lust of conquest and their aims of subjugation and wish to negotiate, we will listen honestly and be ready for peace. "Until then we must hold out calmly and patiently and courageously. What we wish is to conclude peace such as these who conclude who have successfully accomplished their purposes. I am unwilling to permit the conduct of affairs to be taken out of my hands. We are not seriously concerned in America's intervention in France," the Chancellor continued. "England is scarcely able to feed and supply her own army without influencing the military and economy situation. Still more, considering our previous success we will be able to master the new situation through our fleet, particularly our submarines. Therefore we look forward to further development of military events with calm security. The burning question, how long the war will last can be answered. Germany will not prosecute the war a single day after an honourable peace is obtained, merely for purposes to make conquest by violence."

The Chancellor made a vigorous defence of German piracy of unlimited submarine warfare, declaring it lawful and justifiable, since it was a measure to shorten the war, and because it was a reprisal for England's illegal blockade.

"Our aims," the Chancellor continued are: First that territory of the Fatherland is invincible. We cannot agree with any enemy demanding parts of our empire. If we make peace, we must be assured that our frontiers are made secure for all time."

"You cannot expect me after twenty-five days in office to express my views exhaustively and finally on questions of internal policy," Michaelis continued.

A pessimist likes a thing he can't enjoy and an optimist enjoys a thing he can't like.

Little Chance of Actual Enforcement of Military Service Bill Until the People of Canada Have Spoken.

A UNION GOVERNMENT?

OTTAWA, July 19.—It is frankly admitted in Government circles to-day that there is little likelihood that the Government will make any attempt to actually enforce conscription before the coming general election is held. The machinery with regard to the appointment of local tribunals to hear exemption applications may be set in motion, and the appeal courts may be established. But the actual calling out of the first class of men subject to conscription will be left in abeyance until the people have spoken and a new Parliament is elected.

The act will meanwhile remain on the statutes. Its administration will be under a new Parliament, and in all probability, under a new Government. Whichever side wins, the chances are that the new Government will be a union Government. Only under a "union" or "national" non-partisan Administration could there be established the public confidence and the public assent necessary to the practical and adequate enforcement of conscription. That is the excuse to be given by Sir Robert Borden for not proceeding promptly to enforce conscription as soon as the bill passes Parliament, a week or so hence. That, too, is the attitude taken by the Liberal side of the House.

Union Impracticable at Present.

The political motives behind the Prime Minister's belated coalition proposals, the conditions of a discredited Cabinet personnel and a moribund Parliament, the manner and circumstances of the introduction of the conscription issue, have all combined to make union Government impracticable at present, as Mr. Pardee declared last night. With a new Parliament, fresh from the people, and having a general mandate from the people to carry through every step necessary to putting the whole resources of the nation into the struggle, and with leaders on both sides already committed to the principle of non-party administration of the war, the formation of a union Government will then be a much simpler problem.

Delay Mere Than Compensated For.

The delay of two or three months in actually applying the principle of selective conscription will, under all the circumstances, be more than compensated for by the avoidance of the grave troubles that would undoubtedly arise were the Government to attempt to enforce the measure forthwith, and by the added authority, and consequently more satisfactory results, that will follow the vigorous action of a new Parliament and a new Administration.

Shortest Cut to Unity.

The decision to hold an election is welcomed in the main, by members of Parliament on both sides of the House, who realise that a continuation of present uncertain conditions was impossible, and who believe that the shortest cut to anything like unity of national effort and courageous Governmental action is by way of a general election.

As to the date of dissolution and election there is considerable uncertainty. The best guess is that Parliament will remain in session for another month yet. Dissolution may be expected a fortnight or so later, with the election fixed for some time in October or possibly early November.

Income Tax to be Passed.

Parliament has still considerable work ahead of it before it is ready for prorogation. Sir George Foster has promised that an income tax will be introduced and passed this session. Legislation of this kind is certain to be a subject of considerable controversy and connected with it there will also be a general discussion of the whole question of further equalizing the financial sacrifices demanded of those who stay at home, including also the question of the cost of living.

ONLY ONE COMIC PAPER.

The Review needn't worry. There has not been, nor will there be any attempt on the part of The Examiner to usurp our contemporary's unique position as a humourous journal. It would be impossible to produce anything funnier than the Review's many changes of attitude towards Capt. J. H. Burnham in the past three or four months.

OBLIGATION OF THRIFT.

Food Commissioner Hanna's appeal for thrift and economy should find the Canadian people gratefully responsive. On every hand is the prospect of an abundant harvest, the rich returns of an unusually propitious season. And this promise of possession, far in excess of our requirements, should quicken our consciousness of the responsibilities of stewardship. We are assured of immense crops which even in normal times should be carefully husbanded. But in this critical year with our allies and our armies largely dependent upon our resources of food, it becomes absolutely imperative that there must be no waste, no extravagance at home. The chief object of the campaign for economy, now preparing, is to arouse the Canadian people, especially the women of this country, to the importance of their fullest co-operation down to the individual home, and to impress upon them the patriotic aspects of this appeal.

The inspiring motive of patriotism should be hallowed by a fervent sense of gratitude, not only for the natural provision for our own needs, but also for that surplus which we hope may be supplied to those countries less happily conditioned. The religious spirit of the Canadian people, and especially of Canada's womanhood, will surely respond with the enthusiasm that begets success to an appeal so powerful.

In lifting our hands with their gift, let us also lift our hearts in acknowledgment to the Giver.

THE EMPIRE'S REPORT.

Lord Northcliffe, speaking in his new official role as head of the British Business Commission in the United States, says the Toronto Globe, tells the Overseas Club of New York that the British Empire has 2,200,000 soldiers in France and Belgium. Of these probably about 1,900,000 are from the British Isles. There are British armies also in Greece, Macedonia, Mesopotamia, Palestine, Egypt and East Africa. The United Kingdom must be maintaining to-day in active service on land and sea, at least 2,500,000 men, perhaps 3,000,000, not including the enormous reserves at home. The contributions of the self-governing British Dominions and colonies are tabulated as follows, the first column showing the estimated population in 1914 (excluding native races), and the second column the total enlistments up to February 1, 1917:

Canada	8,000,000	391,000
Australia	4,800,000	350,000
New Zeal'd	1,100,000	75,000
S'th Africa	1,275,000	70,000
N'f'l'd	250,000	3,300

For the purpose of comparison the number of men sent overseas, or actually engaged in fighting, is more informing, especially in view of the fact that 70,000 enlisted men were discharged in Canada. The first column below shows the total expeditionary forces despatched up to February 1, 1917, and the second column the strength of the forces at the front:

Canada	384,000	4 Div.
Australia	300,000	5 Div.
New Zealand	65,000	1 Div.
South Africa	60,000	*
Newfoundland	3,100	1 Batt

*One brigade in Europe and the remainder in Africa.

These figures cover only land forces. As for the naval service, Canada's showing does not equal Australia's or New Zealand's, nor, in proportion to population, that of Newfoundland. Nor has the proportion in land strength changed in Canada's forces since February, in a period of low recruiting. Up to February 1st last, Canada's war expenditure had been $500,000,000; Australia's, $500,000,000; New Zealand's, $112,000,000; and South Africa's $130,000,000. The daughter British States have done magnificently, but they are not content to rest on past achievements. All are bracing themselves for new exertions. The record of her sister Dominions should be an incentive to Canada, as the most important member of the family, to put forth her full strength.

Great as have been the efforts of overseas British countries, the mother country's have been greater still. There is a challenge, too, in the unexampled sacrifices of France. With a population less than 40,000,000, she has mobilized from 6,000,000 to 7,000,000 men since the outbreak of the war. Of these 2,000,000 have been killed or permanently disabled. France is now calling up her boys, her last resource against sheer exhaustion. Britain, too, is summoning her remaining men of military age to the ranks to save France, and with France, the cause of liberty and democracy. It is Canada's cause, as much as theirs, and Canada must continue to be worthy of it.

ANOTHER HEARST OUTBURST

In an editorial published recently in one of W. R. Hearst's yellow journals, the New York American, it was asserted that 500,000 Englishmen of military age had taken refuge in the United States since the beginning of the war. Nobody except readers of Hearst papers would be likely to believe the whole lie, still a suspicion might be promoted elsewhere that really a considerable number of young men might have deserted Great Britain to escape war service. A Brooklyn man, John Hatton, took the trouble to get facts. He writes the New York Times:

"I made inquiry to Frederic C. Howe Commissioner of Immigration. I have his written reply, under date of July 11, in which he states that 145,023 English, Scotch, and Welsh immigrant aliens were admitted to the United States from August 1, 1914, to May 31, 1917, inclusive. This includes men, women, and children. A fair calculation of those subject to military service would be 20 per cent.— that is, about 29,000. From this number must be deducted those physically unfit and those having dependents. It can be readily seen that the 500,000 refugees are largely 'men in buckram.' Justice demands the widest circulation of a refutation of the charge against cowardice against the English people. They are often wrong-headed ,but seldom poltroons. No good purpose can be served by spreading untruths about a brave and dauntless people."

Instead of 500,000, a possible 10,000 in three years. The truth is illustrative both of Hearst journalism and of British patriotism. — Ottawa Journal-Press.

CANADIAN INDIANS.

In the latest issue of the Canadian Military Gazette, a plea for "our brave Canadian Indian soldiers" is made over the signature of A. T. T., evidently that of the editor, Lt.-Col. Thompson, ex-M.P. for Haldimand, says the Ottawa Evening Journal. The plea is for the vote. Hundreds of Canadian Indians are in our army, many of them have distinguished themselves for bravery and devotion; "citizens enough to fight and die for Canada," says Col. Thompson, "but not citizens enough to vote," at least not in Dominion elections. A letter is published from a young Iroquois soldier at the front, who says:

"I suppose you have heard that the Indians who have come overseas have been given the franchise by the Ontario Government. You can quite realize what that means to us all, and I am now perfectly happy and glad to do my bit for the country of which I can now truly say I am a citizen. I would gladly die here if I thought that by so doing all of my people would be given the franchise. . . . You can quite understand how humiliating it is for us to be looked upon as wards of the Government. I enlisted and got others to enlist not only to help our Canada, but to show the people of Canada that even though we are 'children' we are man enough to fight for our country, and incidentally for those citizens who refuse to fight for themselves. I would not write you like this, only one never knows what may happen, and I would like you to know what our boys expect of Canada, after the war."

Long before the war, The Journal pleaded earnestly for votes for Canadian Indians, subject only to some test of ability to read and write English, or for that matter French. Our Indians have been well treated as a rule on a basis of governmental charity; still, there have been abuses, grave abuses, which would have been prevented or rectified by the franchise, for the simple reason that politicians pay attention to people who have votes. It would be better that our Indians should be protected by their own votes than by public charity; and now that such brave service has been rendered by our Indian soldiers, it is to be hoped that all among us, no matter how indifferent before, will wish to see the franchise which the Ontario Government has found little difficulty in extending to Indians become speedily a Dominion principle.

A WORD FOR TOMMY.

The statement made yesterday by General F. B. Maurice, Chief Director of Military Operations at the War Office, will be commended generally and by no body of men more heartily than by the Canadian soldiers at the front and returned. General Maurice in an interview said:

"I am told that in the United States the ordinary man has got a general impression that when any realy stiff fighting job is to be done the Englishman calls on the Australian, Canadian, or Scotsman to take the van. This idea is being carefully fostered by the Germans with the foolish idea of spreading some dissension or dissatisfaction between the branches of the Anglo-Saxon race, and they soon will be trying the same propaganda to push a wedge between Great Britain and the United States.

"As a matter of fact, the greatest part of the fighting since the war began has naturally fallen on English troops — they are the largest part of the army and have borne the brunt of the work. The casualty lists show that the English regiments have fought just as gallantly and bravely and have lost as heavily as any regiment in the Imperial Army."

The Examiner has found many people who profess to believe that the Canadians have been given all the stiffest fighting to do. They have been in the thick of the operations, of course, and right valiantly have they conducted themselves, but people at home should not think that the Canadians alone are suffering. These people should ask our own soldiers who have returned from the trenches about the British Tommies. Returned Canadians always grow enthusiastic when they tell of how their English comrades battled the Huns.

Franchise Act.

The Prime Minister's intimation earlier in the session that a Dominion franchise act would be passed before a general election, giving votes for women, and the threat of a number of Conservative members that before an election steps would be taken to disfranchise the alien citizens of Canada of enemy origin, may produce further protracted debate. It is very probable, however, that the difficulties the Government would have to face in forcing through a Federal franchise measure on the eve of an election, with political motives apparent, would be so great as to risk its passage entirely. If the measure were to fail of passage, those whom the Government sought to disfranchise might be expected to express their resentment at the polls.

In regard to the women's vote it is pointed out that, if women suffrage is provided for, polling will necessarily be declared for months, pending preparation of new lists. Although some Conservative members threaten that a Dominion franchise act will be forced through under closure, the saner heads are of opinion that the proposal should be dropped and the election fought on the present lists.

Other Questions to Deal With.

In addition to these questions still to be considered, there is the railway problem to be dealt with, involving the Government's proposal for another twenty-five millions or so for the Canadian Northern and Grand Trunk Pacific this year. That means another long discussion.

Then there is supply still to be passed, with its wake of administrative criticism. A new pension bill is proposed, and the bills respecting soldiers' settlement and the improvement of highways are still untouched. Parliament has still a busy month ahead of it before the decks are cleared for prorogation. After that it takes seven weeks as a rule to get all the machinery ready for polling.

British Skipper Was Sentenced

At the Devon Assizes, Exeter, Thomas James Stayman, 49, captain of a merchant vessel trading between Rangoon and London, was sentenced to five years' penal servitude for attempting to murder Gunner Gifford on the high seas, and to five years' penal servitude for refusing to obey a senior naval officers' order at Gibraltar—the sentences to run concurrently. Indictments charging the prisoner with wounding the first officer of his ship and with endangering the lives of certain of his Majesty's soldiers by ordering the gunner to fire on a hospital ship were withdrawn.

Mr. Clavell Salter, K.C., who appeared for the prosecution, said that two days after the ship left Port Said the captain, who was intoxicated, ordered Chief Gunner Gifford to fire 50 rounds of shell at nothing. The gunner refused, but to humor the captain he fired four rounds for test purposes. The same evening while going through the Mediterranean, a British hospital ship, illuminated in the usual way, appeared, and the captain headed his vessel towards her, ordering the gunner to fire at her. On Boxing Day, when off Ushant, the captain asked the gunner if he was going to report the hospital ship incident. Getting no reply, Stayman told the gunner to come to the bridge. When the latter kept the appointment, the accused swore, and ordered him to the boat deck.

On the same day the captain seized the gunner by the throat, carried him to the ship's rail, which was only a wire one, got him balanced on this wire rail, and in another moment would have thrown him overboard, when the ship gave a lurch to starboard, and both were thrown back against the saloon. A struggle for life ensued, and ultimately the gunner freed himself from the master, who was shouting "I will murder you." The Captain went all over the ship for several hours, while Gunner Gifford hid, saying he was going to murder Gifford. After the assault on Gifford, the chief officer and some of the crew seized the captain, handcuffed him, put him in the cabin, barricaded the door, and kept him there two days. On the ship arriving at Plymouth he was arrested by the Plymouth police.

The judge, in passing sentence, said he had not taken the hospital ship allegations into account, as prisoner must have known his men would not obey him.

A. W. Paskins Co. find

A very serious charge has been preferred against them, viz., that they have actually been selling goods below present costs, and instead of taking the opportunity to make enough money to buy a baronetcy, they are actually heading for the poor-house.

This means they will have to be supported by the public. When approached on the subject, Mr. A. W. Paskins stated he was quite prepared to face the music, as he had always been supported by the public in his way on big profits, and as he only sold for cash he could afford to sell for less. And to show he intends to continue the good work, he will offer extra special value on Saturday in all lines.

There will be a special line of fancy cakes at 20c. per lb., usually sold at 25c. and 30c.

ENGLAND SAVING FLOUR

Decrease in Consumption of Ten Per Cent, Recorded in June.

WASHINGTON, July 19.—A decrease of ten per cent. in the consumption of flour in England in June is the claim made by the National War Savings Committee as a result of the "eat less bread" campaign inaugurated to conserve food, according to a report received by Herbert Hoover to-day. This saving, it is stated, is in excess of all expectations.

The success of the educational campaign in England, it is stated, is shown by the fact that in March the saving was but two per cent., and in April four per cent., as against ten per cent. for June. The committee says that it expects an even greater increase in the future, and gives much of the credit to the intelligent co-operation of women in their homes

"Changing Winds"

By ST. JOHN ERVINE

The New York Times says—"As a war novel it is worthy to take its place with 'Mr. Britling Sees It Through.' 'Mr. Britling' is a story of war and how it affected the English folk of maturer years. 'Changing Winds' is a story of four young men to whom war came as they were realizing the splendid promise of life."

The Montreal Gazette says—"If all the delegates to the approaching Irish Convention would read and digest the unpalatable truths in 'Changing Winds' the Irish question would soon be settled and settled right."

WORK SUSPENDED IN OTHER PLACES

Peterboro' Is Not the Only City That Is Considering Advisability of Discontinuing Public Work Owing to High Cost of Labour and Materials

A few days ago the Peterborough City Council met to consider the advisability of continuing sewer construction on Princess street and a number of the other streets throughout the city owing to the present high cost of labour and materials. The meeting wound up by the Council calling for tenders for the work in the hope that some local contractor would under bid the city. The tenders, if any received, will probably be opened on Monday next, the last day for receiving tenders, but there is very little hope of the city continuing the work until after the war. This is not a condition that effects Peterborough alone as will be seen by the following extract from the Canadian Engineer. The item reads as follows:

WILL CONCEAL CONTRACT.

During a conference held last week by the Montreal city controllers and representatives of the Cook Construction Co., contractors for the aqueduct enlargment, Controller Villeneuve, seconded by Controller Ross, gave notice of a motion to suspend the work and cancel the contract, on account of the high cost of labour and materials, the conditions of which will not become normal until after the war.

It was stated after the meeting by Controller Ross that the Cook Company had agreed that, in the event of the contract being cancelled, the company would not make any claims for anticipated profits.

Discussing the notice of motion after the meeting, Controller Ross said: "We propose to cancel the contract with the Cook Company, but we hope that with the return of better times the city, will be in a position to carry out the scheme as modified by the consulting engineers.

"Owing to war conditions it is desirable to goth sides to cancel the contract. As regards the city this is due to the difficulty of floating the necessary bonds in the present condition of the money market, and as regards the contractor there is the increased price of material, the high cost of labour, and the difficulty of getting deliveries of steel and other material.

"Any further work done on the aqueduct will be for the purpose of securing an alternative water supply, as, in case the regular supply through the conduit becomes interrupted, we intend using the open excavation. The power developments we can postpone for the present, but it is necessary that we secure our water supply in case an interruption occurs."

Road Making In Peterboro' County

Screened Gravel Is Something That Is Not Generally Used in This Section

The appended item relating to the screening of road gravel is something that should appeal to roadmakers in Peterborough County. Very little, if any, gravel is screened before being placed on the highways of this much travelled county. The present system of dumping a few loads of gravel on the roads under the supervision of men who are roadmakers in name only, is obsolete. Where this system of road upheaval originated is not known. Screening gravel is comparatively free from engineering difficulties, and should not be expensive. It is better to put on less gravel and put it on in better condition, than aim to gravel a long stretch at the expense of those who are compelled to use the highways.

Screening Gravel.

The extract referred to reads as follows:

In order to give the best service under heavy travel, gravel must often be screened and sometimes is crushed before screening. Where the bank gravel does not contain pebbles too large to go into the road but has too much sand, as is often the case, road builders in Michigan have developed a method of screening out the fine material which deserves to be widely known.

At the gravel pit are kept a number of screens. Each is about 6 feet long and a little over 3 feet wide; the wire screen has three or four meshes to the inch and is held in a rectangular wooden frame. When a waggon reaches the pit the long side of a screen is fixed to one side of the body by means of hooks and supports holding it in an inclined position, with its bottom on the side board and the top about 3 feet higher and projecting over the ground. The gravel is shovelled from the pit and thrown across the waggon against this screen. The fine stuff passes through the meshes and falls to the ground and the part suitable for road building slides down the screen into the waggon.

According to the state highway commissioner, F. F. Rogers, it costs only a little over 20 cents per cubic yard to deliver screened gravel from the pit into the waggons, ready to be hauled to the roads, whereas it costs twice as much to screen it on a mason's screen and then shovel it into the waggons. As a method of obtaining screened gravel at a low cost from banks where large pebbles need not be taken out, it seems to have decided merit.—American Highway Association.

Age rarely brings us wisdom; about the best it can do is to each us which particular brand of folly is least harmful to us.

Press Comment On Russian Offensive

"SPIRIT IS UNBROKEN."

Philadelphia Public Ledger:—"General Brusiloff judged wisely in renewing the offensive at the weakest point in the eastern front, for a successful advance here will do much to make the rest untenable. What is of more consequence than the actual gain, however, is the evidence it offers that the Russian spirit is unbroken."

"BROAD STRATEGY."

Columbia State:—"It is broad strategy that the Slavic high command is displaying, backed by the delivery of blows which seem of almost incredible strength when one remembers that they are dealt by an army which has but newly emerged from a condition of chaos."

"SHOULD GAIN A GREATER VICTORY."

Troy Record:—"Time alone will tell what progress the armies may be able to make toward Lemberg, Jaroslaw, Przemysl, Tarnow and Cracow, but with superior generalship, adequate munitions and the crusading spirit they should register an even greater victory than they gained during the first few months of the struggle."

"MOST HOPEFUL SIGN."

Chattanooga Times:—"The most hopeful sign of the times in the war situation is the grand revival of Russia and her armies on the eastern front. Russia has really come to life again, and her soldiers are battling with the common enemy in a spirit and with a determination never heretofore exhibited."

"WORKING WITH A NEW FREEDOM."

Buffalo Commercial:—"To feats accomplished by the Russians in the last two weeks were only capable of accomplishment by well disciplined troops, under skilful leadership, and with an abundant supply of ammunition. The practised hand of Brusiloff is working with a new freedom, and securing immediate, positive and practical results."

"FIGHTING WITH A NEW SPIRIT."

Atlanta Journal:—"The armies of free Russia are fighting as the armies of the Tsar never did fight and never could have fought. The soldiers are the same and the commanders largely the same, but the power of a new spirit and a new faith is upon them."

"ON THE WAY TO A SOUND PEACE."

Pittsburg Post:—"The point is that the Russian drive which some feared would be but a feeble attempt to come back has been pushing the powerful German army steadily before it for days. It shows both skill and staying qualities for the rehabitated Russian army. The Russians are now on the way to a sound peace."

SUES FOR SUPPORT AT 47

NEW YORK—Eighty-year-old John Moller is made defendant in two actions brought by his forty-seven-year-old son, John Moller, Jr., former Metropolitan golf champion. In a $81,500 damage suit filed with the Supreme Court, "young" Mr. Moller declares he would have followed a business career but for his father's pre that he "live as a gentleman of leisure" and keep himself "free to become a chum and companion" of his parents. With this understanding says the son, he has lived until very recently on an allowance which his father agreed to make him, but which now has been withdrawn.

MYSTERY SURROUNDS NAME

When they come by their new independence, Albanians may discover how they came by their name—the name, that is, which outsiders give them, for they call themselves Skipetars. Tradition for a long time maintained that there was some obscure connection between the people and Alba Longa, in Italy. But it seems more probable that the word is a corruption of Arbanutia, a Greek name given to the region. This was softened into Albanetia and at length into Albania.—London Chronicle.

WEEKLY REPORT ON FARM CONDITIONS

Rains Have Delayed Almost Every Branch of Farm Work—Roots Are Making Rapid Growth

HAY CROP WILL BE FAIR

Frequent and heavy rains during the week delayed almost every branch of farm work.

Corn is not doing its best with the excessive moisture and comparatively cool weather of the past three or four weeks.

Roots are making rapid growth, but so are the weeds, which have got a big start owing to the frequent showers, with little opportunity for hoeing. Early potatoes never promised better, and will soon be general on the market.

Vegetables, and in fact all garden products, are doing remarkably well this season.

Of the field crops, beans have done the poorest so far, as weather conditions have been against the best results. On the other hand peas look very promising.

All the grain crops are looking well, although some fields have been knocked down by the heavy rains. With fine weather, however, these will likely recover, and good yields of both grain and straw are looked for.

Hay will be a fair crop, but wet harvest weather is telling against it. Some cut early has been out for days In many quarters haying and grain harvesting will run together, which will further complicate the labour situation.

All classes of live stock are thriving on good pastures. Thee flow of milk is still good, though hardly up to the unusually heavy yield of the latter part of June. Marketing of live stock has been slow during the week.

Farm help is urgently needed, but experienced labour is very hard to find. "Vacation" assistance, however, is being tried out in many lines of field work.

MARK STREET S. S. ANNUAL OUTING

Enjoyable Time Was Spent at Hiawatha on Tuesday

The annual excursion of the Mark Street Methodist Church Sunday School took place on Tuesday, July 17th. A large crowd of enthusiastic children, accompanied by their parents and friends, not forgetting the baskets, boarded the steamer Stoney Lake, which took them to Hiawatha. The great feature of the day was sunshine. The usual rain kept itself aloof until the day was well nigh spent.

Arriving at Hiawatha before 12, (noon), a bid was made for the baskets, which soon changed capacity, after which the following races were run off:

1. Girls, 5 years old and under—first prize, L. Staves; second prize, Irene Throop.
2. Boys, five years and under—1st prize, C. Watley; second, E. Burton.
3. Girls, 7 years and under—First prize, I. Tennyson; second, L. Simmons.
4. Boys, 7 years and under—First prize, B. Mowry; second, J. Ellis.
5. Girls, 10 years and under—First prize, E. Champion; 2nd, D. Burton.
6. Boys, ten years and under—1st prize, M. Mesley; 2nd, H. Pomeroy.
7. Girls, 12 and under—1st prize, L. Hamblin.
8. Girls, 15 years and under—First E. Stevens.
9. Boys, 15 years and under—First prize, Y. Staves.
10. Young ladies' race—First, E. Stevens.
11. Boot race — First prize, H. Loder.
12. Block Race—1st prize, M. Cox.
13. Married Ladies' race—1st prize, Mrs. Batton.
14. Button sewing for married men. This item was the feature of the sports. It was easily seen that a great many of the contestants excelled in the art, especially the Rev. Whattam, who went at his task both workmanlike and confident, proving the fact that his spare moments were used to good advantage. Another, who gave himself away, and was quite excited over his job, was Ken. Throop, but alas, the eagle eyes of Mesdames Whattam, Succee and Hagerman, who acted as judges, proved to Messrs. Whattam and Throop that a quiet, unassuming fellow (F. Burnham) had them all beat.

At 4 p.m. the whistle blew, and as the shores receded all joined in a sigh of contentment.

A splendid day, a beautiful place for a picnic, and to help all the courtesy of the boat crew. The booth was ably managed by the genial Mrs. J. Speers and Miss Whattam. Special thanks should be tendered these ladies, especially Mrs. Speers, for her clever and careful manipulation of the knife in dissecting melons.

High Insurance Hurts Recruiting

Ottawa, July 20.—During the question hour in the House of Commons, Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux said that since the Military Service Bill had been brought up he had received letters from a number of young men who were liable to be called to service under it, asking if the government would amend the Insurance Act so as to fix a maximum on the premiums of their life insurance policies.

The war risks, he said, were higher with the insurance companies, and there was a feeling amongst these men that if they were called, as they probably would be, they would be unable to pay the increased premiums. He asked the Prime Minister to take this matter into consideration.

How Any Woman Can Remove Hairy Growths

(Beauty Culture.)

It is not longer necessary for a woman to visit a beauty specialist to have superfluous hairs removed, for, with the aid of a plain delatone paste, she can, in the privacy of her own home, remove even a stubborn growth in a very few minutes. The paste is made by mixing some water with a little powdered delatone. This is applied to the hairs and after 2 or 3 minutes removed and the skin washed, when it will be left clear and hairless. Be sure you buy real delatone.

POISON AND ROPE FAIL, STEW KILLS

AMSTERDAM, July 20.—A Prague newspaper relates the story of an artist there who found it impossible to kill himself with poison or a rope, and who shuffled off this mortal soil finally by eating a restaurant stew. The newspaper's account of the tragedy is as follows:

"Tired of life at forty-five, the artist procured a violent poison and tried to poison himself with it. In vain he waited a fatal effect and the following day had the remains of the tute' poison. He then procured a rope vial analyzed. It was a 'war substi- and hanged himself, but the rope was made of paper pulp and it broke. The two-fold failure of his attempt at suicide the man regarded as a sign of fate and a fresh joy in life inspired him. Proceeding to a restaurant he ordered and consumed an alleged meat stew. It was a 'war substitute' stew, and two hours later he was dead."

Paper Money Found Crumbled Into Dust

Several Large Packages from Strong Box of Vessel Sunk Fifty Years Ago.

Alpena, Mich., July 20.—The divers who have been down in the Pewabic, which was sunk in collision off Thunder Bay Island some 50 years ago, have brought up the strong box of the craft. The box was opened and inside were several large packages of paper money. As soon as they were picked up and exposed to the air they crumbled into dust.

Chloride of Lime Can Explodes

Woman's Eyes Are Terribly Burned, but Sight May Be Saved.

ST. MARY'S, July 20.—Mrs. McKinnon, wife of Anthony McKinnon, editor of The Embro Courier, had her eyes terribly burned when a can of chloride of lime, which she was trying to open, exploded. She has suffered the most intense pain ever since the accident. The attending physicians hope to save the sight of the eyes.

BOTH WANT THE CHILD.

Father Asks Court to Give Him Custody of 9-year-old Glady Tuttle.

For the possession of his 9-year-old daughter, Glady Clarice, now in possession of the mother, Mr. Reuben Tuttle, of Campbellford, made an application through counsel at Osgoode Hall, Toronto, yesterday. The child is staying in Toronto with the mother. No allegations of misconduct are made on either side, and it is stated that the trouble is that the mother is opposed to the idea of living in Campbellford and prefers to reside in Toronto, where her parents live.

The case will be heard next Tuesday.

HURLED LAVA 2,500 FEET.

Latest Eruption of Etna Record-Breaking in Its Discharge.

CATANIA, Sicily, July 19. — The most recent eruption of Mount Etna, although very brief, caused a panic among the population of the nearby districts in consequence of the enormous quantity of lava discharged, which surpassed the previous records.

Professor Pond, an expert on volcanic activities, on returning from a visit to the crater, after witnessing the phenomena, said the eruption was of wonderful grandeur. The column of lava reached a height of 2,500 feet above the crater, and in thirty-five minutes the area for a mile around was covered with lava to a thickness varying from ten to twenty feet, ...

Editor of the Examiner.

Dear Sir,—One of the greatest facilities to accomplish desired results is speed, when the same can be utilized without in any way neutralizing efficiency

The automobile or, in other words, the runabout, constructed for utility, can be brought into requisition in many ways that are beneficial.

The city having procured such a means of conveyance, for the Street Commissioner has not only had the satisfaction of ascertaining the benefit from the results that followed, but has had the approval of every ratepayer in the matter. The official can accomplish a multiplicity of street supervision and inspection that heretofore was impossible, and save more than the price of the machine in cartage in a very short period. So much for the conduct of street maintenance and construction. When you have accomplished everything desirable in a municipality along those very important lines, and have not provided to guard against unsanitary conditions that are bound to crop up, you have come far short of the great object in view.

The Sanitary Inspector cannot perform all the duties that devolve upon him unless some provision is made to expedite matters, and where an official gives evidence of anxiety and earnestness to fulfil the obligations that devolve upon him, as does the incumbent of the position for the city. I would strongly urge that the City Council make provision for such motor conveyance as would be suitable at once.

Yours respectfully,
Ratepayer.

Lime is not an important direct food for plants, but its chief functions in the soil are to neutralize acidity and to promote bacterial activities.

ALLEGED GAMBLING CASE WAS ONLY A FRIENDLY GAME OF CARDS

That ancient fiction of the inactivity of police may have had some element of fact in other days and other places, but it surely doesn't apply to Chief Thompson's men. During the past week there have been a number of cases that prove that the police are not overlooking much. Even minor infractions of the traffic by-law are observed, as for example, that of a vehicle drawn up in the wrong direction at a curb. This was one of P. C. Wigg's reports, indicating that he not only knows the by-laws but he is also literally interpreting them in the strict performance of his duty.

Another case was an alleged gambling incident which Sergt Reid and Constable Deannard sleuthed on Sunday night, but which Magistrate Dumble dismissed this morning for lack of evidence. In the words of the Magistrate they had a "preconceived suspicion" that a little friendly game of cards was proceeding at so much per corner. They had hidden themselves on a back verandah which they used for observation purposes, but one bumped against a garbage can that was obscured in the dark. The housewife inside remarked that cats were at the can, and started out to investigate, and realising that they were about to be discovered the police advanced to the door. From the evidence of the defense it appeared that a game of cards had been in progress, but all the witnesses declared that there had been no gambling. The result was that the case fell to pieces, in spite of the sleuthing efforts of the police.

"Come around to the front door next time," said one of the principals as a parting shot to Sergt. Reid and P. C. Deannard.

Potatoes To Have Uniform Standard

Government Has Selected Five of the Best Growers

TORONTO, July 20.—At a consultation held yesterday at the Provincial Parliament Buildings Prof. C. A. Zavits ,of Guelph; T. C. Raynor, of the Dominion Seeds Branch, and representative of both the Federal and Provincial Departments of Agriculture, selected five of the thirty leading varieties of potatoes for the purpose of demonstrating the desirability of establishing a uniform standard within the province for the guidance of all potato growers.

Two early and three late varieties were selected: Extra Early Eureka and Irish Cobbler for the early market ,and Green Mountain, Empire State and Dooley for the late crop. District representatives will conduct tests of these types in every county, and it is expected that the demonstrations will lead to their adoption by all farmers who wish to benefit by the advantages of sharing in a uniform market.

W. B. Roadhouse, Provincial Deputy Minister of Agriculture, pointed out that the potato-growing industry was being handicapped within the province because of the multiplicity of varieties used for seed. The types selected, he said, had been found eminently suitable for profitable cultivation throughout the province generally.

FARM HOUSE IS BURNED

Home of Wm. Windsor Near Burleigh Falls Destroyed By Fire

Special to The Examiner.

BURLEIGH FALLS, July 20.—The home of William Windsor, a farmer living about two miles from here, was totally destroyed by fire on Wednesday night. Just how the blaze started is a mystery. The head of the household, on going upstairs, found the top portion of the building in flames and the fire quickly spread consuming house and contents in quick order, hardly anything being saved. The loss will be partially covered by insurance.

Shoots Girl He Loves And Laughs About It

Man Freed From Detroit Correction House, Hastens Into Toils Again.

DETROIT, July 20.—Released Wednesday from the Detroit House of Correction, Joseph Traian went yesterday to the home of Seda Agermo, 1,094 Rivard street, and killed her as she stood talking to him on the doorstep. He fired two bullets into her heart, and then ran from the house. A mounted patrolman pursued and captured him.

Traian was in love with Miss Agermo. He was sent to the House of Correction for having threatened her when she spurned his attentions. He is also said to have been jealous of another man. To-day he went to the girl's home to force his attentions again on her, and when she again refused him he shot her.

When the police questioned Traian about the affair he laughed. He readily admitted having shot the girl, the police say.

MEDALS FOR MOTHERS OF FALLEN SOLDIERS

Work of the Kith and Kin Association Outlined.

KITCHENER, July 19. — Gordon Wright of London, president of the Kith and Kin Association of Canada, addressed the local branch of the association outlining the work so far accomplished and what is in course of preparation for the future. He stated that Canada was as ill-prepared for peace as we were for war when it broke out, and the returned soldier problem would become a gigantic task unless preparations were made beforehand and a good way to do this was through the Kith and Kin Association. He cited what had appeared hopeless cases, but which had been satisfactorily adjusted to the benefit of the kith and kin. Every mother in Canada who had lost a son at the front was going to be decorated with a medal, commencing September 15. The mothers were doing something for which they could never be repaid. He hoped to see the medals for mothers become an international affair.

TORONTO CHAUFFEUR FOUND MURDERED

Was Employed By Prof. Mulvaney Known to Peterboro' as a Corn Doctor

TORONTO, July 20.—With five knife wounds in his back and breast, Tony Ross, a licensed chauffeur, and son-in-law of Prof. R. J. Mulvaney, was found dead on the side of the road on Salisbury avenue, Humber Bay, early this morning by workmen. There was no sign of a struggle near where the body was found. A motive of the murder baffles the police. Ross was an Italian and his right name was Lapella. He assumed the name of Ross when he came here from the United States some years ago.

Mulvaney sold herb medicines in a store of Water street, Peterborough, some time ago, and also sold tapeworm medicine on the market square, and is well known in Peterborough.

Teller Pulled a Gun On Alleged Forger

WINDSOR, July 20.—While a teller in the Windsor branch of the Merchants Bank yesterday held Frederick Atkinson, alias Williams, a captive by pointing a revolver at his head, a telephone call was sent in for a police officer, who placed him under arrest on a charge of forgery.

It is alleged that Atkinson, who is connected with a prominent Amherstburg family, has obtained quite a large sum of money by means of fictitious cheques bearing various names, some of which he cashed in arrested to-day oirfd yoif yifw yoi Ford and others in Walkerville. When arrested to-day he was trying to obtain $50 on a cheque endorsed with the name "J. C. Clare," a mythical individual. Walkerville police say the prisoner gave his name as George Gregory, and his residence as College street, Toronto, when he put through the "phoney" cheque there.

Let Civil Servants Help In The Harvest

Saskatchewan Government Will Continue Their Pay While Absent.

REGINA, July 20.—Civil servants of the Provincial Government who desire to work in the harvest fields will be given leave of absence from their duties for this purpose, and will draw pay while away from their work. While this step has not been officially decided upon yet, the plans are all made, and the assent of the Executive Council is the only formality to be complied with. A similar policy was followed with regard to spring work on the land, but only a few of them took advantage of the opportunity to

Question Of Officers Who Are Over Age

Capt. J. H. Burnham Brings the Matter Up in the House

OTTAWA, July 20.—The question of officers who are over age was brought up after recess in the House yesterday by Capt. J. H. Burnham, who declared that many had succeeded in getting to the battlefront and had fought gallantly; others, quite as determined to go, had failed to get to the front; others again, who had no desire to go, had remained in Canada, and were now occupying preferential treatment and positions to which they were not entitled. No provision for this was contained in the bill now before the House, and he thought there should be an amendment to the army act. There were numerous cases where men should have been brought back from the front and put in these positions. These men who remained in Canada antagonized young men, and the Government should stop this condition in the interests of recruiting.

YOUNGSTER BREAKS ARM

Son of Rev. J. H. Edmison Injured at Stoney Lake

Boys With Farmers Are Working Well

Mr. Garnet Galley of the Y. M. C. A., who is in touch with many of the boys engaged in farm work, reports that they are giving a good account of themselves. In the district of Peterborough all but one boy are holding their places. One youth admitted that he didn't like the work and would be glad when the summer work was over, but he was determined to stay with his uncongenial task, believing that he was doing his bit to help in this year's greater production movement.

In the Belleville district one farmer employs sixteen boys. They wheel about five miles from town, and commence work at 7 o'clock. Not one of them has been late yet, and they work all day until 6 o'clock in the evening, with one hour for dinner. This farmer has stated that he is highly satisfied with the boys' work, that they are not only dutiful and industrious, but their work is

AGED MAN DIGS HIS OWN GRAVE AND BURIES HIMSELF

ERIE, Pa., July 20.— Digging his own grave under a stump on his farm and burying himself under it was the unusual method of suicide taken by James C. Corey, 93 years old, pioneer of the Lake Shore west of this city.

Boys urged on by a reward of $100 offered by the younger Corey, who is 66 years old, led to the discovery of the body last night after two days' searching by scores of neighbours. The suicide had strangled himself to death with his suspenders, after crawling into the hole and dragging the stump roots over him.

The death of Corey's wife, after living together nearly 70 years is believed to have unbalanced the old man's mind

A German Agent

RUSSIAN RADICAL SOCIALIST LEADER IN PAY OF THE ENEMY.

PETROGRAD, July 20.—A letter from Gen. Brusiloff's chief of staff states that Nikolai Lenine, the Radical Socialist leader, is an agent of the German general staff. The evidence was traced through the confession of Lieut. Ermolenko that he was sent to the front of the sixth Russian army to make a propaganda in favour of an early peace with Germany. Lenine's task was to compromise the Provisional Government in the eyes of the people by every possible means. Funds were sent through the intermediary of an employe of the German Legation at Stockholm. The alleged chief German agent in Russia is Maxsta Koslovsky, to whose account, it is stated 2,000,000 roubles are now standing.

PICK MEN BY DRAWINGS.

WASHINGTON, July 20.— The selection of 687,000 Americans from the 10,000,000 registered as the first call for a great national army will begin to-day. Provost Marshal-General Crowder issued a statement to-day outlining a sample plan for choosing the names with absolute equality. There are 4,557 exemption districts throughout the United States with an average of 3,000 registerants for each. By two drawings, which will be conducted in Washington, one of numbers from one to a thousand and another from cipher to ten the numbers drawn will reach every man in every district who will then appear at his local board for examination.

WAS ON VERGE OF GIVING UP HIS JOB

Toronto Man Says His Health Was Almost Completely Shattered

"If the people of Toronto only knew how much good Tanlac has done me you would sell ten thousand bottles of the medicine here today," was the remarkable statement made to the Tanlac representative the other day by William R. Chitty, living at 28 Grosvenor street, Toronto. Mr. Chitty has been a resident of Toronto for eight years, and is employed by the Russell Motor Car Co. as tool setter in the fuse department.

"Yes, sir, I gained ten pounds on two bottles of Tanlac," he continued, "and feel better in every way than I have in three years. It's just wonderful how Tanlac took hold of my troubles and built me up.

"I had one of the worst cases of stomach trouble and nervousness you ever saw, and got so bad off I was on the verge of giving up my job, and the most discouraging part about it was that I seemed to be getting worse all the time. At one time I was down in bed for two weeks, and if I had gone by my feelings I would have been in bed half the time. What I ate didn't digest well and didn't give me any strength at all. My tongue was coated and I had a misery to taste in my mouth nearly all the time. I couldn't sleep good and when I got up in the morning I could hardly drag myself out of bed. I just dreaded to go to work and often I felt so bad I'd have to leave my work and go to the company's hospital to lie down.

"My nerves were on edge all the time and the least little thing would completely upset me.

"This is the very shape I was in when I began to hear of the good work Tanlac was doing for people in Toronto. I lost no time in buying a bottle, and I began to feel better after the first few doses. I am now on my third bottle, and, as I have already said, I have gained ten pounds and I feel so much stronger and better that my work is really a pleasure to me. The stomach trouble has been entirely overcome, I'm not nervous, I sleep good and don't have those awful, splitting headaches any more. I have a fine appetite, what I eat tastes good and agrees with me perfectly. I tell you I feel like a different man, and I wouldn't take anything in the world for the good Tanlac did me."

Tanlac is sold in Peterborough by the Warne Drug Co.

ONTARIO REFORMATORY HAS CEASED TO EXIST

GUELPH, July 20.—What was once known as the Ontario Reformatory is now a thing of the past. There is not a single prisoner of any description out at the institution, so beautifully situated a short distance from the city. The last three inmates have been removed to the farm at Mimico.

SOUTH ENDS DROP THREE TO KING PINS

In the five-pin League at the Water street alleys, last night, the King Pins won three straight games from the South Ends. In the first game the South Ends were somewhat off colour, and also the King Pins had to use a "dummy" score in place of Lush, the King Pins winning out by 55 pins. In the second and third games the King Pins won out by 21 and 22 pins. By winning three games the King Pins are now tie with the Grocers for second place, with 11 wins and 7 losses, and the South Ends drop to fourth place. Barrett was high man for the South Ends with a 448 total. Solomon had high count for the King Pins with a 406 total, while Jones, for the King Pins, had high single of 188. Following are the scores:

Baseball Supplies Lost

CHICAGO, Ill., July 19.—The German ruthless submarine campaign was felt in the sporting world when the announcement came from Washington that the American steamship Kansas, carrying enough baseball supplies to outfit 150 baseball clubs and intended for General Pershing's troops, had been sunk in the Far East.

The baseballs, bats and gloves were sent by Clark Griffith, manager of the Washington (American league) baseball club, who three months ago started a chain letter to collect 25 cents from each of his friends to supply soldiers in the American army with baseball outfits. About 30,000 responded to the call. When the receipts totalled $8,000 Griffith purchased the supplies and started them to General John W. Pershing, somewhere in France. The submarine did the rest.

Griffith, who was here directing the fortunes of the Washington baseball club in their battle against the White Sox, announced that he would start another chain letter at once and ask every one who contributed on the first call to send in another quarter. When the new subscription reaches $8,000 another load of supplies will be started across the Atlantic.

DECLINED $7,500 SALARY TO SERVE PUBLIC FREE

MR. JOHN G. KENT, a man of wealth and extensive business interests, who has refused to accept any remuneration whatever for his services as General Manager of the Canadian National Exhibition, preferring to serve the public free of charge. He is President of the Toronto Board of Trade and has been on the Exhibition Board since 1905, always showing a close interest in the work. He was President in 1912-13, the two best years in the history of the institution. Mr. Kent is head of the Boy Scouts in Toronto and is identified with many philanthropic enterprises. Long and continued illness has compelled Dr. Orr, Manager since 1903, to seek a long rest.

Indict Girl Nurse As Woman Slayer

Miss Harriet A. Varney, a hospital nurse, has been indicted for the murder of Mrs. Pauline Keyes at Brookline, Mass., on June 19. After the jury reported she was arraigned before Judge Keating, at Dedham, pleaded not guilty and was held without bail for trial.

George H. Keyes, husband of the murdered woman, was held as a material witness in $8,000 bail, which was furnished by Mrs. Pauline M. Eisenbach, Mrs. Keney's mother, and Francis Edwards, both of Boston.

The body of Mrs. Keyes, a bullet hole in the head and a wound on the right hand, was found by neighbors in the dining room of her apartment an hour after the shooting. She was seated at a table, and a revolver was near her hand. All the indications were that she had committed suicide, and a medical examiner so reported.

But the police did not accept this theory, and conducted a secret investigation, largely upon information furnished by the husband, who came to Massachusetts about eight years ago from Seattle, Wash., and engaged in the real estate business.

The mystery grew after the arrest of Miss Varney, when the authorities learned for the first time she had been known for several years as the wife of Keyes. She had luncheon with him in Boston on the day of the shooting. The police believe Mrs. Keyes was killed about noon and their theory is that Miss Varney went to Brookline and shot her just before or after she had luncheon with Keyes.

Keyes accompanied detectives to West Upton, where Miss Varney was arrested in the home in which she had lived as Mrs. Keyes. The police say Keyes held her hand affectionately while she rested her head upon his shoulder.

He was examined [illegible]th at the inquest and again by the Grand Jury. Witnesses accounted for his movements on June 19 and established what was accepted by the District Attorney as a complete alibi.

A note written by Mrs. Keyes and found near the body figured prominently in the inquiry. It referred to domestic troubles and indicated that she contemplated suicide. The state alleges the message was written under a threat of death made by some one who stood over her with a revolver, and who, after having staged what would be accepted as a suicide, killed her.

Miss Varney, cool and seemingly unconcerned, has refused to make a statement, but her counsel declares she was not within miles of Brookline the day Mrs. Keyes was killed.

Military Funeral To Be Given in Montreal to Murdered Soldier.

MONTREAL, July 20.—Mrs. Leitch who was shot near Sand Point, Ont., by Wm. Bennett after he had killed her husband, Lieut. Bruce A. Leitch, was brought to Montreal yesterday by her mother. At the hospital to which she was conveyed it was said she was resting easily and would recover.

The body of Lieut. Leitch will be brought here to-day and will be given a military funeral.

POOR CROPS ON LOW LAND.

COLBORNE, July 20.—A good acreage of beans and potatoes are reported planted in East Northumberland. The apple crop is reported to be quite below the normal there as elsewhere, notwithstanding reports to the contrary. Hay is not equal to last year, but good. Grain on high land is reported excellent, but owing to the excessive rains low-land crops are not showing up so well.

FOOD SCARCE IN BOHEMIA.

Explains Demonstrations There Against the Austrian Government.

That the food shortage in Bohemia is an important contributing cause of the recent violent demonstrations against the Austrian Government seems to be shown by the publication in Pravo Lidu, a Czech Socialist paper of Prague, of the following announcement to the public recently posted up by the municipal authorities of the city of Budweis:

"To the people of the city of Budweis:

"The events of yesterday lead us to believe that they were not caused by the insufficient nourishment from which we all suffer, but were provoked by unscrupulous agitators.

"We consider it our duty to ask the population, in the name of the City Council, to maintain order in every way. We shall take pains to see that the city of Budweis is supplied with foodstuffs to at least the same degree as every other Austrian city. We, together with the rest of the population of the monarchy, must endeavour to get along with the food supply on hand, even if this process imposes heavy trials and privations upon us.

"Through mass parades, demonstrations, injury of property of others, and similar acts of violence, conditions are not improved and bitterness is increased. Therefore, we call upon everyone to strive for calmness and order, to refrain from gathering in crowds and not to take part in any mass-meetings.

"For the maintenance of the public order we are obliged to announce the following police regulations: Until further notice the doors of houses and stores must be closed at 7 p.m. House owners and tenants are expected to see that the inmates of their houses, especially young persons, do not leave home after 7 p.m. (old, responsible persons only upon necessary grounds). The city parks will be closed at 7 p.m. Violations of these orders will be punished with imprisonment of from one week to one month.

THE MAYOR."

At the same time the office of the chief of the administrative district sent out a notice to the effect that women had been marching in bodies to the officials and sending in delegations to voice their complaints. Such action was declared to be inadmissible and the women were all going to be severely punished.

APPEAL FROM VON TIRPITZ

Seeks National Liberal Leader's Support in Opposing Peace Move.

COPE[illegible]GEN, July 19.—Admiral von Tirpitz has telegraphed an appeal to Ernst Bassermann, the national Liberal leader, who is now an invalid, to leave the sanitarium where he is under treatment and assist in the fight against the bloc resolution in the Reichstag, which will come up Friday. The von Tirpitz message says:

"No passing food difficulties or war weariness must be allowed to soften the German people's determination and render possible a peace which would threaten the future of Germany and its working classes. The bulk of the national Liberals will probably vote against the non-annexationist resolution."

YOUR ELEVEN ACRES.

(Farm and Fireside)

The earth has a trifle less than 17,000,000 square miles of total surface. A little over a fourth of this surface is land, 55,000,000 square miles of it. And of this 28,000,000 square miles, or a scant fraction over one half, is soil that can be used for food production. The rest is desert, mountain range, and polar regions. A little of this might possibly be reclaimed, but not very much.

So here we have two vital facts in the practical geography of to-day. There are 1,800,000,000 people on the earth to feed, and 28,000,000 square miles of tillable land with which to do it. Or, reduced to figures in which we are more accustomed to think, this means that one person must live off the production of every 11 acres, on an average, the world over. Don't say "It can't be done," for it must be done or somebody will starve. In Belgium to-day, as for the last two years, helpless mothers watch their babies slowly starve to death before their eyes. Poland is in almost as pitiable a plight, judging from the fragmentary reports that have filtered through, and all Europe is suffering to some extent, the poor especially.

OBITUARY

MRS. T. ALLUM.

Hephsibah H. Allum, widow of the late T. A. Allum, passed peacefully away on Wednesday morning at her residence, 484 Sherbrooke street, after an illness extending over five months.

Mrs. Allum was the daughter of the late Mr. Greenhowe, well known in charitable work in this city, and granddaughter of Mr. Thomas Cranfield, noted as the founder of Sunday and Evening Schools, London, Eng.

The late Mrs. Allum was born in London, within sound of Bow Bells, and came to Canada with the family in 1852. She remained some time in Montreal and finally settled in Peterborough in 1862.

She was married in 1880 to Mr. Allum, who predeceased her about seven years ago. In her younger days Mrs. Allum was a successful music teacher and was principal of South Central Public school of this city. She was a member of long standing in Trinity Methodist church and deeply interested in Sunday school work. She was the beloved teacher of the Adult Woman's Bible Class and continued her ministrations thereto until a few months ago. For eighteen years she filled the office of treasurer of the Woman's Missionary Society with characteristic efficiency.

The domestic life of Mrs. Allum was most beautiful and praiseworthy and all the inmates of her home received a tender, thoughtful woman's care. All her near relatives have predeceased her. She leaves one adopted daughter, Annie Rigby, to mourn her loss.

The funeral was held this afternoon to the Little Lake cemetery, Rev. Dr. Wilson conducting the service.

Voice of The People

I would just like to draw the attention of one section of the Peterborough business men, namely, the Barbers. Why should these tonsorial artists not fall in line with the rest of the trades people? I notice some are complying, while others are content to transgress. They do not carry any perishable goods, so why not give the business men their hearty co-operation and support. If circumstances are against any one of them, I would suggest opening a benevolent fund and help them over the difficulty.

Hoping next week to see them all in line and take a well earned and a deserving half holiday.

Yours respectfully,
A Business Man.

FRONT LAWN BATHING.
A party of little girls on Boswell avenue had prepared to-day to go in bathing, but the disagreeable day would not permit of their going away from home. However, not to be deprived altogether of their fun, an impromptu arrangement was made on the front lawn, which permitted them to enjoy themselves about as much as if they had gone to the river.

Miss Gertrude Stevens, late member of St. Paul's choir, leaves the city on Monday to visit her mother at Bowmanville, after which she will take residence with her uncle, Dr. J. E. Brown, 10 Carleton street, Toronto, and continue her musical studies.

It is easy to predict a distinguished future for Miss Stevens. She is endowed with a contralto voice of remarkably fine quality and with a keen musical temperament, she sings "with spirit and the understanding also." Though her voice and its capabilities have been markedly developed under the teaching of Mr. John Allen, much greater things may be expected under further and uninterrupted study.

Miss Stevens' singing has many admirers and her modest and unassuming qualities and pleasant presence have made for her many friends during her stay in Peterborough, and she will be followed to her new home with deep interest in her future and high hopes for the success in the musical world, which her splendid voice and her musical talent reasonably promise.

Press On Prussian Chancellor's Fall

"Beginning of a Triumph"

Boston Post: "It does not appear that the impetus that sends Hollweg into retirement was exerted by the Kaiser. If that is true then the resignation seems to be the beginning of a triumph for press, public and the Reichstag such as the empire has not known before."

"Not Reassuring"

Philadelphia Record: "For those who wish to see Germany liberated and democratized, as an important step toward peace and a more harmonious world in the future, it is not reassuring to learn that one of the most potent influences that brought about the downfall of Von Behmann-Hollweg as Imperial Chancellor was the opposition of the Crown Prince."

"Pressure Brought to Bear"

Norwich Bulletin: "The fact, however, that Chancellor Bethmann-Hollwegg has resigned and at the same time the threatened resignation of the other members of the ministry indicates that not a little pressure has been brought to bear, and that, from the manner in which the Kaiser has been sturdily supporting the Chancellor, who, of course, is only his mouthpiece, cannot be interpreted as coming from him."

"Never Been Popular"

Columbia State: "Bethmann-Hollweg is, to judge from his face, a gentleman and a man of parts. He has never been popular in Germany, if we may trust the comic press. In ten years the people were no more able to remove him than they could remove all his predecessors or the man to whom they all looked for orders. Through seven years of peace and three of war the German people have gesticulated, but little has come of it."

"Are Hopeful Signs"

New York World: "If pulling down and setting up Chancellors responsible only to the Kaiser and his generals are nothing more than tricky responses to evidences of popular unrest, they are hopeful signs. If they are supermilitarism's defiance of liberty and responsible government, they are savage reminders to an embattled earth of the monstrous wrong which democracy is fighting to the death."

"More than Appears on Surface"

Pittsburg Post: "When the people of Russia gained force enough to compel changes things moved swiftly to the dethronement of the Tsar. When it is reflected that Bethmann-Hollwegg has been the chief spokesman of the Kaiser since 1909, and that they are warm personal friends, his resigning, after saying that he believed it his duty to remain at his post, may mean much more than appears on the surface."

TWO MILLIONS DAILY

Canada's War Burden is Steadily Increasing.

The war is costing Canada nearly $2,000,000 a day. You can help your country to bear that burden and improve your own financial position by investing in War Savings Certificates. It is a business as well as a patriotic proposition. The certificates are on sale at every bank and at every money order post office. They bear interest at a rate of nearly 5½ per cent. They are purchaseable in three amounts for three year periods and you can have your money back at any time with interest. The certificates are registered at Ottawa. The investment is secure. The financial return is splendid. The face of doing your duty should be a greater incentive. The nation needs your money. You can purchase a $25 bond for $21.50. Those for $50 and $100 are sold for $43 and $86 respectively. Invest in these certificates and lend your savings to the nation. The financial line supports the firing line. Be on one line if you are not on the other. F-6.

Canadian Troops Are Pressing Closer To Lens Stronghold

Established a Post Well to the North of Any Hitherto Occupied and Only 1500 Yards From the Heart of Lens—Enemy is Losing Heart.

BY STEWART LYON.

Special Correspondent of The Canadian Press.

Canadian Army Headquarters, July 20.—Early this morning Canadian troops holding the front between Avion and Lens in the flooded area, established a post well to the north of any hitherto occupied. There was little retaliation from the Germans. The new post is only 1,500 yards from the heart of Lens.

The German defence of Lens is worthy of a better cause. As our patrols push forward through the mass of crumbling rubbish, which now marks the site of one of France's greatest pre-war industrial everywhere that the enemy intends to hold the centre of the city until his losses become unendurable.

The front line is marked by rows of houses that have been pulled down to add, by their debris, to the strength of the cellars wherein the Germans shelter from the incessant artillery fire directed against them. Wire entanglements have been constructed around these houses, so that each is a self-contained strong point with a subterranean exit in the rear of its garrison. Provided with good machine gun emplacements, houses so fortified prove a hard nut to crack, and there are now thousands of such houses in the Lens salient.

ENEMY LOSING HEAVILY.

To the Canadians who are confronting this mighty defensive position, the most comforting thought is that it is a salient and that from the north and south, as well as the west, its defenders are under fire. Their losses are very great. Evidence recently to hand shows that one division opposing us has been burying from seventy to eighty men daily, shell fire being the chief cause of death. The number buried must be considerably less than the total daily fatalities because the larger shell often destroy the bodies of their victims so that there is no possibility of a burial. Our artillery attacks are reinforced by the frequent use of gas projected into the enemy lines when the wind is favourable and discharged in the form of gas shells at all hours of the day or night. Nothing else causes such terror among the Germans as these gas bombardments.

Captured documents prove that the proposal to lessen the number of dugouts in the hope of preventing the men in the trenches from being caught in them and forced to surrender when attacked has been adopted by the leaders of one of the enemy divisions opposite to us. An order has been found providing for a reduction in the number of dugouts from which it would appear that not more than a third of the front line garrison is now provided with them. The others must face shell fire in the trenches so that they may be immediately available to repel an attack. Another precautionary measure for lessening dugout surrenders is the placing of these shelters well behind the front line trenches.

Foster Proposed To "Get After Pugsley"

Hon. Dr. Pugsley Declares Attempt Was Made to Drive Him From Office Unfairly—Member For St. John Claims No Analogy Possible Between His Case and That of Rogers

REPLIED TO BORDEN

OTTAWA, Ont., July 21.—Hon. Dr. Pugsley rose in the Commons to a question of privilege yesterday afternoon which brought up some past Parliamentary history of considerable interest. The member for St. John called attention to a statement made by Sir Robert Borden in connection with the appointment of the judicial commission to enquire into the Galt findings in so far as they affected Hon. Robert Rogers. In reply to a challenge from Sir Wilfrid Laurier as to its propriety of such a commission, Sir Robert had said that in 1900 one of Sir Wilfrid's colleagues, who sat beside him now, had used infinitely stronger language against Mr. Justice Landry in connection with a report affecting him than Mr. Rogers had used against Mr. Justice Galt.

Dr. Pugsley stated that Mr. Rogers had accused Judge Galt of having malicious intent, which could not be affected by any evidence which he might submit.

Sir Robert declared that Dr. Pugsley had used infinitely stronger language than that in connection with Mr. Justice Landry and had not been rebuked by his leader. Moreover, when the report was brought up in Parliament and it was urged that it be not disregarded, the leader of the Government of that day had ignored it and the then Minister of Public Works remained as head of his department.

"Mr. Speaker," said Dr. Pugsley, "the statement of my right honourable friend is contrary to facts in two important particulars. I would not bring this up if it did not affect my own personal honour. Members of the House ought to be very careful how they attack each other. We should not attack each other like wolves striving to injure each other's character. The Prime Minister should have been more careful to secure his facts before he so attacked me."

The enquiry under Judge Landry had to do with the alleged sale of $250,000 worth of bonds of the Eastern Railway, without Governmental authority and while Dr. Pugsley was a member of the New Brunswick Government. In connection with the report there had been no motion for enquiry. The motion was to have Dr. Pugsley declared guilty of misconduct, and to have him retired from the Government.

Hon. George E. Foster, now Minister of Trade and Commerce, had written to Hon. J. D. Hazen, the Premier of the Province, telling him that they proposed to "get after Pugsley." The letter which Dr. Pugsley read in the House yesterday afternoon declared that "Pugsley would try to bluff it out and say it was not based on evidence."

"We propose," Sir George had said, "to get after him here before he gets the evidence which I am told is pretty straight goods." Sir George then requested a copy of the evidence.

"That," said Dr. Pugsley, yesterday afternoon, "is the letter from my high minded friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce. He and others sought to drive me from office without consideration of the evidence."

EDISON GIVES A WAR PHONOGRAPH.

Charles A. Edison, at the Edison Laboratories in East Orange, N.Y., recently presented to the Fifth New Jersey Infantry one of the new phonographs designed for the army and navy. The phonograph is reinforced with iron, and can be thrown into an army wagon or into a ship's hold without damage. The outer case is waterproof and fireproof. It is designed for the open air, and can be distinctly heard for 800 yards. Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt obtained the first one produced and presented it to her husband, Colonel of the Twenty-second New York Engineers. She has also ordered one for the Royal Horse Guards, London.

ARMY OF GREECE WILL BE TRIPLED IN FOUR MONTHS

To Be Increased From Three to Ten Divisions, Says Mr. Jonnart

ENTENTE HIGH COMMISSIONER WHO DIRECTED CONSTANTINE'S FALL OUTLINES PROGRAMME AT ROME.

ROME, July 20—The Greek army is to be increased from three to ten divisions, the recruiting and complete equipment of which are to be completed within four months, according to arrangements outlined by Charles C. A. Jonnart, Entente High Commissioner in Greece. Mr. Jonnart has reached Rome on his way to Paris, where he will lay before the representatives of the Entente Powers at their forthcoming conference the results of his work in Greece, which includes the abdication of King Constantine and important reforms which he expects to carry out under the new regime of Premier Venizelos.

In an interview with the Press Mr. Jonnart gave an outline of the proposed constructive measures and the part which the United States would have in the reconstruction of Greece on a strong basis. He said:—

"Now that the transition from the old regime is accomplished, we shall proceed at once to the important work of reconstruction. One of the first measures in that direction will be complete reorganization of the Greek army, so as to make it worthy of the country and a real factor in the situation. It is proposed to increase the present strength of the army, amounting to three divisions to ten divisions. Mr. Venizelos and our military advisers are confident that this increase and the complete equipment of the army can be carried out so as to place a full force of men in the Greek divisions in the next four months.

WILL NEED AID ON MUNITIONS

"Concerning recruiting there can be no doubt. This will remain wholly with Mr. Venizelos and the Greeks. In the matter of munitions, heavy artillery and other supplies and equipment the co-operation of France and Great Britain will be required. Our military advisers who accompany me have exact details in regard to just what this equipment must be in order to make the new Greek divisions thoroughly effective, and I am confident that branch of the reconstructive work will be carried out rapidly. The army is being reorganized on a most efficient basis.

"After being torn by internal dissension for the last two years Greece finds her financial resources sadly depleted, and she needs and expects friendly co-operation and assistance of those great Powers which wish to see the smaller nations placed on a firm and enduring foundation. Great Britain and France may be depended on for army reorganization, and in the same way we shall hope to have the powerful assistance of the United States in realizing effective reorganization of the civil branch. America's co-operation will be a most valuable factor."

Mr. Jonnart said Greece important constitutional and parliamentary reforms which it is proposed to carry out.

DIRECTED KING'S ABDICATION

The Entente Commissioner spoke with satisfaction of the dramatic series of events which recently were brought about so quickly under his direction—the abdication of Constantine, the succession of Alexander, the retirement of the reactionary Ministry, the summoning of Mr. Venizelos, the creation of a new regime with Mr. Venizelos at the head, and finally the sweeping into exile of the dangerous elements which had provoked discord for two years.

"The constitutional reforms have now been actually drawn up," he said, "The constitution will settle the question concerning the abdication of the one-time King and his eldest son and the succession of Alexander by making it clear and specific that this abdication and succession were effective and permanent."

Many Children Die From Summer Complaint

When They Could Be Saved by Using

DR. FOWLER'S

Extract of Wild Strawberry

There is not a Summer passes without thousands of people, especially infants, being attacked by Summer Complaint.

The prostration, often verging on collapse, which sometimes accompanies this disease makes it one of the most serious and dangerous we have to contend with during the hot months.

A remedy which will quickly offset the vomiting, purging and the profuse diarrhoea is Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry.

Mrs. Thomas M. Theriault, Grand Anse, N.B., writes: "My three children were very sick with Summer Complaint during the hot days last Summer. I thought one day that they would die, and I didn't know what to do to cure them. I happened to have one of your almanacs in the house, and found by reading about Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry that it was a good remedy. I at once got two bottles, and they perfectly cured them. I recommend everybody to use this wonderful remedy."

When you ask for "Dr. Fowler's" see that you get it.

It has been on the market for the past 73 years.

You don't experiment when you buy it.

CATTLE ARE BRINGING GOOD, STEADY PRICES

Week's Supplies Were Not Too Heavy, and Demand Kept Fairly Strong

The week's supplies of cattle and small stuff were moderately light. Monday's receipts were, as usual, heavy, and under the pressure of almost too much on hand for one day's market, prices barely held steady for the best qualities, and for common to medium there was a decline of about 25c from the previous week's closing figures. For the balance of the week receipts were light and prices steadily stiffened, closing for the week about steady with the week before. At present levels cattle of practically all grades are bringing fairly good prices — high prices, in fact—as compared with former seasons. Choice heavy cattle find a good ready market at high prices, this class of stock especially being in good demand. The quality of the grass-fed cattle now being marketed averages fairly good, this fact accounting for the general steadiness of the market.

There is a good demand for choice stockers and feeders for grass, the recent rains assuring an abundance of good pasture.

Lambs were weaker for the early part of the week, but firmed up a little at the close.

Light sheep are firm and in good demand.

Calves selling strong.

Hogs were weaker for the week, packers succeeding in getting prices down about 50c on the bulk of the receipts, though a few sales were made at a quarter the latter part of the week.

Union Stock Yards — Total receipts this week, 418 cars, with 5,450 cattle, 160 calves, 9,194 hogs, 3,170 sheep and lambs and 1548 horses.

City Cattle Market—45 cars with 380 cattle, 325 sheep and lambs, 151 hogs, 158 calves, and 362 horses.

Eczema on Hands

ECZEMA is usually aggravated by the application of water, and more particularly in the fall and winter, when the water is cold, many suffer keenly from itching, stinging eczema on the hands.

Dr. Chase's Ointment has proven itself the most effective treatment obtainable for eczema, and on this account has enormous sales. It affords relief from the itching and burning almost as soon as applied, and with persistent use heals and cures.

Mrs. W. G. Dowden, Greensposd, Bonavista Bay, Nfld., writes:—"I suffered with eczema on my hands, and for eighteen months was so bad that I could not use a needle to sew or do anything. I could scarcely dress myself. Though I had lots of salves from doctors, I could never get much benefit from them. Then I sent for a sample of Dr. Chase's Ointment, and found it very different in action. It was not long before my hands began to heal, and four 60c boxes made them well. I cannot praise Dr. Chase's Ointment too highly, and frequently give some to others to get them using it, for I know that it will cure."

CHAPTER XVI.

FURNEAUX MAKES A SUCCESSFUL BID.

The lawn front of the Hollies was not visible from the upper story of the Hare and Hounds owing to a clump of pines which had found foothold on the cliff, but, through the gap formed by the end of the post office garden the entrance to the house from the Knoleworth road was discernible.

Furneaux's dramatic announcement brought the other two to the window. By this time Peters, gifted with a nose for news like a well-trained setter's for partridges, had begun to associate the quiet-mannered, gentle-spoken chemist with the inner circle of the crime, so waited and watched with the detectives for Siddle's reappearance.

At any rate the visitor must have been admitted because a long quarter of an hour elapsed before he came in sight again. He walked out slowly into the roadway, thrust his hands into his trousers' pockets and glanced to the right and the left. Then turning abruptly, he stared at the dwelling he had just quitted. What this slight but peculiar action signified was not hard to guess. Furneaux, indeed, put it into words.

"Having warned Grant off Miss Doris Martin, and been cursed for his pains, the foreman of the jury does not trouble to await further evidence, but arrives at a true and lawful verdict straight off," announced the little man.

"We ought to hear things to-night," said Peters.

"We?" inquired Winter.

"Yes. Didn't I make it clear that I shared in the dinner invitation?"

"No, and I'm——"

"Don't say it!" pleaded the journalist. "If I fell from grace to-day, remember my unswerving loyalty since the hour we met on the platform at Knoleworth! Haven't I kept close as an oyster? And would any consideration on earth move me to publish an accurate and entertaining account of the roasting of Chief Inspector Winter by Wally Hart? Think what I'm sacrificing—a column of the best."

Winter bent a weighing look on the speaker. There was treason in the thought as King James remarked to the barber who tried to prove his loyalty by pointing out how easily he might cut his majesty's throat any morning. But Peters maintained the expression of a sphinx, and the big man relaxed.

"The conditions are that not a word about this business appears in print, either now or in the future, until we have a criminal in the dock," he said.

"Accepted,' said Peters.

Furneaux laughed shrilly, even derisively, but him his colleague treated with majestic disdain. Then the chemist having re-entered the village, the group broke up, Peters to search his brain for "copy" which should be readable yet contain no hint of the new trail, Winter to take train to Knoleworth, and Furneaux to tackle Fred Elkin, who, he had ascertained earlier, would drive home from a neighboring hamlet about five o'clock.

Elkin had returned when the detective reached the house, a somewhat pretentious place, half farm, half villa, and altogether horsey. The entrance hall bristled with fox masks and brushes. A useful collection of burnished bits and snaffles hung on a side wall. A couple of stuffed badgers held two wicker stands for sticks and umbrellas, and whips and hunting-crops were ranged on hooks beneath a 12-bore and a rook rifle.

A pert maid-servant took Furneaux's card, blanched when she read it, and forgot to close the door of the dining room. Hence the detective heard Elkin's gruff comments:

"What? That chap? Wants to see me? Not more than I want to see him. Show him in."

Furneaux, looking very meak and mild, entered an apartment of the carpet-bag upholstery period. A set of six exceedingly good and rare sporting prints caught his eye.

"Good day," he said, finding Elkin drinking tea, and eating a boiled egg.

"You're feeling better, I'm glad to see."

Now no matter how ungracious a man may be, a courteous solicitude as to his health demands a certain note of civility in return.

"Yes," he said. "Sit down. Will you join me?"

"I'll have a cup of tea with pleasure," said Furneaux.

"Right-o! Just touch that bell, will you?"

The other obeyed and took a closer look at one of the prints. Yes, the date was right, 1841, and the stipling admirable.

"Nice lot of pictures, these," he said cheerfully, when the frightened maid, much to her relief, had been told to bring another cup, and a fresh supply of toast.

"Are they?" Elkin had taken them, and some kitchen furniture for a bad debt.

"Yes. Will you sell them?"

"Well, I haven't thought about it. What will you give?"

Furneaux hesitated.

"I can't resist anything in the art line that takes my fancy," he said after a pause of indecision. "What do you say to ten bob each?"

Elkin valued the lot at that figure, but Furneaux was a fool and should be treated as such.

"Oh, come now," he cried roguishly. "They are worth more than that."

Furneaux reflected again.

"Three pounds is a good deal for six prints," he murmured, "but to get it off my mind, I'll spring it to guineas."

"Make it three-ten and they're yours."

"Three guineas is my absolute limit," said Furneaux.

"Done," cried Elkin. The original debt was under two pounds, so he had cleared more than fifty per cent. on the transaction, and was plus a number of chairs and a table.

Furneaux counted out the money, wrote a receipt on a leaf torn from his pocket book and stamped it.

"Sign that," he said, "pocket the cash, send the set to the Hare and Hounds for me in a dog cart now, and the deal is through."

Leaving the table, he went and lifted down each picture carefully. Somewhat wonderingly, Elkin rang the bell once more, gave the necessary instructions and the room was cleared of its art. He was quite sure now that Furneaux was, as he put it, "dotty." The latter, however, sat and enjoyed his tea as though well pleased with his bargain.

"And how are things going in the murder at the Hollies?" inquired the horse dealer, by way of a polite leading up to the visitor's unexplained business.

"Fairly well" said the detective. "My chief difficulty was to convince certain important people that you did not kill Miss Melhuish. Once I——"

"Me?" roared Elkin his pale blue eyes assuming a fiery tint. "Me!"

"Once I established that fact," went on the other severely, "a real stumbling block was removed. You see, Elkin, you have behaved throughout like a perfect fool, and thus lent a sort of credulity to an otherwise absurd notion. Your furious hatred of Mr. Grant for instance, born of an equally fatuous—or, shall I say? fat-headed—belief that Miss Martin would marry you for the mere asking, led you into deep waters. It was a mistake, too, when you lied to P. C. Robinson as to the time you came home on that Monday night. You told him that you walked straight here from the Hare and Hounds at 10 o'clock. You know you didn't—that it was nearer half past eleven when you reached this house. Consider what that discrepancy alone might have meant if Scotland Yard failed to take your measure correctly. Then add the fact that the murderer wore the hat, wig and whiskers in which you made a guy of yourself while filling the role of Svengali last winter. Now, I ask you Elkin, where would you have stood with the average British Jury when the prosecution established those three things. Motive, your jealousy of Grant; time, your unaccounted for disappearance during the hour when the crime was committed; and disguise, a clumsy suggestion of Owd Ben's ghost? Really, I have known men brought to the scaffold on circumstantial evidence little stronger than that. Instead of glaring at me like a cornered rat you ought to drop on your knees and thank providence, as manifested through the intelligence of the 'Yard,' that you are not now in a cell at Knoleworth, ruminating on your own stupidity, and in no small jeopardy of your life."

Many emotions chased each other across Fred Elkin's somewhat mean and cruel face while Furneaux rated him in this extraordinary manner. Surprise, wrath, even fear, had their phases. But dominating all other sensations was an overpowering indignation at the implied hopelessness of his pursuit of Doris Martin.

He literally howled an oath at his torturer. Furneaux was shocked.

"No, no," he protested in a horrified tone. "Don't swear at your best friend."

"Friend! By ——, I'll make you pay for what you have said. There is a law to stop that sort of thing."

"But the law requires witnesses. A slander is not a slander unless it is uttered to your detriment before a third party. How different would be Mr. Grant's action against you! Your well-wishers simply couldn't muzzle you. Whether before your pot-house cronies or mere strangers, you charged him openly with being a murderer. I'm sorry for you, Elkin, if ever you come before a judge. He'll rattle more than my three guineas out of you. Even now you don't grasp the extent of your folly. Instead of telling me how you spent that hour and a half on the night of the crime you have the incredible audacity to threaten me, me, the man who has saved you from jail. One more word, you miserable swab, and I'll let Robinson arrest you. You'll be set free, of course when I stage the actual villain, but a few remands of a week each in custody will thin your hot blood. You were with Peggy Smith after leaving the Hare and Hounds, making a fool of an honest girl who thinks you mean to wed her. Yet you blather about being 'practically engaged' to Doris Martin, a girl who wouldn't let you tie her shoe lace. You are an impudent pup, Fred, and you know it. But you stock decent tea, so I'll take another cup. If you are wise you will take a second one yourself. It's better for you than whiskey."

Elkin, despite all his faults, was endowed with the shrewdness inseparable from his business, because no man, devoid of brains ever throve as a horse dealer. He smothered his rage, thinking that he might learn more from this strange mannered detective by seeming complaisance.

"You're a bit rough on a fellow," he growled sulkily, pouring out the tea. "Now own up about Peggy."

"For you good, my boy, solely for your good."

"Yes, that's right. She'd prove an alibi so your tom-fool case breaks down when the flag falls."

"Does it? A girl may say anything to save her supposed lover. How will the twelve good men and true view Doris Martin's evidence on Wednesday? What did you mean, for instance, by your question to the coroner at the first hearing?"

CRUDE THOUGHTS FROM THE EDITORIAL PEN

It is one of the ironies of fate that the poet from whose pen has come the immortal lyric of the hearthstone was himself a roving outcast — a homeless wanderer. The world remembers the pathetic story of John Howard Payne. Broken in health and reduced in fortune, the poor American exile found himself in the throbbing heart of the great city of London. Between his publishers — who allowed him little — and his creditors — who came to see him often—the penniless poet was in sore straits. The Atlantic ocean separated him from kith and kin. He felt the acutest sense of isolation—the bitterest pangs of loneliness. Perhaps no solitude is more oppressive than the solitude of great cities—the solitude which broods in the repellant looks of the unsympathetic multitudes. It is, as Lucian Knight has said, the heart's Sahara. Bereft of all other consolation, Payne seized the harp; and lightly he touched the strings. But not in vain. For the fire of inspiration was in the poet's soul; and on the banks of the River Thames, from the aching heart of a humble exile, leaped the hearthstone melody of "Home Sweet Home."

We are glad to see and know of young men, either as individuals or in organizations, who are using the golden hours of youth in suitable endeavour to fit themselves for useful, honourable and Christian manhood; and for young men who spend their leisure and their evenings in profitable employments, study or company. We are deeply sorry for any young man who adopts the opposite course, because we know his future will be made less useful and happy by it, popular though it may be, and, alas, is, to a deplorable extent. We would not by any means abridge any lawful enjoyments or recreations we are not advocating a hermit life, or low and selfish exclusiveness—not at all. Let our young men be buoyant of spirit, active, joyous and sociable, but always under the wholesome restraits that high aims, noble purposes, and moral and religious motives impose without oppressing; and that are intelligently regulated and cheerfully accepted by them.

This world is full of beauty. We alone, with the engimery of our greed, make it ugly. But we cannot altogether succeed in hiding all its beauty, and the open eye and appreciative heart still without going far afield, may catch glimpses and often behold the full glory of field and flower and starry heaven. How deeply must we pity the life to which the beauty of the world brings no enriching, he who does not take a deep breath and feel a thrill of pleasure at sight of mountain, prairie or sea. And all the prodigal beauty of this world is but a message to use of the greater love of the life that upholds it all, of the riches of him that inhabiteth eternity. And fairer yet than field or flower, treasures greater and more enduring than ours for the taking, the appreciating, in friendships, human love, and companionships. The peace that broods from a mother's face, the strength of a father's life, the light in our children's eyes, the joys of home and hearthside — are not these the best riches of life?

Our young men who wish to succeed in business must not spend their time and money in simply having a good time. They must not be discontented with our little city and think they are too big for it. The right way to get into a larger place is to outgrow the one you are in. Grow until it becomes too small to hold you any longer. Some of the young men who now think they have outgrown this place would fit better in a much smaller one.

Home is a harem of rest to a man after a hard day's work. Mother, you may be tired after a trying day with the children, but remember that others have trying days, too. Father has been in the office all day pouring over business perplexities or financial problems but now he locks the office door and with a sign of relief he thinks of his loved ones and turns his face towards the rest and peace of home. Don't meet him at the door with a look on your face that would stop an eight day clock. Greet him with a smile, make him feel that home is the sweetest and most restful place on earth.

Take time to read and re-read a gem of poetry, or to sing a sweet song to your children. Above all take time to study with your children the shading of the leaf, the bird, the bee, the stone, the pearls of dew on the grass blade, the frost glitter, the snow crystal; take time to watch the trees in their grandeur, the stretch of meadow, the sparkling stream, the cloud mountains, the sunset glory. Beauties will be revealed to you you dream not of.

How much better is a plain, quiet Christian home where all is peace and cordiality, the neighbours heartily welcome to come and go at will, and freed from the pestering, senseless conventionalities of fashionable life! Why should our earthly life which at best cannot continue a hundred years be fretted and burdened and worn out prematurely by vain efforts to ape the manners of the idle, irreligious, self-seeking, rich devotee of pleasure?

Every woman who reads our Home Circle and has a home, should thank God for it and also be thankful that she may be queen of it. Better be in your own cozy home than wear a Victoria's coronet. Better be there than to carry the purse of a princess. Your home may be humble, but you can, by your cheerfulness, gild it with splendours such as an upholsterer's hand never yet kindled.

* * *

Home is where mother lives. And whether you be prince or peasant, one of the sweetest spots on earth is the abode of your mother.

THE GIRL ON THE FARM.

Why Not Give Her Some Attention as Well as the Boy?

In recent years the problem of keeping the boy on the farm has been thought serious enough to arouse considerable discussion.

The farmer has been told that he ought to provide the most modern agricultural machinery in order to obviate the hard labor of farming and keep the boys interested; that he should send his boys to a good school of scientific agriculture; that he should set aside a certain portion of the farm for the boy and permit him to keep the profit from his operation, and he has been told many other things, in all of which the importance of the boy to the farm was emphasised and plans suggested to make his lot a little easier and more promising. The county agent has interested himself in the problem by organising boys' corn growing and other agricultural contests.

But how about keeping the girl on the farm? The girl does not ordinarily do the heavy field work, but her services in homekeeping, cooking and mending as well as in buttermaking, milking, caring for garden and chickens, which tasks usually fall to her lot, are surely valuable enough to warrant the greatest consideration. And yet discussion of the problem of keeping the girl on the farm is infrequent.—Indianapolis News.

Home Health Club

By Dr. David H. Reeder

A COPY CAT: An outlandish name for a lecture on health but I am going to tell you of an outlandish and unnecessary condition.

Not long ago, a young mother, one whose first baby was still in its swaddling clothes, was sitting by an open window, she heard an unpleasant, quarrelsome, though childish voice in the yard below. After a little time it dawned upon her that a neighbor's little girl was "playing house," and the inhabitants of the house were her doll babies. From the time the "play house" game began until it ended there was a constant stream of complaints by the little play mother with all kinds of threats of severe punishments, scoldings, spankings, and finfinding with the imaginary father who finding with the imaginary fatherwho was supposed to come home from the day's work tired and hungry.

The "play house" proposition finally ended when the little mother was supposed to take to her bed and send for the doctor, while the distracted father went to the nearest saloon for comfort. The greatest lesson of her life was learned by the young mother who listened at the window and she hugged her own little one closely to her breast, as she registered a promise to God that it should never be forced to listen and observe such dangerous life lessons.

The child early begins to observe, and it learns by observation, perception, and develops by imitation. It is probable that the most enduring habits of life are formed unconsciously through imitation of the parents.

A pamphlet supplied free by the Children's Bureau, U.S., Department of Labour, Washington, D.C., would be of great value to all parents whether they belong to the laboring class or not.

"Thus the child learns to speak his first word, and from this time until he begins his formal education in school, and indeed through his entire childhood, he is imitating the language, manners and emotions of the older people about him. His behaviour and opinions are undoubtedly to some extent the direct result of this copying of his elders. He will repeat the tricks of speech and manner which they constantly employ.

If a child lives among people whose language is correct and agreeable, whose manners are pleasant, who show always a thoughtful consideration for others, and whose behaviour is gentle and kindly, he unconsciously acquires similar ways. The habit of courtesy comes not alone nor chiefly from direct instruction, but from imitation. If a child sees that his elders are habitually courteous in their association with each other, if kindliness and consideration for each other are the habits of the home, these qualities will inevitably stamp themselves upon the child. Good manners are an invaluable asset to every person, but good manners have their root and foundation in fine qualities of mind and heart and only the constant daily exercise of them will help give the children that charm of manner which is such a delight in persons of every age. The opposite qualities are likewise imitated and help to produce another sort of child.

Clearly, therefore, parents have an enormous responsibility in molding and shaping a child into the kind of man he is to be, for these early lessons in conduct and manners are probably never quite eradicated. Men, who as children, were accustomed to hearing uncouth language, still lapse in manhood into this fault, however well educated they may have become, and the same is true of physical mannerisms and even of the mental attitude. If a child grows up among people who are scolding, fault-finding, complaining or quarrelsome, he is almost sure to show a tendency to these qualities, however much he may learn to abhor them in later life.

Dear doctor: Will you please tell me one or more cures for rattlesnake bites? We have rattlesnakes here on these prairies and one never knows when one might be bitten.

E. F.

(Answer): Some years ago I gave a series of lectures upon the subject of poisons and their antidotes and gave instructions what should be done in emergency cases. There may be many like yourself however who did not read them and are interested to know about some good, reliable antidote for rattlesnake bites, therefore I will give them herewith.

Have the wound sucked out immediately. Tie a cord or a handkerchief above the wound, between it and the heart. Cauterize the wound with nitric acid or burn it with a hot iron, or ignite gunpowder placed in it. Give internally an infusion of Virginia snake root, or of capsicum or ginger. Wild yam is excellent and an infusion may be given freely. If there is a tendency to gangrene apply tincture of myrrh and also some of it as an infusion. Stimulation must be aimed at and the substances mentioned are superior to whiskey or any other alcoholic liquors. Kerosene given in teaspoonful doses on sugar has been found effectual in many cases. The main thing is to keep the poison out of the general circulation. The knife is the most effective means of removing the poison after something has been tied about the bitten limb. Make with the knife an oval cut on each side of the wound so that the angles meet and remove all of the flesh below and around the wound. Bleeding should be encouraged to bring out the poison. Some advocate the burning out of the wound with a red hot wire or darning needle, instead of cutting, but this treatment is less effective and more painful. Everyone, of course, believes that whiskey can be given to advantage in such cases, when those means already mentioned are not at hand, but this is not true. If stupor is present the sufferer should be moved about and exercised to keep alive his nerve centres. Common dooryard plaintain pounded to a pulp and then placed promptly over the wound is beneficial and a cure in many cases. Change the poultices frequently.

"Folly to Assume War is Won."

Baltimore News: "It would be folly to assume that because a Chancellor has lost his head the war is won. England threw Asquith over in answer to public dissatisfaction with the way things were going. France has sacrificed more than one Minister to public discontent with results that were being attained. Germany did not conclude that these changes meant she had victory in her grasp though she did make capital for home consumption out of them."

MISSION WAS A SUCCESS.

Sir Thomas White Well Pleased with Trip to Washington.

OTTAWA, July 19. — Sir Thomas White returned to Ottawa to-day from Washington. He stated that his visit had been of the most satisfactory character. The subject which he discussed with the Secretary of Treasury was the international balance of trade between Canada and the United States, and its redress by Canadian borrowing in New York. The representations he made were received by Hon. Mr. McAdoo in a spirit of utmost cordiality towards Canada. Sir Thomas declined, as always, to discuss in advance his financial plans, but it is clear that he is well satisfied with the results of his mission. The Minister will make a financial statement in the House.

NO BEER OR NO HARVEST!

Manchester Guardian: There seems to have been discovered what looks like a particular "vicious circle" in food—or drink production. The labourer, it is alleged, cannot get in the harvest without an adequate supply the harvest without an adequate supply on brewing have made it difficult for the farmer to procure his usual supply. Therefore, declares a contemporary, the hay crop in Cheshire and other counties is imperilled by the absence of harvest ale. The same problem will arise just as acutely, it is suggested, when the time comes for gathering in the grain crop. One would say that it will arise even more acutely; for if the labourer cannot gather in the grain without beer, he certainly cannot have his beer brewed without grain. Here is a fine impasse for the new Food Controller to tackle.

OFFICERS FARE WELL.

General Townshend Tells of Treatment by the Turks.

General Townshend who was captured in Kut-el-Amara, in the early campaign in Mesopotamia, is lodged in the Villa Hampson at Prinkipo, an island in the Sea of Marmora. He praises the thoughtful attention of the Ottoman authorities for his comfort.

This statement is made by the International Committee of the Red Cross in their latest reports. Delegates of this society have visited many depots wherein British, French and Indian officers are placed and they report that it must be recognised that the Turkish authorities had made serious attempts to alleviate the hardships of these officers in captivity. The report says:

"In general the best hotels and private houses have been placed at the disposal of the British and French officer. With some exceptions, the officers have not made any complaints as to their lodgings and food. As for the soldiers, the question is different. We know that the Turkish soldiers are subjected to the same regime; they are content with very little, endure the greatest privations and are accustomed to the smallest amount of nourishment. The Europeans, principally those coming from Kut, have been so weakened by the marches across the desert that one can understand their restoration to health would be rendered difficult by an insufficient diet. When, as at Afium Karahissar, they have to work, their strength is taxed to an extent which is not in proportion with their power of resistance. This implies no blame on the Turkish authorities, but is the result of exceptional circumstances."

At Eski Shehr, 66 Indian Mohammedan officers are lodged in the best private houses in the town. At Brussa, which was visited on November 21st and 23nd, fourteen British officers including six generals were at the Hotel Brotte and Hotel Osmanieh.

At Afium Karahissar on November 25th, there were 67 British officers, 432 British soldiers, and 223 Indian soldiers. The quality of the food was satisfactory but the quantity rather too small. The delegates received an assurance from the Turkish high command that the prisoners shall not be obliged to work more than eight hours a day; they receive exactly the same food as the Turkish soldier.

The delegates declare themselves extremely satisfied with the arrangements made by the British authorities for the housing, feeding, and clothing of Turkish prisoners.

Yes, Builds You Up in 5 to 10 Days

Iron For the Blood and Phosphorus For the Nerves

Weak, anaemic, run-down, nervous persons will be glad to know that they can be restored back to their youth vigor by the discovery of this new drug called Bonised Phosphorus with Iron.

It is spring time now and every person needs something to build them up. Now you know as well as any doctor will tell you, the curse of spring time is impure blood. It takes many people to their grave, ruins health, makes you weak, runs you down and finally you are a physical wreck.

This new drug is a combination of iron and phosphorus. The iron acts directly on the blood while the phosphorus soothes and strengthens the nerves. You start today and take two or three tablets of Bonised Phosphorus with iron after meals and in 5 to 10 days you will be 100 per cent. stronger.

This drug does not act like other iron tonics you have taken, but instead, it does not blacken the teeth, upset the stomach or make you constipated. This new drug is dispensed by one druggist in each city. F. C. Waber dispenses it for Peterborough.

Some Anecdotes About Petain

GENERAL PHILLIPPE PETAIN, defender of Verdun, who has just been made Commander-in-chief of the French armies, is a man of steel and of unflagging energy. Vasile Pop, a Russian journalist, gives some enlightening glimpses of him from observations in Roumania. One evening a group of French officers were enjoying themselves in the lobby of a hotel in Bucharest, when a tall, forbidding figure entered.

"The newcomer advanced a few steps with a bearing that was composed, frigid almost, holding himself as straight as one of your pines. The French officers leaped to their feet like wire-worked marionettes and saluted stiffly. The commanding personality who had come in, and no sooner than he had dominated the whole scene, was General Petain, the defender of Verdun.

"Even we civilians who stood apart at some distance, we too felt the irresistible need of doing homage to this gallant soldier who had presented a wall of iron when the German Crown Prince hurled massed attack upon massed attack against Verdun. It was this man, we knew, who had made vain the boast that Verdun would be in the hands of the German troops in a month. Our voices somehow failed us at that moment, but our eyes exchanged the awed message that this was Petain!

"Without taking the slightest notice of the ladies and civilians present the General snapped out in a voice like a whiplash:

"'You are French officers, and I find you here making a night of it when millions of your comrades are dying under shrapnel fire. Your place is not here, but with your comrades at the front. I give you exactly six hours to leave this city and repair to your posts. As for the others,' he continued, 'I have no orders to give them.'

"One of the Roumanian officers, who had distinguished himself under fire, hazarded: 'But, General, we have just returned from the front.'

"'You should have stayed there,' came the acid rejoinder. 'I'm not accustomed to being answered back.'

"The imperious tone of the grim figure admitted of no reply after that. The French officers marched off under the steely eyes of their superior."

. . . . . .

"At a council of generals held in Roumania, at which, among others who took part, were General Averescu and General Illescu (the author of the Roumanian plan of attack), General Petain is reported to have said:

"'You have your troops of the first line under fire at the front, haven't you?'

"'Why, yes,' replied the author of the plan, General Illescu.

"'And your reserves, where are they?'

"'The reserves are also at the front.'

"'H'm! And you have no other forces?'

"General Illescu shrugged his shoulders, while General Petain resumed: 'This means disaster, this plan of yours! This is your plan of attack; now let me see your plan of retreat.'

"'Plan of retreat!' said General Illescu. 'Why, we haven't anticipated that in the organization of the war.'

"Then Gen. Petain is reported to have uttered these words, which are erroneously attributed to General Berthelot:

"'Great heavens! This is the most splendid military disorganization I have ever seen!'

. . . . . .

"In the environs of Vaslui a detachment of thirty-three Russian soldiers had stopped a farm wagon in which were a peasant, his wife, and their daughter, and the two women had been ill-treated. Upon the complaint lodged by the peasant an inquiry was instituted, and all of the thirty-three soldiers, regardless of the fact that twenty-eight of them had held aloof and were guiltless, were backed up against a wall and shot. To Petain it was sufficient that they had not interfered; indifference in this instance was equal to being an accessory to the crime."

A Rare Medal.

One of those rare numismatic treasures, an officer's silver medal, which was struck by order of Parliament to commemorate the victory of Cromwell near Dunbar in 1650, is in the market, and will no doubt be eagerly seized upon, even in these times, by the collector.

Parliamentary notice was particularly called to this medal some years ago, when the famous bust of Cromwell, by Bernini, which stands in the Lower Waiting Hall of the House of Commons, was presented by Mr. Wertheimer. The Protector is wearing a specimen of this particular medal, a fact to which the late Sir Benjamin Stone, M.P., directed attention. The reverse of the medal contains a portrait of the interior of the House of Commons.

The medal is the work of the celebrated Simon, the author of the Simon "Trial Piece," and so beautifully is the work executed that members can be seen sitting in their cloaks and hats and wearing their swords, whilst Cromwell is addressing the House from the Treasury Bench. There is a specimen of the medal in the British Museum, and another is the museum of the Royal United Service Institute in Whitehall.—Tit-Bits.

Sunday Sermon For Those Who Do Not Go To Church

(By JAMES SUTHERLAND)

II. Samuel 12th chapter, 7th verse: Thou art the man.

In our last we spoke about David not having yet received mercy. Nathan closed with him at length, at least in the application of the parable. Great need there is, in giving reproof; it is well managed if, as here, the offender can be brought ere he is aware, to convict and condemn himself. In his application he showed his faithfulness, in plain terms.

Thou art the man. Nahan now speaks, not as a petitioner for a poor man but as an ambassador from the great God, with whom there is no respect of persons. God, by Nathan, reminded David of the great things he had done and designed for him. He charges him with a high contempt of the divine authority. This is the spring and this is the sting of the sin—that it is making light of the divine law and the Lawgiver. He despised the word of the law, so it is in the Hebrew, and not only his commandments in general which forbade such things, but the particular word of promise which God had sent by Nathan sometime before. God had promised that his mercy should not depart from David and his house.—(chap. 7-15), yet here threatens that the sword should not depart. Can the mercy and the sword consist with each other? Yes, these may lie under great and long affliction, who yet shall not be excluded from the mercy of God. The reason given is, because thou has not despised me. Those who despise the word and law of God despise God himself, and shall be lightly esteemed. It is particularly threatened that his children shall cause him grief and sorrow. Sin brings trouble into a family and one sin is often made the punishment of another also, that his wives should be his shame. The sin was secret, and industriously concealed but the punishment would be open and known to his people. As face answers to face in a glass so does the punishment often answer to the sin. Thus God would show how much he hates sin, even, in his own people, and that wherever he finds it he will not let it go unpunished. But observe David's penitent confession of his sin. He says not a word to excuse himself or extenuate his sin, but freely owns it. It is probable that he said more to this purpose although not recorded, but this is enough to show that he was truly humbled by what Nathan said, and submitted himself to the conviction. He owns his guilt. I have sinned, and aggravates it. It was against the Lord. See also the Psalms he penned on this occasion. Psalm 51:4: Against thee, thee only, have I sinned. When David said, I have sinned, and Nathan perceived that he was a true penitent, he did in God's name, assure him that his sin was forgiven. Thou shalt not die, that is eternally, nor be forever put away from God, as thou wouldst have been if thou hadst not put away the sin. Thy iniquity will be forgiven, though thou shalt all thy days be chastened of the Lord.

See how ready God is to forgive sin on true repentance. To this instance David refers Psalm 32:5, I said I will confess and thou forgavest. Let no great sinner despair of finding mercy with God. For while the lamp holds out to burn, the greatest sinner may return. Who is a God like unto him, pardoning iniquity? David had by his sin wronged God in his honour; he had given occasion to the enemies of the Lord to blaspheme. The wicked people of that generation—the infidels, idolators and evil doers, would triumph in David's fall, and speak ill of God and his law, when they saw one guilty of such a crime, holding the highest place in the nation and the annointed one, by Jehovah, to be their ruler and leader. They would say was not Saul rejected for a less matter? Why then must David live and reign still, not considering that God sees not as man sees, but searches the heart.

To this day there are those who reproach God and are hardened in sin, through the example of David. There is this great evil in the sins of those who profess religion and claim to be of the family of God, that they furnish the enemies of God and religion with cause to reproach and condemn the true followers of Jesus. Romans 2 and 24. God will therefore vindicate his honour by showing his displeasure against David for this sin, and letting the world see that though he loves David he hates his sin. In the temporal punishment of David, in his family, the Lord silences all scoffers and those who rejoice in the fall of a good man. His punishment began in the death of the child, as predicted by Nathan, and publicly declared to be a rebuke for David's sin, and for the time it would be a sharp and painful chastisement.

It appears from David's case that even where reconciliation is obtained the Lord will visit the transgressions of his people with the rod, and their iniquity with stripes. Cause and effect follow each other. We may be sure that our sins will find us out. For the gratification of an evil passion David had to endure many years of trouble, trials, vexation and sorrow. He describes faithfully his condition of heart and soul, as he penned the 51st Psalm, in which though he had been assured that his sin was pardoned, he prays earnestly for pardon, and greatly laments his sin.

True penitents will still be ashamed of what they have done when God is pacified toward them. Ezekiel 16:63. He fasted and lay all night upon the earth. This was evidence of the truth of his repentance. He was willing to bear the shame of his sin, to have it ever before him, to be continually upbraided with it. He prays earnestly for the life of the child, and when the child died, it was wonderful to see his calmness. He went to acknowledge the hand of God in the affliction and to humble himself under it, and to submit to the divine will. To thank God that he himself was spared and his sin pardoned and to pray that God would not proceed in his controversy with him nor stir up all his wrath. Is any afflicted, let him pray. Weeping must not hinder prayer. God gives us leave to be earnest with him in prayer for particular blessings from confidence in his power and general mercy although we have no particular promises to build upon; we cannot be sure, but let us pray on, for who can tell but God will be gracious to us in this or that particular.

When friends and relations have fallen sick, the prayer of faith has often prevailed much. While there is life there is hope, and while there is hope there is room for prayer. Those who are ignorant of the divine life, cannot understand the believer's conduct. They will probably mistake deep humility and fervent prayer for impatience and undue regard for friends and loved ones; while submission to the Lord's will, and cheerful gratitude under severe trial will be deemed indifference and apathy.

The consideration of death as the common lot of all should moderate our sorrow for the death of those we love, and though we lose them now, if in Christ, we shall meet them again. Godly parents have this consolation: that their children who die in infancy are safe in the heavenly home.

While David had hope of prevailing in prayer he clung to the mercy of God and prayer and fasting was his duty in the will of God, but after the event submission to the divine appointment was required. The child, released from suffering, had gone to a better world, and David had been reconciled to God and his sin forgiven, and God had withdrawn the tokens of his displeasure, and after a time he was blessed with another son. They called him Solomon or Peaceful, because his birth was a token of God's being at peace with them, because of the prosperity that was entailed upon him. David had patiently submitted to the will of God in the death of the other child, and God had made up the loss abundantly to him.

God by his grace particularly owned and favored that son and ordered him to be called Jedidiah, beloved of the Lord. We see the great mercy of God in restoring David to his favor, and bestowing upon him his pardon and grace. David's penitence for his sin is expressed in the 51st and other Psalms, which have been the means of leading many others back to God.

Yours sincerely,
James Sutherland,
352 1-2 Water street. July 21st, 1917.

PAIN? NOT A BIT! LIFT YOUR CORNS OR CALLUSES OFF

"No humbug! Apply few drops then just lift them away with fingers.

This new drug is an ether compound discovered by a Cincinnati chemist. It is called freezone, and can now be obtained in tiny bottles as here shown at very little cost from any drug store. Just ask for freezone. Apply a drop or two directly upon a tender corn or callus and instantly the soreness disappears. Shortly you will find the corn or callus so loose that you can lift it off, root and all, with the fingers.

Not a twinge of pain, soreness or irritation; not even the slightest smarting, either when applying freezone or afterwards.

This drug doesn't eat up the corn or callus, but shrivels them so they loosen and come right out. It is no humbug! It works like a charm. For a few cents you can get rid of every hard corn, soft corn or corn between the toes, as well as painful calluses on bottom of your feet. It never disappoints and never burns, bites or inflames. Genuine freezone is sold only in these small bottles packed in a little sealed wood case, bearing a yellow wrapper. Beware of imitations.

Breeding ewes require at least twelve square feet of floor space in the shed.

As the season advances the roots of corn extend farther in all directions. Do not cultivate deep enough to cause injury to them.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

READ IN THE FLAMES

... By Mary Wood

Mr. and Mrs. Bergen believed in higher education for women, or, as they told each other, "We will give Katie the chances we didn't have."

Katie was a wise awkward slip of a girl who wept salt tears when her destiny was unfolded. She never, never would go off to that eastern college. She would die of homesickness. Mrs. Bergen quite melted at the picture, but her husband was firm. It was best for her to go, and go she did.

But the energy that had made her childhood a perilous one flowed readily into the new channels. The first month found her contented, the second enthusiastic. The letters which told of quizzes, exams and profs grew more and more unintelligible to the two old people. She was living in a world into which they could not enter. Even as they thrilled with pride in her attainments they felt a strange pang, as if their firstborn were being gradually stolen and a changeling left in her place.

What with the weary length of the four winters, the brevity of the summer vacations and their inevitable absorption in visits to college chums they felt that the week after commencement brought her back to them almost a stranger.

She was certainly no longer the little Katie who had gone away in tears. Miss Katharyn Bergen was a tall, self possessed young woman who wore eyeglasses and clothes of a masculine cut.

Mr. Bergen was secretly aggrieved at sight of the eyeglasses. "When she had the makin' of such a pretty girl," he said mournfully to himself, "an' mother an' I havin' such good sight at our age!" He felt that it was a high price to pay for learning.

Mrs. Bergen was shocked by her daughter's taste in clothes. Her stiff collars and hideous vests, the scantiness and brevity of her skirts and her pronounced fancy r shoes of the most broad toed and thick soled variety were all thorns in the motherly bosom. She was, however, a woman of discretion. She recognized in her daughter much of a certain obstinacy which long familiarity with Mr. Bergen had taught her to respect. So she made no comment on the distressing changes.

What she did not say Scotville did. Katharyn was more than a nine days' wonder; she was a perpetual volcano. She had lost none of her original energy; rather it had increased by practice. The town needed to be uplifted, and her hand was ready for the work.

So Scotville was introduced to that new creation, a woman with a purpose, and was not overpleased. Her old girl friends detected an undercurrent of patronizing in all her advances and refused to enthuse over her. The men who had been boon companions in her tomboy days declared that a jolly good fellow had been changed into a prig and voted her schemes for elevation as all tommyrot. She scandalized the old minister who had baptized her when a baby by her open avowal of agnostic beliefs.

Jack Selwyn tried in vain to stem the rising tide of antagonism, but then every one knew it was only because he was too loyal to desert his old sweetheart. Jack had not been able to go to college. There were the young brothers and sisters to whom he had to play a father's part. So he had turned to work as an antidote for longing for the unattainable and was now Mr. Bergen's right hand man. It was even whispered that his employer would have been glad to welcome a nearer relationship.

It seemed, however, that Katharyn had no memory of the promises whispered by a certain Katie. To be sure, there had been a look in her face when he greeted her on her day of homecoming that had sent his heart up into his throat. Perhaps it was not as he had feared; she had not grown beyond his reach. But the succeeding days had brought only disillusionment. The girl, smarting under the almost universal rebuffs of her well meant efforts, classed him ruthlessly among the ranks of her opponents.

If she missed their old time confidences, their happy talks on men and books, she gave no sign. Instead she withdrew more closely into herself.

Her rooms were on the ground floor of the Bergen homestead. There she sat and read or mused bitterly long after she had said "Good night." From her windows the lawn sloped down gently to the river. Often when her head grew weary she would slip out quietly to breathe the freshness of the night.

One evening the moonlight had lured her from her books. The strains of a violin came, softened by distance. All Scotville was at a dance—all but she, and she had refused. Her paltry excuse had been that she and her mother had promised to spend the night at an old aunt's in the country during her father's absence on a business trip, but sudden indisposition had kept them from going, and now Katharyn hurried down the river path, as if to escape the witching sound.

She had wandered farther than she knew when a cry broke the stillness: "Fire! Fire!" She turned and ran back dizzily. Swift intuition told her that the column of smoke and flame rose from her own home. Scotville thought all the family were away. There would be no one to waken and save her mother.

As she panted up the lawn she saw confusedly a string of people. They were passing buckets. These girls in slimy ball gowns (the girls she had patronized), these men in immaculate evening dress (the men she had frowned on), were fighting to save her home. But there was no sign of her mother.

One wing was ablaze, while smoke poured from every window of the main building. Perhaps it was too late.

With a cry of anguish she broke through the inner circle of figures and before they were aware of her presence had darted up the steps and disappeared into the smoke.

A wave of heat as from a furnace met her as she dashed up the stairs. Sparks from the burning landing above rained down upon her head, but she flung open the door of her mother's room and staggered to the bed. The room was empty.

She turned back blindly toward the door. Smoke whirled in upon her, choking, suffocating. The very walls seemed to flash into flame.

She fell forward.

She awoke to the delicious coolness of water dashed upon her. As she opened her heavy eyes two anxious faces bent over her. One was her mother's, pale with terror, but untouched by smoke or flame. The other—she recognized it in spite of burned and blackened skin and singed hair; it was Jack's.

With a little sigh of content she closed her eyes again. These two that she loved best were safe. Yes, she acknowledged it to herself now she loved Jack Selwyn.

And he had saved her. She had felt his strong arm catch her when she fell. After all the months of her studied unkindness he had risked his life to save hers. She had been blind indeed, but she had read her heart in the light of the flames.

Now she put out her hand timidly. "Jack," she whispered softly.

He seized her cold little hand in his. "What is it, Katie?" he asked, his voice trembling with newborn hope that seemed too good to be true.

And when she opened her eyes and gazed up at him trustingly he knew that love had conquered pride and that the sweetheart of childish days was his to have and hold forevermore.

Fly Fame.

It seems a very simple thing
To kill the little flies.
You are so big and they so small
And you so very wise.
You chase one with a spatter round
The room most everywhere.
You bring it forward with a slap—
Alas, he isn't there!

The little fly is very fly.
He dodges well your blow;
He leads you on a merry chase
And thinks you pretty slow.
And fame and fortune are the same,
Just like the flies, I swear.
You make a swoop to scoop 'em in—
Alas, they are not there!

THE PRECIOUS DAYS.

The days come and go like veiled figures sent from a distant friendly party, but they say nothing, and if we do not use the gifts they bring they carry them as silently away.—Emerson.

Alleged Profits of The William Davies Company in 1916 on Bacon, as Indicated by Department of Labor to be Five Cents per Pound, Untrue:

Actual Profits Two-Thirds of a Cent Per Pound

THE statement issued by the Department of Labor concerning the business of The William Davies Company Limited has been given widespread circulation throughout the country and provoked public unrest.

Whatever the technical wording of the report was, the effect has been that the newspapers have published that "the profits on Bacon alone" of this Company "for 1916" were about "five millions of dollars." This interpretation of the official report is not surprising in view of certain statements that the Commissioner of the Cost of Living makes. The Commissioner is reported as saying that "There were two individual cases of profiteering in 1916 and that had these cases occurred since the passage of the cost of living Order-In-Council, he would consider it his duty to recommend that the facts be laid before the Attorney-General for consideration as to their criminality." The situation created by such erroneous and damaging statements is serious as emanating from a Government official, from whom one looks for not only accurate statements but correct conclusions.

The William Davies Company, being a private concern, has followed the practice of all private corporations, except when it made a bond issue in 1911, in that it has not published reports of its assets and liabilities or profit and loss. The present circumstance, however, in which a Government Official has led the public to false conclusions, makes it advisable for this Company, for both the public interest and its own interest, to publish particulars of its business as well as point out the error of the statement of the Government Official.

For the last fiscal year ending March 27th, 1917, The William Davies Company bought and killed 1,043,000 head of Live Stock (Cattle, Hogs and Sheep). This, plus purchases of outside Meats, produced 160,000,000 pounds of Meats. The Company handled 6,550,000 pounds of Butter and Cheese, 5,650,000 dozens of Eggs, and manufactured 26,500,000 tins of Canned Goods.

The net profits on these were .68 cents (or two-thirds of a cent) per pound on meats, 1.04 cents on Butter and Cheese, 1.04 cents per dozen on Eggs, and .47 cents (or slightly less than one-half a cent) per tin on Canned Goods. These profits include profits on all By-Products derived from these accounts.

During the year the Company served at its retail stores 7,500,000 customers, the average purchase of each customer was 35c, and the net profit upon each sale was 5-8 of 1 cent.

The turnover of the Company from all its operations for the last fiscal year ending March 27th, 1917, was $40,000,000. The net percentage of profit upon this turnover, after deducting war tax, was 1.69 per cent., or including war tax 3.45 per cent.

The William Davies Company has assets of $13,385,000, of which $3,865,000 is tied up in fixed investments.

To provide the necessary facilities for the increased volume of business the Company expended $750,000 in buildings and equipment during the year.

Companies of other character present no more reasonable statement of profit and loss based upon the investments made in the business.

The William Davies Company offered to the Imperial authorities, as well as to the War Office Service (which represents the Imperial authorities in Canada) to place the output of its Factory with respect to Bacon supplies, Canned Beef and Pork and Beans at the service of the authorities, on the basis of cost plus an agreed percentage. These offers were successively declined as the authorities evidently desired to purchase in the open market, and on this basis The William Davies Company has secured War Office business by open competition with the world.

Respecting the Report of the Commissioner on the Cost of Living:—

Last Winter the Commissioner, under authority of Order-in-Council, required packers to submit statements under oath for some years back and up to December 1st, 1916, of incoming stocks of Meats and the cost of such, as well as statements of outgoing product and the selling value. This Company represented in writing at the time that the information as specifically required was not in accordance with Packing House Accounting methods, and invited the Commissioner to send an Officer to the Head Office of the Company to examine the books for any information desired, and to secure a viewpoint as to the best way of collecting data which would be of use to the Government. This offer was declined, and there was nothing to do but fill in the information required as literally as we could determine it. For example, there was no recognition of the fact that a raw product may enter a factory under a specific classification and leave the factory as a finished product under some other classification.

We submitted a series of accurate figures based upon our interpretation of the official requirements which made no provision for charges of any description other than incoming freight and unloading charges to be included in the cost or to be deducted from the selling price. There was nothing in the report which could be read so as to determine a profit and loss statement. The very fact that with only a statement based upon cost of raw products and value of sales in Great Britain a Government Official has deduced "Large margins," "Profiteering" and "Criminality" if it had occurred since the passage of a recent Act, shows too dangerous a trifling and incapacity to be permitted to deal with any important situation. The statements of this Company have been treated by the author of this report as if the outgoing product was identical with the incoming product, and from the series of reports he has singled out two items—the Bacon and Egg reports—and from them deduced an erroneous "margin" which the newspapers have interpreted as "profit." The author of the inquiry shows a strange lack of even a fundamental knowledge of simple bookkeeping and a dangerous inability to co-ordinate figures. The following are specific and outstanding errors in the report:

The principal item that is causing excitement deals with cold storage Bacon. The term "cold-storage" is not defined, and the public is allowed to make its own definitions. As all Bacon in a packing house is under refrigeration it is really all cold-storage, and therefore this Company's figures of cold-storage Bacon represent the complete quantity of Bacon handled in its entire Plant, whether in freezers or in process of cure for immediate shipment. That some Companies interpreted cold-storage product as "freezer" product only is evidenced by the smallness or entire lack of figures on the Bacon list for some Plants, indicating that many Firms did not submit statements of their complete stocks, as did this Company. An Official of this Company pointed out this cold-storage distinction to Mr. O'Connor and Miss McKenna in Ottawa a few weeks ago, and the failure to make the distinction after having had it pointed out evidences lack of desire for accuracy of the real information desired.

It is true The William Davies Company, in 1916, exported 97,791,000 pounds of Bacon, but we do not know how the margin of 5.05 cents per pound is arrived at by Mr. O'Connor, as there were no figures to justify such a conclusion. The probabilities are that the margin is arrived at by taking the average cost per pound of incoming product from the average selling price per pound of outgoing product. This may be a rough way of estimating the gross margin when dealing with small figures, but when dealing with figures the size that Mr. O'Connor has to deal with, a very small fraction of a cent per pound of error makes a very important difference in the total, and one must be careful to make sure that the outgoing product is the same finished merchandise of the incoming product reported on.

Allowing it to pass, however, as a rough estimate, we wish to point out—(first)—the inquiry of the Commissioner allowed only for incoming freight and unloading charges, and made no provision whatsoever for operating charges of any kind, such as labor, curing materials, refrigeration, et cetera. Such actual charges on the 97,791,000 pounds exported were $1,162,000—or 1.2 cents per pound. This amount covered all charges up to the point of placing the Bacon on cars f.o.b. packing-house. In addition to this was the actual cost to land and sell this 97,791,000 pounds in England after leaving the packing house, which involved charges of 2.9 cents per pound—or $2,836,000. This 2.9 cents per pound included inland and ocean freight, landing charges, war and marine insurance, cables, and selling commission to agents. The ocean freight and war risk alone would make up 2.4 cents of the charge of 2.9 cents per pound. This 1.2 cents, plus 2.9 cents—a total of 4.1 cents—must be deducted from Mr. O'Connor's margin of 5.05 cents per pound, leaving a margin of .95 cents, or slightly less than a cent per pound, which still has to be reduced because of the error of premises and because of further factors which have to be considered to determine net profits.

It is quite evident some of the other packers did not show selling values in the country in which the goods were sold—a proceeding quite proper, as the forms submitted to be filled in were indefinite and ambiguous, thus permitting without charge of evasion a variety of interpretation as to the information required. It is thus possible that of all the figures submitted by the different packers that no two sets of costs and sales prices are determined at the same common point. It is this difference of interpretation of what was required that accounts for the difference of the alleged "margin" made by the different companies. Common conclusions, however, have been drawn by the author of the report from varying bases of premises.

The figures of the Egg business were submitted on the same basis as Bacon, and similar deductions must be made.

(Second)—The above margin is further reduced in that the author of this inquiry singled out the Bacon figures as an item in which the selling price shows an alleged improper advance over cost, but he did not give us credit for the statements of other products, of which figures were submitted, the selling prices of which were under cost. The reason of this was that through failure to inquire the Department entirely overlooked the fact that product may come in as pork and, through the process of manufacture, go out as Bacon, or, in another instance, enter the factory as beef and go out in the form of canned meats; for example: much of the product which came in as pork, and which was entered on the pork sheet submitted to the Commissioner—about which he makes no mention—was cured and left the factory in the form of Bacon, and was, therefore, entered on the outgoing side of the Bacon sheet—the result is that the Bacon sales are increased by this amount over the incoming stocks of Bacon, and, likewise, the sheet showing sales of pork is reduced by the amount that went out in the form of Bacon. If the Department takes one set of figures that show favorable to the Company they should take another set of figures that show unfavorable, as the principle in either case is the same, and failure to do so looks as if the author of the report was exercising more enthusiasm than sound judgment in his investigations.

(Third)—It is queried in the report, that "if the margin of 3.47 cents," alleged to have been made in 1915, "was satisfactory, why was it necessary to show increased margin in 1916?" Assuming again for the moment the soundness of the premises in asking such a question based on an erroneous "margin," it will be found that the increased margin is chiefly absorbed in increased ocean freight rates and war risk insurance in 1916, of which apparently the author of the report was in ignorance.

The Company does not challenge either the legal or moral right of the Government to investigate business enterprises when public interest directs such an investigation should be made. If an investigation of the packing and meat business is ordered, the Company will place at the disposal of the Government not only the data it would be required to supply under Order-in-Council directing that inquiry be made, but will place the experience of its officers at the disposal of the investigating committee, if it is considered they can render any service which will be of value. The Company has not now—nor at any time during the fifty years of its operation—anything to conceal in method or practice of carrying on its business. It does, however, claim the right to conduct its export business without abusive comment from Government civil servants—especially when the conclusions drawn from the data asked for are improper and false.

One of Canada's chief export industries is the packing business. It is essential to the live stock industry, and, along with other export industries, it maintains the financial stability of this country and should, providing it is on a sound basis, receive encouragement and not slanderous abuse. In view of the publicity given to the report of the Commissioner on the cost of living, the Company demands the same publicity in having an official Government investigation of this report to determine the truthfulness or untruthfulness of its conclusions. We do not seek public consideration as a company, but we do say that untruthful official statements, or statements the effect of which is to create an untruh, adversely affect the live stock industry of this country, which is so valuable and essential a wealth-producing power and, in the long run, are harmful to the very people that the statement seeks to benefit.

If the passing out of existence of a corporation such as The William Davies Company, or if nationalization of packing houses would materially and permanently reduce food prices, then in view of the present world tragedy it ought to be consummated without delay. The fact of the matter is, however, that with millions of people in Europe turning from producers into consumers because of war, and the tremendous destruction of food products incident to war, there is no remedy for the high prices of food while such conditions last, except the remedy of thrift and increase of production.

Long before there was talk of a Food Controller in the United States or Canada The William Davies Company urged the Government at Ottawa, in writing, to appoint a Food Controller with full power to do what he saw fit, as we realized at that time the upward tendency in the price of food commodities unless checked by official effort. At the most a great deal cannot be done in reducing food prices while currency is inflated and until the scale of prices of all kinds of commodities declines also. What can be done can only be done by a Food Controller. We wish to point out that nothing at all can be accomplished unless the data secured are accurately and clearly made and the deductions therefrom sound. Only public harm arises from dangerous incompetency in the haphazard collection and careless use of important figures.

As far as The William Davies Company is concerned this terminates all public statements of the Company, and it will pay no more attention to speculative and haphazard statements made either by newspapers or civil servants. The only further statement that will be made will be at an official investigation.

: If One Picture is Worth a Million Words, These Pictures Tell Volumes :

Ontario realizes, along with the Western Provinces, that there are a lot of returned soldiers to settle in the business of making a livelihood. These men, as soon as they are able to get about, soon get tired of being entertained in town. Industrial pursuits don't suit a lot of them. They prefer to be out-of-doors. The land's the thing. Ontario has set aside a large tract of the famous clay belt up in the Abitibi region as homesteads for these heroes. Each man who wants to go farming is given 160 acres, of which 10 acres are already cleared [illegible]

ernment will advance him money to pay for his buildings, tools, implements, general outfit. The Government will give each man a free course of farm instruction at the Matheson Experimental Farm. A new era begins for every homesteader. Done with war, he settles down to the simple smoke of the clearing; the placid tinkle of the cow-bell, the quiet clack of the wagon on the new clay-turnpike, children at the new school. Lonesome? Oh no. The houses are built in little villages from which the farms radiate out within easy reaching distance.

In these pictures some of the applicants for homesteads are seen with their children, ready for the trail to the Abitibi country. In the lower picture, Premier Sir William Hearst is seen shaking hands with one of the new homesteaders. In the top picture, Provincial Secretary W. D. McPherson is the principal figure.

The Bishop of Arras stands amid the ruins of his beautiful cathedral and knows that the rest of his life will be a labor of sorrow. I could tell Archbishop Bruchesi and Cardinal Begin sad tales of the havoc of war.

Making ropes of sand is a good deal like what Mr. Traub, the new Dutch Minister of Finance, has to do for Holland. His country is in a predicament, worse now since the U. S. are helping in the German blockade. Germany has been a big customer of Holland since the war. When she couldn't buy coal from England she got it from Holland; likewise — about everything else Holland had to spare. Not so much goods going into Holland now to sell to Germany. How will Mr. Traub raise his revenues? He will probably confess that "It beats the Dutch."

Will there be a Russian revolution in Spain? Antonio Maura, former Premier, stands here in the Madrid bull circus shouting to 25,000 people his denunciations of graft. They say that King Alfonso in his palace two miles away listened to the whole speech by telephone connected with a huge sound-board in the royal box at the bull-ring.

You do not have to visit Europe for religious spectacles nowadays. Out at the historic old Cathedral of Boniface across the river from Winnipeg lately took place the strangely devout spectacle of the Corpus Christi procession on the day in the calendar sacred to that event.

Fiji Islanders en route to work behind the fighting lines in France came by way of Vancouver across Canada. Here they are beside Canada's biggest tree in Vancouver; hatless, bootless, in charge of a Lieutenant, seeing the Wonderland of street-cars, picture shows, military manoeuvres and the printing press before they take the long, long train and the trip on the second sea.

The little poilu shown above is saluting the President of the American Commission for the relief of inhabitants of reconquered villages in France. The little chap understands what a great work this Commission has on its hands, now that the Allied troops are retaking so many villages formerly held by the German masters. The humorous, kind officer who salutes him does not wear the cruel spike helmet. No, he is a different kind of man. Oh the joy of the difference! to the little poilu and his people.

TAILORED TO A NEW IDEA

This new Reid Tie slips easily in any fold collar
Just as surely as you like a neat tie-knot, so you will welcome the latest Reid creation. It is tailored to a new idea. With the "Shure-two-slip," the strain and effort of knot-tieing is gone forever.
Compare it with an old-style cravat. Note the neck-band—smooth satin, both sides. It is thinner—much thinner than is the old style tie. Yet being straight-cut, it is far stronger.
It slides freely at a touch in any fold collar. There is no tug, no strain, no lost temper.
As a result it ties easily, looks neater. It will keep its shape and last longer than any tie you ever wore.

LLOYD GEORGE'S VIGOROUS SPEECH

HOT FIGHTING ON RUSSIAN FRONT

Germans Penetrate French Lines Twice But Are Soon Driven Out

French Counter Attacks Prevented Huns From Taking Advantage of Their Gains---Lloyd George Makes Ringing Reply to German Chancellor's Address---Hard Fighting Reported From the Russian Front.

A SUMMARY OF TO-DAY'S WAR CABLES

PARIS (Official Statement), July 21.—The Germans twice penetrated the French trenches on the Aisne front southeast of Cerny last night, but were driven out by French counter attacks. The French also repulsed other attacks at different parts of the front inflicting heavy losses on the foe.

LONDON, July 21.—Sham independence for Belbiub. Sham democracy for Germany. Sham peace for Europe, were bitter epitomes of German Chancellor Michaelis' speech to the Reichstag spoken by the British Premier David Lloyd George this afternoon, in a ringing speech at the Belgian independence celebration at Queen's Hall.

The Prime Minister declared in a new vigor of phrases that unless Germany's military autocracy is "wiped out they will again plunge Europe into a welter of blood."

"The Chancellor's statement contained phrases which the German military autocracy understood. He said: "Those in charge of German affairs have elected for war. The junkers have thrown the old Chancellor into the waste basket with his scrap of paper and it will not be long before a junker boom follows. I am sorry to disagree withe th German Chancellor regarding German submarines," he continued. "But gradually and surely we are increasing our protection and diminishing our losses. This year we are building four times as many ships as the preceding year. Next year we shall build six times as many. The German Chancellor held out no hope for Belgium. She was not mentioned by him. It is the determination of the Allies that Belgium must be restored free and independent, and her people not be placed under her protectorate."

The Premier declared that the U-boat is not eliminated Europe would again be plunged in a welter of blood some time after the present war was concluded.

HELSINGFORD, July 21.—Amid scenes of the greatest enthusiasm and solemnity the Diet adopted the Bill whereby Finland seeks to wrest complete independence from Russia. Conflict with Russia is regarded as inevitable.

PETROGRAD, July 21.—An intense artillery battle is in progress in the Smorgon-Krevo sector, according to battle front despatches received to-day. The crack Siberian Corps is bearing the brunt of the fighting, and Russian guns are obtaining mastery of the enemy. This is the first indication of the extension of the offensive on the Vilna front.

LONDON, July 21.—Samuel Samuels, M.P., in a speech to-day, said that the British Government intends to adopt a policy of reprisal for German air raids.

LONDON, July 21.—Premier Lloyd George of England will this afternoon answer the speech of German Chancellor Michaelis at an address at Queen's Hall. The meeting is in celebration of Belgium's independence. Lloyd George is to preside.

LONDON, July 20.—Another effort by the German Crown Prince to regain the California and Casemates plateaux, between Hurtebise and Craonne, on the Aisne front, has been checked by the French. The Germans attacked repeatedly in mass formation, but they were repulsed, and the French held to their positions. Elsewhere on the front in France there have been only raids and artillery duels.

LONDON, July 20.—In the course of an interview Lord Cecil, Minister of Blockade, said:

"It is scarcely within my province to talk about the U-war situation, but I am sufficiently well informed to state definitely that as long as we deal with the submarine with proper energy and show proper self-control there is no danger to our cause from the submarine war."

LONDON, July 21.—Premier Lloyd George said the food supply for 1917-18 had been secured and that the programme of cultivation had been arranged to make the supply for the following year secure even if losses increased.

KERNESKY TEMPORARY PREMIER OF RUSSIA

LONDON, July 21.—Minister of War and Marine Kerensky has temporarily been named Premier of Russia, succeeding Prince Lyoff, resigned, according to announcement in the Bourse Gazette at Petrograd to-day. Kerensky, it was stated in Petrograd advises, is to retain his place as military and naval chief.

WASHINGTON, July 21.—By adjournment to-night or possibly early to-morrow, the Senate will have passed the food control bill, established virtually food dictatorship for the world. Two amendments are expected to occupy most of the senatorial interest if not time, in the final hours of consideration. They are: First, the Pomerene amendment for a minimum price of $1.75 a bushel on wheat, and second, the German substitute for the entire bill. Anticipating food control Herbert Hoover has rented one of Washington's largest hotel buildings together with several nearby smaller structures. Expansion of the food administrations force to 2,000 employees has already begun.

NO POLITICS IN HIS CAMPAIGN SAYS CAPT. J. H. BURNHAM

Member For West Peterboro' Says "Win the War" Will Be His Slogan and Editorial in Toronto Globe Will Be His Next

SHOULD GET TOGETHER

The Examiner this morning received the following wire from Captain J. H. Burnham, M.P., Ottawa:

Gentleman,—Will you permit me to use your columns for the purpose of addressing a word to you and to the public at the same time. First of all let me say that every reader of your paper should read the Globe's editorial of to-day, Saturday, July 21st. As telegraphed ahead to the papers here, it is glorious. It will be made by me the text for all I have to say during the coming election. I am sending you this wire because I see from Mr. Wearing's protest and the columns of the Peterborough press that all the fury of election times is about to be let loose. Gentlemen, let me say that I will take it as real and granted that I am a misfit and a conceited ass and not to be compared for one moment with the editors themselves. I know that, and if I do not the public does. What I wish to say, however, is that the war and the winning of the war will be my slogan. No politics so far as I can humanly avoid them will be allowed by me to enter into my campaign. The Globe's editorial of to-day will be my text, and I say to you that we should get together as sane Canadians and real British subjects, who though we may fight like man and wife on occasion, yet are able and willing to combine against all intruders. I hope also that this feeling will rule in the selection of my opponent.

J. H. BURNHAM.

The editorial in to-day's Globe which Captain Burnham refers to is as follows:

The Supreme Issue.

The third reading of the Military Service Bill has been fixed for Tuesday. It is to be hoped there will be no dilatory or partisan amendments, and that the majority for the Bill will be so decisive as to convince the country of the sincerity and determination of the House of Commons.

The Military Service Bill is a fresh dedication of Canada to the cause of liberty, sanctified by the bravest blood of free nations. It is a pledge of her resolution to sustain her gallant sons who are in the fiery

How Congress Stands On Question Of Nation-wide Woman Suffrage

WASHINGTON, D.C., July 21.—Here is the way the United States Senate lines up on the suffrage question:—

For nationwide woman suffrage—Democrats, 20; republicans, 16; total, 36.

Against nationwide woman suffrage—Democrats, 29; republicans, 21; total, 50.

Doubtful—Democrats, 4; republicans, 6; total, 10.

Necessary for adoption—Two-thirds of those present, or 64 if all Senators are present.

While no detailed figures are available on the House of Representatives, it is known that the situation there is practically the same.

PRESIDENT PARDONS SIXTEEN SUFFRAGISTS SENT TO JAIL FOR PICKETING WHITE HOUSE

President Wilson yesterday pardoned the sixteen militant suffragists who had begun their terms of sixty days in the workhouse at Occoquan, Va., after having been convicted in the Washington police court, of unlawful "picketing" of the White House. After considerable parleying, the women decided to accept the pardon and leave the jail. They all returned to Washington at six o'clock last evening.

LIEUT. WILL EASTWOOD OF ROYAL FLYING CORPS IS HOME FOR DUTY

Peterboro' Boy Has Had An Exciting Experience in France When His Machine Was Shot Down in Flames in Battle With Three Hun Flyers—To-day's General Military News.

Lieut. W. P. Eastwood, of the Royal Flying Corps, and son of Major J. H. Eastwood, Brock street, dropped quietly into town last evening from overseas to the surprise and delight of his friends.. Lieutenant Eastwood is home on specoal duty for three months after some thrilling experiences in France with the Royal Flying Corps.

These experiences culminated on May 1st with a most unpleasant adventure. On that date Lieutenant Eastwood with an observer were over a mile in the air when they were suddenly attacked by three German machines. The machine gun fire from the Hun flyers killed Lieutenant Eastwood's observer, and shortly after put the engine of the machine out of commission. The plane rapidly dropped, and to make matters worse the petrol from the tank took fire. Lieutenant Eastwood, however, was able to make a successful landing, just in time, as the machine burst into flames as it hit the ground and the body of the unfortunate observer was burned.

Lieutenant Eastwood left Peterborough early in 1915 as a subaltern with the 57th Regiment quota to the 39th Battalion. He went overseas with the 39th, and after acting for some time as assistant adjutant of Lieutenant-Colonel Preston's battalion, transferred to the Royal Flying Corps and qualified as an airman.

His many friends are glad to welcome him home.

In yesterday's list of Military Cross awards appears the name of Lieut. Arthur Edmund Roy Jones, cousin of Mr. Fred L. Roy, of this city. Lieut. Jones assisted by another, attacked and killed the crew of a machine gun, entered a dugout and captured five officers and one hundred men.

Eddie Firth, C. Legendre and other Peterborough members of the Royal Flying Corps, are home on week-end leave.

Lance-Corp. A. Moscrop, who has been spending a furlough in town, returned to the Convalescent Home at Kingston, yesterday.

St. Thomas, July 20.—A petition which is being largely signed by citizens, is being circulated here, requesting the Minister of Militia and Defence to take some action in regard to granting a furlough for the Canadians who have been on the firing line for the past three years. It is claimed that many men who went with the first and second contingents, are still on the firing line, and that they be released for a time to visit their relatives and recuperate.

Ottawa, July 20.—The Dominion Government, in carrying out its policy of settling ex-soldiers upon the land, is prepared to advance sufficient money to enable a 20-year loan up to $2,500 to be made to settlers for acquiring land, making improvements, etc. When the Commons this afternoon took up the resolution providing for the creation of a "soldier settlement board" Hon. Dr. Roche introduced an amendment increasing the amount to be loaned to soldier settlers to the sum named. In the original plan the sum to be loaned was $2,000 for a 15-year period.

A long and somewhat desultory discussion took place on the resolution. The discussion was chiefly carried on by Hon. Dr. Pugsley and Hon. Frank Oliver, the former taking the ground that, while the resolution was a good thing in itself, it did not go nearly far enough. A less vigorous criticism was offered by Hon. Frank Oliver, who suggested that it would be better to take over land held in the West and not occupied, and turn it over to the returned soldiers. These suggestions were all taken in good part by Hon. Dr. Roche, who promised full consideration when the bill based on the resolution was considered.

The resolution provided for the establishment of a board consisting of three commissioners, "to reserve lands in various parts of Canada, and to grant not more than 160 acres of land to any person who had served in the naval or land expeditionary forces of Great Britain or any of the self-governing dominions of the Empire and been honorably discharged, and also to the widows of such men who had died on active service. This grant to be subject to such conditions as the commission considered advisable, with further provision that the board might loan to any settler up to $2,500 for acquiring land for agricultural purposes, improvements, etc., the money to be expended under the supervision of the board."

CASUALTY LIST OF RUSSIA'S SECOND REVOLUTION HEAVY

Has Apparently Ended Now After Five Days of Rioting and Bloodshed With the Government in Control

HUN AGENTS EXPOSED

(By William G. Shepard, United Press Staff Corespondent.)

PETROGRAD, July 20.—(Delayed via London, July 21.)—One hundred killed, 700 wounded among the civilian and soldier and sailor rioters, and six Cossacks killed, and 70 wounded, is the casualty list of Russia's second revolution, apparently ended to-day after five days of rioting with the Government in control. Out of the violence and bloodshed has come the reorganization of free Russia. The Government is now in the hands of the Central Committe of Workmen's and Soldiers' Congress with provisional (Duma) representatives acting as administratives responsible to this executive head.

The exposure of Nicholas Lenine, the Pacifist agitator, as a paid German agent, helped end the rebellion. Lieut. Ermolenko, Russian officer recently returned from a German prison camp, gave the Government evidence it desired. Ermolenko swore that when he was a prisoner the Germans sent him back to Russia to agitate for a separate peace. He was ordered he swore "to co-operate with Lenine, Madame Sumenson and others."

The Government to-day was still probing all the ramifications of this remarkable German intrigue. It is believed some of the German agents actually participated in the firing on the streets. Lenine was still a fugitive.

The Ontario Liberals Hold A Conference

Opinion is Expressed That Before Enforcing Conscription There Should Be Another Whole-hearted Effort Under Voluntary System.

MOBILIZE RESOURCES

Win the war is first consideration.

Under Sir Wilfrid Laurier's leadership, the coming campaign will be fought and won.

There should be no extension of the present Parliament.

Coalition with the present Government deemed impracticable.

Before enforcing conscription there should be another wholehearted effort under the voluntary system, and mobilization of all resources.

TORONTO, July 21.—Ontario Federal Liberal members and candidates now in the field, after earnest conference, came to the above conclusions yesterday. The meeting, which was held in the rooms of the General Reform Association of Ontario, 36 Toronto street, was private, and there was the utmost freedom of discussion Hon. W. A. Charlton, M.P., former Speaker of the Legislature, was chosen to preside. Hon. G. P. Graham [illegible] address, in which he outlined the views taken by Liberals in the House of Commons recently, and declared that they had acted conscientiously. The Government was criticized for not taking a proper inventory of Canada's resources for the war, and the necessity for a further equalization of financial sacrifice was emphasized. Nearly every speaker referred to the national danger involved in the enforcement of conscription at the present time, which, they said, might hinder, rather than help, the prosecution of the war. "You cannot indict a whole Province," was a sentiment expressed on this point.

A Frank Conference.

The official statement of the proceedings at the meeting said:

No formal resolutions were passed at the conference. The members gathered more with the idea of advising with the Ontario Liberals in Parliament and of exchanging in frank and free discussion their views as to the best policy to be pursued to achieve the largest possible measure of national war effort and national unity rather than with a view to defining the specific application of the general principles agreed upon.

All Spoke Freely.

Every member and candidate present was given and accepted the opportunity to state his convictions. At the conclusion of the general discussion, conducted throughout in a spirit of the utmost cordiality, in co-operating towards the common object of war service and of national service, Hon. George P. Graham took the census of the gathering as to the unanimous opinion reached.

These were summarised and unanimously endorsed as follows:

That the putting forth of Canada's whole effort towards winning the war in the first consideration of party policy and party effort.

That the patriotism, integrity of purpose and statesmanship of Sir Wilfrid Laurier is unquestioned, and that under his Dominion leadership the coming campaign will be fought and won.

That there should be no extension of the present Parliament, but that an appeal should be made to the people for a new Parliament and a new Administration.

That the war administration of the Borden Government does not warrant any further trust by the people of Canada.

That at the present time and under the aegis of the present Government a Coalition or Union Government of Liberals and Conservatives is impracticable and undesirable.

Make a Last Appeal.

That before attempting an enforcement of the present conscription measure and having regard to all national conditions, there should be a

ENGLAND'S ACHIEVEMENT.

It seems certain that no nation in all the past of the world ever equalled England's achievement in this war; and it seems probable that no nation ever will, considering that an age of disarmament and universal arbitration is, as we hope, drawing near. She is maintaining an army of two and a quarter million men in France and other armies in Egypt, Mesopotamia, Salonika and Palestine. No figures are at hand to show how many fighters she has afloat, but she has swept the ocean clear of raiders and is making steady progress in her work of freeing the seas of submarines. Great Britain alone put four million men under arms without resorting to conscription. She buttressed the credit of the world, loaned her allies five thousand million dollars, has spent three times as much in other ways and raised in one great loan six billion dollars, the greatest financial achievement of any age. — Rochester Post.

WHY IN NORWOOD?

When the Provincial Department of Agriculture assigned a district representative to Peterborough County it surely did not intend to limit the scope of his work to one community, and to obscure his office by concealing him in Norwood. It would be unfair to assume, that the Minister of Agriculture, Premier Hearst, was a party to such a disposal, or, that knowing the local conditions, he would even sanction it. Norwood was undoubtedly chosen on the recommendation of Mr. James Thompson, M.P.P. For that choice he should receive a measure of credit for he might have favoured Havelock to which, as a former resident, he must have been predisposed. Norwood, however, is on the fringe of the agricultural township of this county. If Mr. Thompson was influenced only by poltical considerations, the village of Keene should have taken precedence over Norwood. It is a central point in the township of Otonabee, the richest agricultural sub-divison of the county. It is also adjacenet to Asphodel and is not remote from Douro. Hence if the interests of the farmers of East Peterborough had been consulted in the selection of the headquarters of the District Representative, Norwood was not the most favourable location.

Mr. Thompson, however, was seemingly guide by political instinct that places personal advantage before that of the community. He was simply adhering to a precedent that is all too slowly breaking down. Mr. Thompson's experience in the County Council must have taught him that the richest agricultural townships are distributed around the City of Peterborough. Peterborough is also the seat of county government and both the natural and logical centre of the agricultural affairs of this district. The representative of the Department of Agriculture should be located here. In fact the supreme importance of farming and dairying suggests that two instructors should be allotted to rural Peterborough, a service the farmers will ultimately demand when they realize its value to them. It may be safely asserted that agriculture is the richest industry in this county, and as such deserves to be directed and fostered by Government aid, rather than penalized by the whim of a non-resident politician.

A HOLIDAY FOR FIRST DIVISION?

If it is possible, soon after conscription goes into effect and the man-power is available, those men of Canada's First Division who have been at the front since March, 1915, should be given a holiday. They should be permitted to return to Canada for a month or two at the Government's expense. Probably the number of men with the First Division before and since those memorable days at Ypres do not exceed a few thousands. The least we can do for them is to give them a rest but to do this it is necessary to have the reinforcements to take their places at the front. The desirability of extending this recognition to the veterans of Canada's Army should be acknowledged by the Government and should be one of the first fruits of conscription. If a special effort is made, those soldiers of Ypres who are still in the fighting line should be able to spend next Christmas in their homes. There is no doubt that a suggestion of this kind would meet with the cordial approval of Sir Arthur Currie, provided the necessary reinforcements were forthcoming. The survivors of the First Division deserve a rest from their labours and a grateful country should pay this small tribute to their courage, endurance and the manner in which they have shed lustre on the name of Canada.—From The Victoria Colonist

A WESTERN GROUP.

In a Regina report an effort is made to forecast the work of the convention of Western Liberals, to be held at Winnipeg in August, says the Toronto Star. Apparently it is to be, in the main, a convention of Provincial Liberals, to be organized for Federal purposes. It will aim to take in the organised farmers and other new elements of political strength in the west. It will advocate free trade in natural products, reciprocity, and the transfer of the control of natural resources from the Dominion to the Western Provinces.

It will hold itself free from both poljtical parties at Ottawa. It would have nothing to do with any coalition led by Sir Robert Borden, because it aims not to follow, but to lead.

This project, while ambitious, is by no means visionary. The West, after the next election, will have 57 members, of whom 43 will represent the Prairie Provinces. Georgraphy and similar agricultural conditions lend themselves to the formation of a group of this kind.

So far as can be judged from the attitude of most of the Western Liberals at Ottawa, the West favours conscription and a vigorous prosecution of the war. Its representatives would assist Sir Robert Borden to that extent, but would resist absorption into the Conservative party, and preserve their own identity as a group. Their ideals are very far from those of Quebec, but are by no means identical with those of Ontario.

To some the organization of a Western group, following the isolation of Quebec from the rest of Canada on the question of conscription may be a cause of alarm. We do not regard it in that way. The relative influence of Quebec will be not augmented but lessened by the enlarged representation of the Western Provinces. At the same time there is no tradition of suspicion or hostility between Quebec and the West. They are not near enough to quarrel. The West will undoubtedly go its own way regardless of Quebec opinion, but it will be equally independent of Ontario.

We seem to be on the eve of great changes, and if these result in the breaking up of some old party associations the country will be none the worse. It is quite likely that in course of time we may settle down again into the bi-party system. But the two new parties will not be the same as the two old ones. Men will be jolted out of their old ruts and compelled to think for themselves, without the aid or the hindrance of tradition.

REMEMBER THE FIGHTING MEN

(Toronto Globe)

During the next few weeks thousands of people will leave the cities and the towns of Canada to spend vacations on the lakes, in the mountains, or in the country. Many will go with light hearts, thinking only of the boys of relaxation from business cares or the tasks of office, factory or shop. Very many will leave the "busy marts of commerce" in a more sober mood, for their hearts and minds are oppressed by the war. They seek a brief surcease from the stress and strife of workaday life only because they know that a change is imperative if they are to keep in good health and continue to meet the responsibilities of their spheres of action in the community. These will not forget the brave men who are fighting for the safekeeping of all that Canada holds dear. There will be no relaxation of war work on their part, the call of duty will be as strong wherever they may be as it would be were they still at home. Indeed, the knitting of socks, the making of bandages and comforts, the choosing of things for the parcels, the planning for the care of the returned invalided soldiers, the solving of the problem of employment now and in the future, and the writing of letters to the gallant men who are risking all for those who stay at home, will all be done with a deeper, truer love and sympathy. Favourite recreation and holiday haunts will have about them a sweeter appeal because of the memories of the holidays shared there with those who now keep watch and ward against the Hun.

The third anniversary of the outbreak of war is fast approaching. To-day the need for comforts of all kinds for the fighting men is great and persistent. To those who are weary in well-doing; to those who have been careless or indifferent from the first, and have shared none of the joys or sorrows of voluntary war work, a real opportunity presents itself. They might relieve for the period of their vacations, or for part of them, war workers who have toiled unceasingly since the first call for comforts was made. They might begin now to write to friends they know who are on the fighting line, and a cheery letter from his home town is a real joy to a soldier. On every side there are institutions and organizations that will advise any who desire to help in the work. So many hours a day of work for the men at the front could be made a quietly happy period in the daily life of many recreation centres this summer.

THE REVENGE OF DIGNITY.

Springfield Union: Cardinal Mercier in telling the Governor-General of Belgium that his priests will pay fine upon fine rather than give assistance to the Germans in carrying on their policy of deportation, says: "We await our vengeance in patience. I am not speaking of our earthly vengeance. We have that already, for the regime of occupation that you force us to undergo is despised by everything that is decent in the whole world. I am speaking of the judgment of history, of the inescapable punishment of the God of justice." It takes more than the guns that silenced Liege to silence this great prelate and the simple truth he utters.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

Sir Robert Borden has acceded to the demand of Sir Joseph Flavelle and will appoint a judicial officer as a commissioner to make an investigation of the O'Connor report. What the long-suffering public want, however, is cheaper bacon and not so many reports.

What we want is a new Germany, not a Germany which wishes, as our enemies believe to terrorise the world with her armed might, no the morally, purified, God-fearing, loyal, peaceful and mighty Germany which we love." Chancellor Michaelis remarked in his address before the Reichstag. Well a morally, purified, God-fearing and peaceful Germany would certainly be a new Germany.

Branch Manager of the Imperial Life Assurance Co., Central Ontario District, and President of R. Hicks and Co., who is leaving Peterborough on Monday for England to enlist for active service at the front. Since coming here from Toronto Mr. Dawson has made many friends who will regret losing him, but who will unite in admiring his determination to play a man's part in the world war. Peterborough loses a good citizen and the Empire gains a good soldier.

Question of Voters' List For Election

Federal Government May Enfranchise Women of Canada

TORONTO, July 20—With a Dominion election looming up within three months, considerable interest is being taken as to the formation of the new voters' lists.

The Federal Government will in all probability pass a Dominion Franchise Act, which will disfranchise some of those who before were entitled to vote. Resolutions passed by the City Council and forwarded to Ottawa suggested that those of alien enemy birth, who had not resided in the country for twenty years at least should be disfranchised, and it is likely that the Dominion Franchise Act will be framed on those lines.

TAKE LOT OF TIME.

This will mean that the new voters' lists will have to be prepared in the different provinces. It is estimated that to prepare the lists in Ontario would take about three months, allowing for the time for registration and the time then for appeals and the printing of the lists.

WOMAN VOTE EVERYWHERE

In the last three Dominion elections the lists used have been those used in the provincial elections. Now in Ontario by proclamation the women are entitled to vote. The lists are being prepared to include women, and women will be entitled to vote at the coming Dominion elections should these lists be used. There may be some outcry from the other provinces, which have not yet the women on the lists, against having the women of Ontario voting at this coming election, and the Federal Government may decide that these lists cannot be used, or if the Dominion Franchise Act is passed it may include votes for women in Canada.

There seems to be considerable stir amongst both parties over the voters' lists, and just what will be done is not known. If new lists have to be prepared they will have to get busy soon if the election is to take place around the beginning of October.

Ontario Liberals Hold Conference

united and whole hearted effort under the voluntary system, and that contemporaneously there should be steps taken forthwith looking to the completest possible inventory and mobilization of all the resources of the nation for war effort; also an intelligent and adequate ascertaining in proper perspective of all the needs of the war situation.

May Meet Again.

Owing to the fact that the conference had been somewhat hurriedly called, and was only of short duration, and intended merely as a preliminary discussion and outlining of views, it is understood that later on, when all the candidates are in the field and the Government's policy and attitude in regard to conscription and other issues have been more clearly defined, another conference will be held to deal more fully with the whole situation. Meanwhile the views expressed will be communicated to Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

Hotel Guests Are Robbed Of Boots

BUT GERMAN GOVERNMENT ALLOWS NEW PURCHASES.

BERLIN, via London, July 20.—The time-honoured custom among hotel guests of depositing one's footwear in the corridor outside the door to have it polished is likely to come into disuse for the time being. The growing demand for shoes, even cast-offs has discouraged the leaving of footwear in hotels.

In order to rescue hotel guests from their predicament in the case of such losses, the Imperial clothing bureau has ordained that purchasing certificates be issued without the ordinary restrictions whenever the applicant is able to prove that he has been robbed of his boots in a hotel.

MANY GUESTS ARE AT VIAMEDE

GETS BIG INCREASE IN HIS PAY CHECK

Feels It His Duty to Let Others Know About the Great Good Tanlac Did Him

"I think it everybody's duty when they find a good thing like Tanlac to let others know about it, and that is why I am giving you this statement for publication," said Herbert C. Eddis, residing at 34 Alexander street, Toronto, and employed by the Massey-Harris Co. Mr. Eddis was formerly an architect by profession, but was compelled to give up his line of work on account of his eyesight.

"I was in a badly run down condition, and suffered all winter with indigestion and a sluggish liver," said Mr. Eddis. "I was never able to find the right thing for my troubles, and kept getting worse all the time. I had severe pains in my back across my kidneys on getting up in the mornings, especially if my work was a little unusually hard the day before. I couldn't sleep well, and often lay awake for hours at a time worrying over my troubles. During the day I felt heavy and dull and would just drag around scarcely able to do my work. My stomach always felt bloated and uncomfortabe after eating and I suffered a great deal with a torpid, inactive liver. I was always having to take some kind of medicine for this trouble. When I stooped down I felt blind and dizzy and was just about down and out. In fact I was in no shape to work and it was my will power more than anything else that kept me on my feet.

"I decided to try Tanlac, as I had been reading a lot about it in the newspapers. Well, after I had been taking it a few days I began to feel stronger and better, and when the first bottle was finished I felt so improved I bought another. After taking my second bottle my headaches had vanished, my liver trouble and nervousness had disappeared, and I was feeling altogether different. I could eat anything without having a sign of indigestion, all my tired, worn out feelings left me, and I found that I could do my work with as much ease as I ever could.

"I do piecework at the plant, and last week my pay check was sixteen dollars more than it had ever been before. It was simply because Tanlac had straightened me out and put me in shape to do more and better work. Tanlac is great and did the work quick, and satisfactorily for me, and I'll praise it as long as I live."

Tanlac, the remarkable medicine, which accomplished such wonderful results in Mr. Eddis's case, is being sold in Peterboro by the Warne Drug Co.

THEY ELOPED IN A BOX CAR.

Youthful Couple Saved Fares, But Must Wait to Wed.

Love laughs at carfare, thought Miss Carrie Milroy and George Emerson, both of Harrisburg, Pa., when they boarded a freight train at Mayesville, a suburb, and went to Sudbury to be wedded.

They applied to Police Chief Smith, who told them that a permit from the girl's parents must be obtained, as she said she was only 19 years old.

They admitted having made the trip in a box car, saying they were without funds to pay both carfare and the preacher. They said they had been sweethearts for a year and decided to run away to Sudbury to wed. Unable to get a license, they used the money to return on a passenger train.

WILL WELCOME GUESTS

FRANCE PREPARING TO ENTERTAIN HER VISITORS.

Great Rush is Expected After the War, and It Is Stated That Twenty-five Thousand Americans Have Booked First Sailings to Europe for the Post-bellum Period to Visit Gallant Ally.

WHEN a man was asked to join up at the beginning of this "moderately serious affair—with Germany," as the war is called in the army, it was "for the duration." When each of the hotels that are now in the Government service were called to the colors perforce, was it stated for what duration?

Does anyone know at or about what time after the war half the leading hotels of London will shed their officials and return to civil life? No one does.

After war labor problems, trade problems, and the like are the subject of "anxious consideration" by committees, writes Cecil J. Darrian in The London Chronicle. The after-war-travel problem—that of hotel and railway accommodation—appears to be causing no anxiety and no consideration, even though the great revivals of commerce, industries, arts, and sciences will, in those stirring after-war days, be conducted very largely by people who will have to travel to some common meeting place, and who will be obliged to stop thereat in hotels.

No one cares for the traveler. It is forgotten that he is not always an idle tourist, and even when an idle tourist, that his necessity as such for leaving a large slice of his private fortune in the land of his sojourn is considered very good for that land.

Yet there is a place where the traveler is to be cared for after the war. It is France. Should it not interest officials to know what France is doing now about this other "moderately serious affair?"

A short time ago France discovered that already 25,000 Americans had engaged passage for the first sailings to leave the port of New York for Europe after peace is declared! From this hint of what was coming upon them, probably from all other directions as well, Frenchmen took counsel among themselves as to whether they would receive those people when they came knocking at the gates or whether they would try to turn them away.

Having consideration for the future of France and the development of her resources as a centre of attraction to the world's pleasure and health seekers, and as an advantageous meeting place for the transaction of international business through long years to come, they decided on the former alternative. And having so decided they resolved to receive the travelers with generous and well-organised hospitality.

The program is drawn up and well on its way to execution. The old order is to change. Haphazard arrangements of transport and the uneven offerings of private enterprise in the matter of hotel accommodation and the like are to give way to organization. The Touring Club of France, the Automobile Club of France, the famous Hundred Club, these, with the help of several powerful newspapers, working in close co-operation with the Ministry of the Interior, are the organizers of this great effort.

Their campaign has three main objectives: Improvement of transport arrangements, the revival of the hotel industry on a national basis, and the development of the natural springs and curative baths and of the winter resorts in the French Alps and Pyrenees.

Large grants are being asked for from the Government to devote to the upkeep and improvement of the roads—those great highways which have played so important a part in the saving of France. The American cement system has been proposed as a practical surface covering for these roads, and it is now being experimented with near Versailles. Motoring is to be encouraged by every means possible, and a complete system of good highways and connecting roads is assured.

Railway accommodation, if insufficient at first, due to the wastage of war, will be supplemented by motors, and passengers landing from the great liners at the French ports will, many of them, be transported to Paris in Government automobiles.

The hotel industry, however, is the chief concern of these organisers of France's future. This is to be a national industry without a taint of the German penetration that had strangled it before the war. A law has been proposed, and it is expected that it will be passed, that will exclude from ownership of or service in any hotel in France all persons who are not French by birth. The edict is aimed against Germans and Austrians, but it is also designed to aid the revival of the essentially French hotel.

Special schools, where only the various branches of hotel-keeping are taught, have already been opened in Paris, Nice, and elsewhere—seventeen schools in all. The traditional French cooking at its best is one of the most important courses in these schools and cleanliness which would delight the most fastidious is the first essential in which these scholars are instructed.

Under the special care of the Hundred Club—so called from the number of its members—is the welfare of the small inns in the remote country districts of France. These inns have in the past been the delight of the Frenchman and the despair of the foreigner—particularly of the Anglo-Saxon species. They were one of the last of the mediaeval remnants of Europe—outside of politics. The proprietor of them was Mine Host and the traveller was his honored guest.

The kitchen on the rez de chaussee stood next to the entrance, and the sojourner was welcome to choose and discuss materials for the meal. Upstairs simplicity was discovered at its height. Bed, washstand, and chair, bare floor, all scrubbed and clean, but without the least lounging possibilities or the comforts of bath and hot water, were all that Mine Host had to offer even to the most luxurious traveller.

The consequence has been that in every region where there was some particular attraction to the motorist and his class large hotels of the stereotyped pattern, usually run by Germans, have been erected and the local inns have fallen into decay. Confident that no such fare and no such warm hospitality can ever be found in a big caravanseral as always been offered in the little old inns of France, the Hundred Club has adopted a plan by which these innkeepers will be encouraged to add a few modern comforts to their unique establishments, meanwhile reviving and maintaining their excellent kitchens and offering their same old-fashioned fare.

In developing the spas and the winter sports resorts it has not yet been decided whether to adopt the method of government subsidy or to depend on organized private industry. A start has already been made in the latter direction, and a campaign to educate French people to patronize their own resorts, and thus lead the way for the rest of the world, has been begun.

NEW "ENGLISH" WORDS.

Language To Be Enriched When Tommy Comes Home.

English is the most hospitable of languages, and it will not deny a welcome and houseroom to the phrases which are already a part and parcel of Tommy's daily speech in India, and which he shall pack away in his kit when his time comes to leave for home, says The Glasgow Herald. You will then find yourself dropping a "chit" to Brown instead of a letter, and when you have completed the arrangements for the removal of your furniture you will announce it thus to your wife: "My dear, I've made a bunderbus with the coalman for his lorry."

You will grow skilful in the use of the expressive Hindustani word "bus," e. g., to offer a vender "Sixpence, bus," is to indicate that you have appraised the value of his wares at that price, which you will not exceed, and your emphatic "Bus" to a friend who is more fluent in argument than conclusive conveys with arresting force and contemptuous terseness the full meaning of "Dry up!" You will accept apologies with a mellifluous "Kuchparwani," meaning that "it doesn't matter in the least," and "kubbardar" will replace the overworked "Look out!" You will say "jeldee" for "quickly," and "astee" for slowly, "chalow" for "get along," and "jow" for "go!" There will be, of course, the occasional substitution of "roti" and "pani" for "bread" and "water." Indeed, in matters culinary your vocabulary will be of necessity trilingual, and the menu may be Hindustani instead of French, but all information there anent may best be referred directly to Tommy himself—when he "comes marching home."

Bulldog Lost His Nerve.

There are some incidents about the mascots in the big naval battle which are worth repeating. The mascot on the Tiger was a bulldog, a fine fellow. When getting into the battle the crew were a bit concerned as to how their favorite would take the crashing of high explosives on the ship, so they plugged his ears with cotton wool, wrapped his head around as if he had a heavy dose of toothache, and a couple of men took the bulldog, much to his annoyance, to a room that was thought to be as quiet as the ship could provide. The dog didn't quite fancy being treated as an invalid and resented the coddling, but when the shots began he took it pretty badly and was mighty glad he had a pal sitting on either side holding him by the paws.

Another boat had a fine, big, black cat. He was overlooked when they got into action, and the first shell that came aboard this fellow got loose and took a flying dive overboard. As the boat was going about twenty-seven knots even the most tender-hearted Jack Tar could hardly risk going after Tommy. On another ship they had a little bantam, which strutted about more proudly than the dinkiest midshipman and with as big a show of courage as the hardiest of the old seadogs. The tars were proud of the "swank" their pet could assume before strangers. When the first German shell crashed on board the bantam lost all his fine show and flew down one of the ventilators. When he was rescued and photographed after the fight he presented a bedraggled appearance.—London Post.

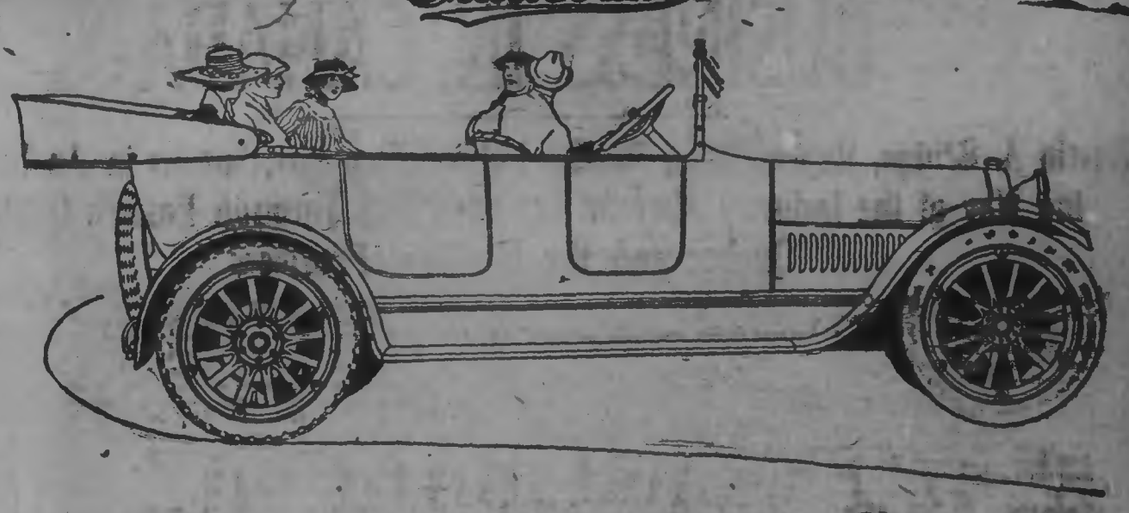
"Blue Devil" of France.

They call him the "Blue Devil of France"—the French in frenzied devotion for his heroism at the Mara, the Germans in recollection of a defeat ghastly and terrifying that the name brings shudders. It was at a crucial point in the battle that saved France. Fabry's regiment, at first victorious, was being cut to pieces by the German guns. But he held on. Finally the Germans prepared for a final charge against the French remnant. Fabry had little artillery and fewer machine guns. His men, led by the "Blue Devil," carried the German bodies to their trenches, built a parapet, and halted the Teutons.

Safeguarding Salt.

As a result of the French Government's monopoly of salt visitors to the resort of Pourville are officially forbidden "to carry away in any vessel or receptacle any quantity of seawater except by special license." The order is issued to prevent salt being extracted from the water.

Studebaker



The Studebaker Car

A Safe Investment

STUDEBAKER cars are built in Studebaker factories at Walkerville, Ontario. They are built with full knowledge of Canadian roads and conditions throughout the Dominion. The men who build them are skillful, trained mechanics.

Their work is carefully supervised by the most expert engineers in the automobile industry.

The materials used are tested and proved in the great Studebaker laboratories.

Many materials have been developed by Studebaker solely for Studebaker purposes.

No car at any price uses higher grade steels than Studebaker.

Studebaker uses drop forgings instead of castings at every possible point—this insures lightness and great strength.

The Studebaker motor has been developed by four years' experience with the same basic design in the hands of thousands and thousands of owners in every part of the world.

It is an evolution, not an experiment.

It is the most clean cut, accessible motor you ever saw.

Its valves are noiseless and do not require frequent lubrication. It is probably the most powerful motor ever used in a car of such light weight as the Studebaker car.

Its power is free flowing and flexible. Its response to the throttle is instant.

It is very economical in its consumption of gasoline.

The Studebaker electric system is simple, accessible, never failing. It is the best electric system that the highly organized skill of Studebaker and Wagner engineers working in close harmony could devise.

All wiring is easy to get at—all wires are protected from grease and damp by flexible steel conduits.

No matter what the climate the Studebaker starter never fails.

It exerts a cranking torque equal to two hundred pounds. It always starts the motor.

Studebaker cars are big and roomy. The front seats are individual and form-fitting, adjustable forward and back to all leg lengths, the one next the driver is reversible—its occupant may face the tonneau if desired.

The tonneau seat is 48 inches wide—the ideal width for a five passenger car.

There are two auxiliary seats, arm chairs in fact, stored under the tonneau seat, enabling you to carry extra passengers in comfort if desired.

These chairs are standard in both FOUR and SIX cylinder touring models.

All Studebaker upholstery is of genuine, high-grade, hand buffed leather. Studebaker doors are wide opening—easy to enter or leave.

These are only a few of the qualities that make the Studebaker car the great value car of Canada today.

No other car at anywhere near the Studebaker price offers them all.

You owe it to yourself to let us prove in an actual demonstration the quality and value of the Studebaker car.

We are at your service at any time.

There will be no change in Studebaker models this year, but the increased cost of materials and labor may force Studebaker to make an advance in prices at any time without notice.

Lubin Operated In Peterborough "Touched" Merchant For $12.00

Police Are Endeavouring to Run the Man Down—Local Man Said to Have Cashed a Cheque For Lubin

The Lindsay Post of yesterday's issue has the following:

Word was received from Peterborough to-day to the effect that G. A. Lubin, the affable and smooth-tongued French Canadian, whose "frenzied finance" stunts is the talk of the town, operated a slick game on a merchant in the Electric City.

As was announced in the Post on Wednesday, Lubin put up at the Munro House in Peterborough, after arriving in that city on Saturday night. On the trip down he struck in with a local man with whom he was acquainted and they had only been in the city a few minutes when Lubin confided the information that he was "a little short of money," and wondered if his cheque would be honoured in the city. The Lindsay man, believing that Lubin had a bank account here introduced him to Mr. Frank L. Jenne, manager of the Semi-Ready Store, who accepted Lubin's cheque and handed him over $12.00. It was easy picking for Lubin, but a sore touch for the Semi-Ready man.

On Sunday, it is said, Lubin attempted to carry off the Lindsay man's suit case from the Munro House, but did not succeed. He got his safety razor, however.

Chief Short is firmly convinced that Lubin is a full-fledged crook, and it will not be his fault if he is not soon rounded up. He has secured a picture of the man, and cards will be struck off bearing his likeness for distribution throughout the country. All the leading centres in Ontario and Quebec have been notified and it will be a difficult matter for Lubin to dodge the authorities.

Marched To Wedding Under Strong Guard

Little Ceremony Breaks Monotony of Deserter's Day in the Lock-up.

CAMP BORDEN, July 20.—Cupid is not an ordinary visitor in camp, but he, or perhaps it would be better to say she, came up yesterday, and took temporary possession of the Provost Marshal's office. The lady paid a visit to Col. Osborne, A.A.G., and succeeded in enlisting his sympathy to the extent of having a prisoner from the "Hotel de Widgery" paraded to the Provost Marshal's office, where she formally annexed him in the bonds of matrimony. Chaplain Capt. Martin performed the ceremony, and members of the headquarters' staff acted as witnesses. When the wedding was over the bridegroom, who faces trial as a deserter, was marched back to the guard house and the blushing bride departed with the documentary evidence of the marriage. Nobody concerned could be found willing to divulge the names of the contracting parties.

HOME DEFENCE

The safeguarding of your home and all it means to you is not a matter of armies and ships alone. The comfort and happiness of your family are exposed to the attacks of enemies much nearer to them than the marauding Huns of Central Europe.

What will become of your home and your wife and your children, if you be suddenly stricken down as thousands of others have been?

Will there be any bulwark of defence to keep the home and the family from destruction?

You can most easily provide such a line of defence by means of a life assurance policy. Home Defence is its purpose and it fulfils that purpose as nothing else can.

GREAT GROWTH OF THE RUBBER BUSINESS IN CANADA

Austin A. Briggs, Representing Dunlop Rubber Company, Speaks in An Interesting Way of the Industry After An Extended Trip Through Eastern Ontario, Quebec and the Maritime Provinces

To travel over Canada from Coast to Coast, stopping off at each important business point, is certainly a unique experience for an Advertising Manager, when such positions are usually considered "inside jobs." Mr. A. A. Briggs, Advertising Manager of the Dunlop Tire and Rubber Goods Company, Limited, is undoubtedly the first advertising man in Canada, if not in America, to carry the story of a company's progress to the people. Only a few months ago he was on a 10,000 mile tour of the West, and had previously been to the Arctic Circle in a 7,000 mile journey.

Peterboro was practically the last leg of a trip that has taken in every City and Town in the Maritime Provinces and Quebec. Mr. Briggs travelled by train, boat and automobile, any way that served to give him a correct line on the habits and customs of each particular piece of territory visited.

Naturally he is enthusiastic about the future part rubber will play in our commercial life just as he is enthusiastic about the wonderful success that has come to the Dunlop Company.

Dunlop the Pioneers.

"I understand that the Dunlop Company are the pioneers of the tire industry in Canada."

"That is correct," said Mr. Briggs. "We made our first bicycle tire in 1894, and, like many other business enterprises, we started in a small way and grew with the country. One of the things that appeals to me the most when contemplating of the Dunlop achievements is this: Long before the Company had a factory they had a selling policy, which summed up in a few words meant, 'Make Good Products and Keep a Good Name!' It certainly is a source of pride to think of those early days when the total staff consisted of a few people, and to contemplate to-day that the company has fourteen full-fledged branches as follows: Halifax, St. John, Montreal, Ottawa, Toronto, Hamilton, London, Winnipeg, Regina, Saskatoon, Calgary, Edmonton, Vancouver and Victoria; also a number of district offices, as well as approximately 10,000 distributors over all Canada."

That Coin Stunt.

"Naturally, when people think of the name Dunlop, they think of the 'Two Hands.'" "Is it true that in following the policy of originality in featuring the 'Hands' your Company were unconsciously the means of causing the government to enact a special statute on advertising?"

"What you refer to is the stunt put over by the Dunlop Company some years ago. Our people evolved the idea of stamping a number of coins with the trade-mark. Whenever a coin was returned the successful holder was given an honorarium. The idea created so much interest at the time that the Canadian Government shut down on it, and put through a statute making it impossible to get up such a scheme in the future. Yet, to show you how the 'Two Hands' had been seered on the minds of the people, eight years after the discontinuance of the contest, the Dunlop Company received a letter from a man in a small town in Quebec, accompanied by one of the special five cent pieces. He wanted to know if the money belonged to us. You can imagine how large a pair of hands would be on a common five cent piece, when those hands were imprinted into a space clear of all words and border. Yet this man, living in a district where we did not direct advertising, found out what the mark meant, and who it belonged to.

Widening of Trademark.

"While we are on the subject, it may not be amiss to note that originally the 'Two Hands' mark carried the slogan 'These are the Only Tools You'll Need,' the reference being to the Dunlop idea of quick detachability in bicycle tires. After years of popularizing in Canada, until the 'Two Hands' became one of the widest known trademarks in the country, the tire industry commenced to broaden out from the bicycle end of the business to take in carriage, automobile, truck and motorcycle tires. The trademark had to broaden, too—not only because the tire business had developed new ramifications—but the Dunlop Company had also embarked into what is known as the mechanical end of the rubber goods business, namely, Rubber Belting, Rubber Packing, Rubber Hose,' — in fact, practically everything in rubber production.

Twenty-Three Years' Association.

"Obviously the 'Two Hands' sign, with the original slogan, had no bearing whatever on the mechanical and of the business, but the 'Two Hands' sign with an association now of twenty-three years back of it, had come to mean a quality standard, a business indicator that stood out from the field because of its unique character.

"So the phrase 'These Are the Only Tools You'll Need' was changed to 'Seal of Quality.'" Then the 'Two Hands' and the phrase were brought into a scroll arrangement that immediately linked them up with the idea of Dunlop Automobile Tires, Dunlop Truck Tires, or whatever might be the individual line receiving the publicity. 'Dunlop' being a registered word in Canada and the 'Two Hands' a registered trademark, gives the company double trademark strength."

Bicycle "Comeback."

Mention of the revival in bicycling immediately brought an enthusiastic statement from Mr. Briggs. "No other sport in the history of the world," he went on, "took such a great hold on such a large number of people simultaneously as cycling. That is a broad statement but those who have lived through the many seasons of sport since 1894, or who have kept in close touch with various sporting innovations from time to time, will, be believe, confirm us in the above declaration.

Bicycle Tire History.

"J. B. Dunlop invented the pneumatic bicycle tire in 1888, and, as noted previously, it was in 1894 that the Dunlop Company commenced the manufacture of the pneumatic bicycle tire in Canada. That event is probably the most remarkable thing in the whole history of the events which followed, because the success of the motorcycle and the automobile have been largely based on the success of the bicycle pneumatic tire, which in their case, of course, was at first merely an enlargement of the Dunlop bicycle tire.

"You have probably noticed that in our advertising we use the phrase 'If it isn't a Dunlop it's an imitation.' This is a reference to the wired-on feature which we commenced manufacturing under patents twenty-three years ago. Eighty per cent. of the bicycle tires used in Canada are Dunlop."

The Famous Dunlop Race.

Mr. Briggs continued: "Of course no reference to the bicycle is complete without a reference to the Dunlop Trophy Race which undoubtedly more than any other single factor, kept the bicycle 'game' alive. Of all the 'annuals' started in the 90's the 'Dunlop' alone is left. It has been run continuously for twenty-three years. The very first race in 1894 was conducted in a blase of excitement. Feelings ran so high when the results were announced that the losers in the contest took the matter to court in an effort to upset the bicycle judges' decision. The court upheld the bicycle judges' decision. This phrase brought to life the famous phrase, 'Did McCarthy Turn the Barrel?' to which even the poet has devoted his muse.

"In addition to the event noted above, the two greatest achievements in connection with the Dunlop Trophy Race, were put on, firstly, in 1912, when before thousands of people the Dunlop people staged the first bicycle, motorcycle and auto meet ever held in Canada on one track at one time, and, secondly, in 1915, when a monster meet was held before ten thousand people and the entire proceeds given to the Red Cross, the Dunlop Company paying all the expenses."

Passing of Leather.

The Dunlop man was next interrogated apropos of the talk commonly heard that the scarcity of leather has brought rubber more than ever into the limelight. He answered: "It is needless to point out that good leather is scarcer than before the war. This condition immediately benefits two portions of the rubber industry—rubber belting and 'Acme' soles. You probably have seen some of our announcements concerning 'Acme'—'The Sole of Perfection.' This product, which outwears and outserves leather, is fast coming into its own, and undoubtedly will be taken up by the people on a large scale. Why should not the people, in line with the government's appeal, save money on their shoe soles, as well as in household articles? Naturally, too, conditions governing the leather market, will further popularise the rubber heel, though Dunlop heels have been accepted as standard for more than a decade. As a matter of fact, the demand for Dunlop 'Peerless' Heels has been little short of phenomenal."

Vastness of Rubber Business.

Mr. Briggs now proceeded to give a thorough education in the wherewithals of Mechanical Rubber products. He stated that the Dunlop Company has to its credit the sales of tens of thousands of feet of heavy belting for the elevation and conveyance of sand, gravel, coal and ore in one Province alone. This is exclusive of the many thousand feet of belting sold for various other purposes. To one huge elevator the company supplied belting measuring well over two miles in length and weighing thirty-two tons. At another time, they shipped to one of the largest conveying and elevating systems in the world belting which weighed well over fifty tons.

Belting Endurance.

Carrying approximately half a million tons of destructive rock and gravel and one million tons of coal, are certainly some tests of belt endurance. These are the respective records two Dunlop conveyor belts have to their credit since being installed.

One Mile of Belting.

It wasn't so very long ago, either, since one of the biggest saw mills in the Maritime Provinces was fully equipped throughout with "Gibraltar Red Special" belting, approximately one mile in length. More than two-thirds of this belting was on its way by express direct from the St. John headquarters of the company on the same day the order was received. The owners of the mill in question are using the same brand of belting in no less than four other mills coming under their control.

Supremacy of Rubber Hose.

There are few municipalities in Canada in which Dunlop fire hose is not at the present time recognized as a most efficient medium for the fighting of fires. It is a great source of pride to the company that their product is daily keeping guard over innumerable lines and millions of dollars' worth of property. Thousands of feet of other hose for all manner of use are turned out daily at the Dunlop factories. Steam, air brake, car tender, and water hose in enormous quantities have and are being supplied to practically all the railroads either domiciled or operating in Canada. Huge Dunlop dredge sleeves, into which several men could easily crawl at one time, are in commission on many dredges.

MR. AUSTIN A. BRIGGS,
Advertising Manager of the Dunlop Rubber Company of Canada.

Underwriters Lend Approval.

In mill and gasoline hose the company has achieved oreditable success, and has been given authority by the Underwriters' Laboratories, Inc., Chicago, to manufacture Dunlop Underwriters' mill fire hose, cotton rubber lined, bearing their label of approval.

Rubber Packing Indispensable.

It seldom occurs to many people that if all packing was taken out of a factory, and there was no more obtainable, closing down would be the inevitable result. Wherever there is steam there must be packing.

Rubber packings, therefore, are necessary in order to keep the wheels of industry moving to the zenith of their efficiency. Dunlop "Sunset" red and "Globe" spiral, packings, are doing just that in practically all the busy centres throughout Canada. Particularly in the big steel industries where abnormal conditions call for superb service—such as 175 lbs. steam pressure—they are living up to the general reputation of Dunlop rubber products.

Rubber Tiling in Demand.

In hospitals, Dunlop tiling is finding constant and increased favor. Particularly in this case is it suitable because of its sound-deadening and sanitary qualities. Libraries, banks and schools of learning, too, have need of it. They are in greatly increasing numbers realizing its matchless qualities.

The railroads long ago found tiling to be indispensable for use in buffet care, smoking compartments, aisles, and on the platforms of their cars. Consequently many thousand square yards of Dunlop tiling have been laid in coaches belonging to practically all the leading railroads in Canada. Steamships utilise it profitably also.

Theatres Use Rubber Mats.

Conspicuous positions on floors of th atial entrances to some of Canada's largest theatres are occupied by Dunlop rubber mats. Many commercial establishments are keeping abreast of the times, also, by installing them.

Carriage Tires Still Used.

Questioned as to the influence of the automobile on the demand for carriage tires—one of the pioneer lines manufactured by the Company—Mr. Briggs remarked: "Contrary to the general impression, there has been no 'landslide' curtailment of carriage tires on account of the general popularity of the motor car. In the larger cities particularly throughout Quebec and the Maritime Provinces, great quantities of carriage tires are being used annually. That the majority of carriage makers in the Dominion have found it advantageous to adopt this Dunlop product as the standard equipment on vehicles of their make, speaks for itself."

Motor Trucks Increasing.

Mr. Briggs made it clear that it didn't take the motor truck long to become popular as an efficient means of commercial transportation, just as it has proven to be a valuable asset in the war. The two main types of solid motor truck tires in favor at the present time are represented by Dunlop pressed-on fit and Dunlop removable types—the one for large city use where equipments for attaching and detaching are available, and the other for use primarily in smaller cities and towns, because it is easy to attach or remove by a mechanic without the aid of a special machine.

Noteworthy Fact.

It is a noteworthy fact that the Canadian government—and American government—have both adopted as standard equipment for all war trucks the removable type of solid Motor Truck tires, and this is the very type that the Dunlop Company were the first to make in Canada, and have been selling to an ever-widening circle of users each year.

Factors in Success.

Turning to a discussion of the Dunlop factory itself, our visitor had a good deal to note. It seems that ever striving to improve and keep ahead of the times, the concern maintains a big experimental station which devotes its attention to perfecting established lines and creating new ones, and in both departments it has achieved remarkable success. One of the important factors responsible for the rapid but solid growth of the Dunlop Company is its absolute control of the Doughty Patent Process, which it is claimed, is the most exclusive and efficient method of making high-class bicycle tires and tubes for all purposes. Other notable inventions and improvements that are associated with the Dunlop Company are the pneumatic tire principle, the quick-detachable principle, the straight side principle, and the science-built, anti-skid tire.

Thoughtful of Employees.

From the first the Dunlop Company has been thoughtful of its employees, and one of its varied organizations is a Mutual Benefit Society, while another is its Amateur Athletic Association. A few years ago the company put at the disposal of its employees large athletic grounds, so that sports such as soccer, etc., could be carried on without any of the usual difficulties in securing actual space for playing the games. With the coming of the war, and the later call for greater production in foodstuffs, the company immediately offered to the employees free lots for their own use in planting whatever they might desire. The idea has grown in greater popularity each year and for 1917 the increase in "takeups" is about fifty per cent. over 1916. The Company have also fitted up special dining quarters, with every convenience for the factory staff, and here coffee is provided every working day, free of charge. Another department of the dining service provides the noon-day dinner for less than cost to the office staff.

Romance of Tiredom.

In conclusion, Mr. Briggs remarked: "I believe commercial Canada has no greater romance than the growth of the automobile, with the consequent growth of the automobile tire. Seven years ago, the total number of cars in all Canada was not half as great as the total number now in use in the Province of Ontario alone. A few years back American tire manufacturers were boasting of production figures per day which we have equalled this year. The freight car, the express car, the steamboat, the big horse lorry, the huge motor truck—all these are necessary now to deliver Dunlop Traction Tread and Dunlop Special to the great concourse of motorists in the various parts of Canada, who will accept no less value than is offered in the 'Most Envied Tires in All America.'

Auto Tire Triumphs.

"Despite the fact that we have practically never let up increasing floor space nd equipment—and are adding to our stock of tire makers every day—there is at present one continuous call from all over the country to 'ship auto tires at once!' Traction Tread Auto Tires, as you know, hold the transcontinental record. They were equipped to a car that blazed the trail from Halifax to Vancouver in forty-nine days, forty-one of which were actually travelling.

"Then, again, the two most expensive automobiles ever seen at a New York auto show were both completely equipped with Dunlop Traction Tread Tires. One was a $25,000 DeDion Bouton: the other a $20,000 English Daimler. And think of this, nine men are employed in New York City doing nothing else but selling Dunlop Traction Tread Automobile Tires.

Tube-Making an Art.

"Of course you are acquainted with the tube used in auto tires. You would hardly think, though, that nineteen different and distinct operations are represented in the making of the Dunlop Product. And what is more important, Dunlop Tubes are the only tubes made by an exclusive and patented process which ensures absolute uniformity in thickness and weight.

Fairness of Prices.

"And, let me add, as a final statement," went on Mr. Briggs, "that there is no fairer business in the world than that of tire-making. I am speaking now for all rubber companies. Do you know that in the period from 1911 to 1914 there was, almost without exception nothing but one continuous revision of prices downward? The ethics of the rubber business demand that the moment crude rubber prices drop to any appreciable extent, the price of tires to the people also drop. So that if there is one thing the tire-buying public can be sure of it is this. No controller of tire prices is necessary. The crude rubber market, thousands of miles away, does the controlling."

SUMMER HEAT HARD ON BABY

No season of the year is so dangerous to the life of little ones as is the summer. The excessive heat throws the little stomach out of order so quickly that unless prompt aid is at hand the baby may be beyond all human help before the mother realizes he is ill. Summer is the season when diarrhoea, cholera, infantum, dysentry and colic are most prevalent. Any one of these troubles may prove deadly if not promptly treated. During the summer the mothers' best friend is Baby's Own Tablets. They regulate the bowels, sweeten the stomach and keep baby healthy. The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Women Win Fight To Retain Skirts

EDICT OF PULLMAN COMPANY THAT FAIR CAR CLEANERS WEAR OVERALLS IS WITHDRAWN.

Kansas City, Mo. — In a contest between skirts and overalls, with thirty-five women employees of the Pullman Company as combatants, skirts won. Efficiency, one weapon used against the skirts by employers, who said cleaning was more easily to handle in an overall than in flapping petticoats, went down before tradition, and the company through the intervention of the Board of Public Welfare, agreed that overalls might be optional with the women.

The donning of masculine garments by women caused the men working around them to lose respect, according to the women.

"It unsexes us. There are some men whose only regard for women, a their regard for the clothing their mothers wore," they said.

This modesty on the part of women employed to clean coaches amazed the employees of the company.

CRIME DECREASES IN ENGLAND.

LONDON.—England continues to grow more temperate and law-abiding according to criminal statistics for the year, just issued. As compared with the year before the war, there has been a large diminution in the volume of crime. In the upper courts, the number of persons tried has decreased from 12,500 to 6,000; in the lower courts the decrease is from 730,000 to 580,000. The number of persons charged with drunkenness has dropped from 204,000 to 150,000.

Stomach Magnet For Metal As Picked Padlock Proves

Philadelphia, Pa. — For several weeks Mrs. Joseph Quinlan had been mystified by the disappearance of numerous articles from her household. She changed servants half a dozen times, but the articles, such as silver spoons and pieces of household hardware, continued to be missed. Recently her husband became ill, and was sent to the Philadelphia Hospital and there the surgeons cut open his stomach, and removed the following articles:

Thirty-four silver teaspoons.
One alcohol cigar lighter and chain.
One padlock.
Twelve screen door hooks.
One glass medicine dropper.
Six 10-penny nails.
Thirty-six carpet tacks.
Thirteen metal buttons.
Six safety pins.
Forty pieces printers' type.
Thirty-two coins.
Four souvenir medals.
Nineteen screws (assorted sizes.)
Two hundred and forty-seven pebbles.

Disordered nerves were responsible for an unusual appetite which caused Mr. Quinlan to go on a hardware diet. When "the goods were found on him" Mr. Quinlan confessed, and said that he was unable to overcome his appetite when tempted, for instance, by a nice nickel-plated screen door hook or by a silver teaspoon that seemed to glide down like a stick of candy.

After the 452 foreign and undigested objects had been removed from Mr. Quinlan's stomach the physicians said he had a chance to recover.

FROM COBOURG TO ENGLAND WITH THE HEAVY BATTERY BOYS

Gunner Jas. McLeod, One of the Eleven Peterboro' Members of a Recent Trip Tells All About the Voyage in an Interesting Letter Written Especially For the Examiner.

Gunner D. J. McLeod, a Peterborough boy who left Cobourg on June 20th, with one of the recent drafts of the Cobourg Heavy Battery, sends the Examiner a most interesting diary of the trip.

He writes as follows:

I will try to give you a full description of our trip from Cobourg to England.

We left Cobourg at 6.15 p.m., June 20, via Grand Trunk. The draft consists of one hundred men and two officers, the largest draft of battery boys that have ever left Cobourg. There are ten other Peterborough boys with me, i.e., F. Barrie, W. K. McGee, H. Madill, C. A. Hollowell, J. Vincent, A. Soft, J. Turnbull, A. Hargrove, J. Sproats, and V. Bullock; so you see Peterborough is well represented.

We arrived at Belleville about 7.30 p.m., where the people were out en masse to wish us God speed and a safe return.

At Kingston, we picked up a draft from the Medical Corps, and when we reached Brockville the 230th Forestry Battlaion got on board. Our train consisted of seventeen coaches. There are nearly six hundred of us on board. It is now midnight and as I am sleepy, I think I will turn in.

Thursday, June 21, 1917, 4.30 a.m.—We have just arrived at Montreal, and I don't think very much of this city. The smoke and dirt is fierce. We pulled out of Montreal at 9.00 a.m., having been delayed four and a half hours. We just crossed the Victoria bridge. It is some structure. It is now noon. We are travelling through country where there is nothing but French. I haven't seen a Union Jack since leaving Montreal, but I have noticed numerous French flags. We have been insulted by a couple of Frenchmen at stations where we have stopped. I almost wish they would start something. We have just passed the Cantalever bridge, where the accident happened last fall. It is certainly a great piece of engineering work.

June 22, (Friday noon)—We are still travelling east; just passed through Campbelltown, N.B., where they let us off for twenty minutes, the first time we have been off since coming on board, and it was sure a relief to stretch our limbs.

We are now travelling parallel with the Restigouche River. As you know, it is a great salmon stream. There are a large number of little fishing villages stretched all along the river. There is a great difference in the feelings of the people in New Brunswick than in Quebec. Everybody is out waving flags and cheerings us, whereas in Quebec we hardly got a pleasant look.

It is now 9 o'clock p.m. We have passed through the more thickly populated part of New Brunswick, and we are now in the mountains, where it is nothing but a wilderness. There are millions of feet of lumber along here, growing. We have just left Moncton, where we had a route march through the city. Too bad the Hydro don't extend down here, for the street lighting is fierce. The people gave us a great send-off. I lost my water-bottle, but got hold of one belonging to somebody else, so I'm all right. They say we will reach our destination to-morrow, I hope so; this train is rotten.

June 23rd, Saturday, 7.30 a.m.—Just arrived at Halifax and everybody glad.

We came on board the boat about 9.00 a.m., and all you can hear is discontentment. Our quarters are the worst on the boat. There are two hundred and fifty of us jammed into a space big enough to accommodate about quarter of us. It is enough to dishearten you. They have us strung to the ceiling in hammocks. Can you beat it?

We are on the "Justicia," a big steamer that is about half completed. They were building it when war broke out and they immediately turned it into a troopship. This is her second voyage. She has the largest cargo of wheat on board that has ever crossed the Atlantic, i.e., 175,000 bushels, besides a large cargo of sugar. She is a boat of 33,000 tons, so you see she can accommodate a big cargo. They have swung us out into the harbour and anchored us. There are a few cruisers here, including a French one, and I also saw Sir John C. Eaton's launch, the "Flerance".

June 24th, Sunday.—We are still in the harbour. We put up a big kick about our quarters and they gave us hopes of moving us. I hope so, for I can safely say this is the rottenest hole I ever had to stay in. The train was bad, but it was a palace to this. The weather is bad, a drizzling rain has been falling all day. They say we are to move in the morning. We will have to hope for the best.

June 25, Monday, 8.30 p.m.—We are off, much to the satisfaction of all on board. We have been on board since Saturday morning and we were all anxious ot get started. We are escorted by a cruiser and the Grampbian is following us. We are in better spirits to-night, as we are getting our sleeping quarters changed. That was the only kick we had and after a big fight they are changing us. I think the rest of the trip will be enjoyable. The health of all the Peterborough boys is O.K. I'll have to quit for now; will write more to-morrow. I have to go on guard at 4 a.m. to-morrow morning and I want some sleep.

June 26, Tuesday. 10 p.m.—No submarine yet, thank goodness. We are now about three hundred miles from land and travelling about 12 knots an hour. The weather has been ideal and no sickness reported yet. We have to wear our life-belts all the time.

We have moved into state-room to-night, and we have just had a big supper.

The Cobourg Battery and the Ottawa Battery were detailed off for GUNNER D. J. McLEOD, 257 Lake street, who went overseas with one of the recent drafts from the Cobourg Heavy Battery.

all guards on water-tight doors. We are on four hours and off eight hours. It's kind of tedious, but I would rather do the guard work, and have these staterooms than not do it and have to stay in the dirty hole they had us in.

Everything is jake so far. It will be better from now on.

June 27, Wednesday, 6.00 p.m. — We are still on top and everything is O.K. The weather is still calm and so far I haven't felt the slightest seasickness. As there is nothing else to report I'll quit for now.

June 28, 1917, Thursday, 4.00 p.m. —Another day is passed and everything is jake. We are about a thousand miles out, and the old boat is rocking in great style. I guess by to-morrow some of us will be having six meals, three down and three up. As I have a little leisure time I will try and give you an idea how we spend our time on board. Reveille is sounded at 6 a.m., when we all have to roll out. Breakfast is served at 7.15 a.m. We are then off until 10.00 a.m., when assembly is sounded. When that is sounded we all have to fall in our parade quarters. This lasts until about 11.30 a.m., when dinner is served. We are off then until 2 p.m., when we again have to fall in. At 4 p.m. we are dismissed. At 5.30 p.m. supper is served. Every man must be off deck at 9 p.m., and lights out sounds at 10 p.m. You will readily see we haven't much to do, but the Cobourg Battery will have a different song to sing when we enter the danger zone, as we have to guard all life boats and companion ways. If anything happens we are the last men to leave the boat, so if we are torpedoed I think I'll dive to the bottom, grab a rock and stay there. We were recommended for this duty by the O. C. of the train we travelled on to Halifax. He said our conduct was such that he could recommend us for anything. I think it speaks well for the boys.

The sports the men indulge in are almost laughable—anything to pass away the time. The most important one is boxing. There is a big bout on to-night for prizes. None of our lads are in it, as our vaccinations are just taking and our wings are pretty sore.

Since I started to write this the "general alarm" sounded. I had to leave my bunk, which is in the stern of the boat; grab my life-belt, make my way up three decks to our guard room, get my rifle and go forward to the bridge. I have the farthest post to guard of any on duty so you can see I have to jump some.

This life is just to my liking. Everything is rough, but what's the odds. It was fierce the first two days on board, but since we had our quarters changed you wouldn't wish for better. We are sleeping on spring beds and feather ticks and the grub is pretty fair.

June 29, Friday, 8.00 p.m.—Another evening has rolled around, and we are still in the middle of the deep. If we never get any worse than this I wouldn't mind sailing another two weeks. The weather has been bad to-day, rain and fog.

We were inspected by the O. C. of the boat to-day. He complimented us on our appearance, and he also told us he was proud of us for having come forward to do this important duty. One expression he used was: "You will be the last men to leave the boat, but there will be a few rafts floating around which you will be able to grab. Gee, you talk about Jobe's comforter, but can you get over that? If a torpedo ever strikes this old tub, so long, me for the bottom. I hardly think we will ever be troubled for they are taking every precaution.

June 30, 1917, Saturday, 7.30 p.m. —One day more has gone and we are still jogging along. We enter the danger zone about Monday morning, and then good-bye to these staterooms, as we have to sleep on the floor of our guard-room while in the zone. We have to do this so as to be near our posts in case of mishap.

Everything is fine; in fact, this has been the best trip I've ever had, except the first three days. It was fierce what we had to put up with, but since they changed as it has been grand.

Sunday, July 1st, 1917, 8.00 p.m.—Another Sunday has gone and we are still on board this old boat. The weather is ideal. There wasn't much doing on board to-day, so I will close for now. We expect to sight land to-morrow.

July 2nd, Monday, 8.00 p.m. —It was just a week ago to-night since we left Halifax, and we are still a day's sail from land. We entered the danger zone this morning, but up till the present nothing unusual has taken place.

This evening, about 7.30 p.m. five specks were sighted on the horizon, and inside of fifteen minutes five torpedo boat destroyers were skimming around us. You talk about travelling; it takes them for speed. I have been talking to men who have crossed the pond several times and they have told me this is the calmest trip they ever had. The weather has been, on the whole, ideal, and I have seen Lake Ontario rougher than the ocean has been since we started. There are seven of us in this stateroom and not one of us have "cast our bread upon the waters" yet.

I suppose there was a big time on in Peterborough to-day. But there is no use of worrying; there is much work for us to do, or we would have been home enjoying ourselves, too.

Tuesday, July 3, 1917, 7.00 p.m.—Our trip is just about over. We disembark to-morrow morning. With the exception of the first three days I've enjoyed this trip thoroughly.

To-morrow I'm starting on a life which is entirely new to me, but whatever comes I'm going through it with as good a heart as possible. I may meet with a few bumps but I enlisted to do my best and now I'm prepared to meet any fate.

I will have to close this letter now as I won't have time to-morrow. Excuse this writing as I have had to write in all manner of positions.

Remember me to all that enquire, and I'll remain.

Yours till Niagara,
Jas. McLeod.

When Your Colour Fades

When a girl—or a woman—finds her color fading, when her cheeks and lips grow pale, and she gets short of breath easily and her heart palpitates after slight exertion, or under the least excitement, it means that she is suffering from anaemia—thin, watery blood. Headache and backache frequently accompany this condition, and nervousness is often present.

The remedy for this condition is to build up the blood, and for this purpose there is no medicine can equal Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. They build up and renew the blood, bring brightness to the eyes, color to the cheeks, and a general feeling of renewed health and energy. The only other treatment needed is plenty of sunshine, moderate exercise and good, plain food. The girl or woman who gives this treatment a fair trial will soon find herself enjoying perfect health.

You can get Dr. Williams' Pink Pills from any dealer in medicine, or by mail post paid at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Woman's Arrest May Put An End to the Intrigue.

PETROGRAD July 20.— Acting on instructions from the Military Governor of Petrograd, the military authorities of Pavlovsk have arrested Madame Soumerson, alleged to be in close relations with a Maximalist named Fuerstenberg, a resident of Stockholm. The War Minister has been informed that Fuerstenberg, through Madame Soumerson, established communication between Petrograd and Germany.

The villa of Mademoiselle Kshesinska, long the headquarters of the Maximalists, who defied the authorities to dislodge them, capitulated after a slight brush yesterday morning. The occupants took refuge in the nearest Peter and Paul fortress. When the fortress was later surrounded by troops the Maximalists ran up a white flag and surrendered.

W. J. Oke Expects Only a 25 Per Cent. Crop From His 18 Acre Potato Patch

Has Used Bordeaux Mixture But Blight Struck the Unprotected Vines—Humid Weather and Lack of Winds Cause of Its Rapid Spread.

Mr. Walter J. Oke estimates that his crop of potatoes in North Monaghan will be only twenty-five per cent. of the quantity he had expected. This depreciation, he states, will be due to the blight which is sweeping through the potato fields threatening one of the finest crops in years.

The outlook is serious according to Mr. Oke's experience. He has used Bordeaux mixture for weeks past on his eighteen-acre patch. A week ago Thursday, market gardeners who saw the crop predicted that it would be a big one, but the blight has appeared and spread rapidly in the meantime. The leaves were protected on the upper side by the Bordeaux mixture, but underneath, where the spray had not reached them, the blight got a foothold. The warm and humid weather, with intermittent rain increasing the moisture, and the lack of wind to dry the air, is Mr. Oke's explanation of the rapid and widespread appearance of the blight.

Buyers in New Brunswick.

Although the wholesale price of potatoes has shrunk considerably in the United States market, the prevailing prices are the basis of an opinion that there will be no cheap potatoes this year.

A circular letter from Onley, Virginia says, The southern half of the Peninsula is 3-4 done, and the northern half one-quarter dug. One fourth of the Northern Peninsula is about half sold, having been contracted for some time ago by large dealers at $4.00 a barrel, and in some few instances at $3.50. The deuction is that there will be no real cheap potatoes this year. The Ontario crop is very late. Dealers in Northern United States are now depending on this Peninsula section largely. The tendency will be, when prices go to rock bottom this week, to buy heavily, after which a quick advance may govern the price of the balance of the crop."

This report refers to United States' crops. Mr. C. Fred Fawcett, a large potato dealer at Upper Sackville, New Brunswick, states that United States' buyers are already offering $3 a barrel for the eastern crop. They are apparently making an early inroad on the Canadian market to cover the orders for Cuba's seed requirements. Mr. Oke states that Cuban planters purchase new seed every year, and they have found the New Brunswick potato highly satisfactory. In consequence, that province supplies about ninety per cent of the Cuban seed.

Mr. Oke stated that he thought this might be a matter for the food controller to consider.

Amateur Gardeners Skeptical.

The average home gardener surveys a small patch of potatoes in his back garden that has surpassed in luxuriant foliage his brightest hopes, and as an amateur he is skeptical of the recent reports. Blight and Bordeaux are scarcely more than terms to him. On the other hand there are quite a number of citizens who have reported what they assume to be blight, and there is no longer any doubt that it has developed more rapidly than would have been believed possible a short week ago.

PROPOSED RAILWAY TO MINDEN SURVEYORS ARE PROSPECTING ROUTE

Minden Echo—No one seems to know what developments may take place re the Minden Railway, for, after taking a look over the ground and learning of the distances between points, the engineer with his surveyers are prospecting a route from the I.B. & O. Ry. Junction, in order that comparative cost of construction with that of building from Coboconk may be arrived at. It would therefore appear that if the road is to be built from Lindsay, via Fenelon Falls, those interested there may have to get busy and bring pressure to bear upon the Hydro-Electric Power Commission, showing the advantages of such a route, which would certainly suit Minden people very nicely, as it would place us in touch with the C.P.R. at Lindsay and the G.T.R. at both Fenelon Falls and Coboconk.

The fact remains, however, that a road can easily be built from the Junction near Kinmount, the distance being only about ten miles; while from Coboconk some twenty-three miles of road would have to be constructed, which would have to be added to by some twenty-three miles more to reach Lindsay. The cost in that case would probably exceed four times the cost of building from near Kinmount. Would the additional advantages justify the outlay?

If all the branch railways were run by electricity which is among the possibilities, owing to the cost of fuel, the Kinmount Junction route would be quite as good as the other, and, under the present system, would place us in touch with the G. T. R. at its Junction with the I.B. & O. affording us an opportunity of having loaded cars moved in or out, which would certainly be a great advantage over the present system of teaming everything over the hills to Gelert.

Ample power awaits development at Minden Mills and in any event, electric light for the village, and connection with the long distance telephone system are among the possibilities should an electric road be built over either of the proposed routes.

As it appears at present the whole matter will depend upon the report of the engineers and the support received from the municipalities interested.

The scheme is not a political dodge while it receives the support of the representatives of this riding for both the Legislature and the House of Commons, but is due to the efforts of our own people who have moved in the matter with the hope of improving the conditions in a large section of the country served from this point.

WILL RE-HOIST CENTRAL SPAN.

MONTREAL, July 20.—The anniversary of the disastrous attempt of last year, September 11, may be the time chosen for trying a new to hoist into position the huge central span of the big Quebec bridge. The new span is well under way at Sillery, being now about one-third completed, and it is expected that it will be finished in September. No change has been made.

furnace of war, and to summon all her remaining power for the crucial phase of the world struggle. The first and paramount duty of Parliament is to put the measure on the statute book. The Act must be enforced without fear or favour. It should have the support of every Canadian, Liberal or Conservative, whose mind can rise above party or sectional or selfish consideration to the height of the great argument between freedom and despotism, between civilization and barbarism. The laurels won by the valor of her children on the battlefield must not be snatched from the brow of Canada by her own hand on the very eve of victory.

Waste 62 Shots On "U-Boat" That Was A Gas Buoy

AN ATLANTIC PORT, July 20.—Three large passenger steamships arrived here from England two of them bringing stories of escapes from submarines and other thrilling episodes.

One of the steamships under the American flag reported that she barely escaped a tropedo the second day out from a British port. Colonel A. C. Graeme Harrison, of the old Harrison family of Virginia and now in the Fourth Dragoon Guards, one of the passengers, said that the tropedo passed less than thirty yards astern of the vessel.

"Although we could not see the submarine," said Colonel Harrison, "we knew there was one in our vicinity because we could plainly see the wake of the torpedo. I heard afterwards that the officers on the bridge had seen the U-boat through their glasses."

Scarcely had the steamship gone clear of this peril—a piece of good luck which was due principally to the great speed of the vessel—than what appeared to be the periscope of a U-boat loomed up about a mile away.

That the officers of the steamship did not care to take any chances was made manifest an instant afterward; for the vessel began pivoting around, to give every one of her five guns a whack at the menacing looking object. The passengers were told to go below, to be out of the way both of any enemy shells that might strike and so not hamper the gunners.

Sixty-two shots were fired. All but the last were close, missing the object by inches. The sixty-second shot landed square in the "conning tower," which went to pieces and then disclosed for the first time that it was nothing more dangerous than a gas buoy. It had probably broken away from its moorings in British waters and drifted out to sea.

The other steamship which had a submarine scare was under the British flag. She was nearly two weeks in making the voyage, owing to detentions by order of the Admiralty, which advised her captain of the presence of U-boats in wait for her.

W. Tod Martin, who had gone to England for war films for use in Australia, was returning on board the steamship, and said that when the vessel was finally allowed to go she was convoyed by a British destroyer.

"The day after we left the final port of our detention," said Mr. Martin, "the destroyer suddenly made a dash away from us toward an object which was invisible, at least to us passengers. When the destroyer had reached a point about six miles to the north of us she began firing." She ceased firing as suddenly as she had begun and returned to resume the convoying of the passenger vessel.

The crew of the British steamship Cranmore, which was torpedoed last month, but escaped destruction by the aid of a destroyer, were aboard the British liner arriving here. Not only did the destroyer chase away the U-boat but it enabled the badly damaged Cranmore to reach port, where she went into drydock with five plates smashed by the explosion.

HAD COUNTERFEIT COINS HID IN HER STOCKING

NEW YORK, July 21.—Fannie Schwartzbech has a dainty ankle. Assistant U. S. District Attorney Edwin M. Stanton looked at it, observed a suspicious bulge, and then the girl had to remove 22 counterfeit quarters from her hose. She was held for the grand jury on $5,000 bail, having been caught in a raid on an alleged counterfeiting den.

SERGT. CHARLES THORPE WINS TWO MORE RACES

WHITLEY CAMP, Surrey, Eng., July 4.—(Special by Mail to The Examiner.) — Sergt. Charlie Thorpe, of Peterborough, and a member of the 52nd Canadian Battery, is still adding to his collection of trophies as a result of his speed on the running path. If the 52nd Battery isn't soon moved to France Sergeant Thorpe will have to charter a special boat to bring his prizes home. On Dominion Day at the All-Canadian Athletic Meeting held at Seaford, Sussex, the Peterborough flyer won both the mile and three-mile races, the time for the mile being 4 minutes 42 seconds, and for the three miles 16 minutes 18 seconds. Sergeant Thorpe received two silver cups for these events.

NATIONALIZATION OF RAILWAYS HAS BEEN ABANDONED

Special to The Examiner:

OTTAWA, July 15— The abandonment of nationalization and alternative schemes in the Smith Drayton-Acworth report is announced by the Government. The Canadian Northern and Grand Trunk Pacific are to get further aid of twenty-five to twenty-seven millions, but it will be a hand-out of ordinary kind. The management will not be changed. The Government will exercise financial control over expenditures. The reason assigned for this course is that the country cannot stand the financial burden of nationalization in war time, and these conditions are such as to necessitate relief of a temporary character only.

Murray Street Baptist Sunday School Picnic

Annual Excursion Was Accounted For Yesterday Afternoon—The Sports Programme

Murray Street Baptist Sunday School annual excursion and picnic was held yesterday at Bewdley, and was attended by a large company of scholars, parents and friends. A most delightful trip by the steamer Stony Lake landed the picnickers shortly before one o'clock, when all immediately proceeded to the shadiest spot in the vicinity to fit themselves for the strenuous programme of sports provided by the committee.

While there were no outstanding incidents in connection with the trip ideal weather, careful provision for the comfort of everybody, a genuine interest in the programme and the happy faces of the boys and girls made a most enjoyable time for all, and one that shall be remembered by old and young whose privilege it was to take in the trip.

HARVEST HORSES FULL OF OLD PEPPER—FOUR RUNAWAYS REPORTED

Four or five runaways have been reported from the farms of the Peterborough district since the harvest work commenced this week, and fortunately most of them were without serious consequences. Apparently the machine known as a hay tedder and the noise of its forks in operation is a rattle to which the horses are not accustomed. A team on the farm of Harold Monorief, South Monaghan, is listed among those that became peeved at the "tedder" or some other annoyance and scampered across the field with the apparatus, leaped a fence and otherwise squandered the energy they should have conserved for the greater production campaign. No serious damage was reported.

Park Street South Almost Impossible o Many Cyclists

There may be worse roads than the section of Park street between the C. P.R. and G.T.R., or rather Perry and Parnell streets, but they are in the war zone, particularly on the eastern front. And this is one of the busiest streets in the city. The workmen from the De Laval and C. G. E. Company plants pass over this street four times daily. This of course refers to the men who wheel to work. The street is simply impossible and has been in even worse condition since the trunk sewer was completed. The present condition is mentioned in the hope that restoration to the former passibility two years ago may be accelerated beyond the present rate. If Ald. Weir, chairman of the Board of Works, ran his car over Park street once or twice he wouldn't hesitate to order the immediate rebuilding of the roadway. It should be remembered that men are cycling over these ruts four times a day, and that this is the leading avenue to two of Peterborough's largest factories.

FIRE FIGHTERS WENT RIGHT THROUGH THEM

Paid No Attention to Anti-Conscription Crowd That Tried to Block Their Way

MONTREAL, July 21.—Anti-conscription feeling has no effect on the fire fighters of Montreal when on their way to a fire. They proved that to a large crowd which was hearing the eloquence of Tancrede Marsil at the corner of Beaubien and St. Hubert street. Both streets were completely blocked by people when, during one of the fiery outbursts of speech, the sound of the reels was heard and a hose waggon coming from the east dashed through the lane, that was hastily made for them, without slackening in speed. The lane was filled up again, the speaker was thundering denunciation once more when the sounds betokened another detachment of the brigade.

"Don't Let them Pass."

"Don't let them pas, don't let them pass," was the cry, and no effort was made to open up. The apparatus came on. It was one of the large sized steamer engines with four fast horses, and they were in a particular hurry. The crowd's first opinion on the advisability of making way, quickly changed as the apparatus reached them, and a lane was made in such quick time as would have done credit to veteran soldiers at a manoeuvre.

MISTAKE IN CABLE

NEW YORK, July 21. — The New York Times says Grasty's cable, stating that German subs were sinking 1,000,000 tons a month, should have read 600,000 tons.

Temperature For This Afternoon Was 85 Degrees

A Year Ago To-day It Was Ninety Degrees—Comparative Figures

This afternoon the thermometer was up to 85 degrees in the shade. This is three degrees higher than any previous figure this year. Some very warm weather was experienced around this date last year. A year ago to-day we had it 90 degrees; on the 22nd, 93; 23rd, 93; 24th, 93; 25th, 95. On July 30, it was up to 96. The record last summer was on August 20th and 21st, 99 degrees in the shade both days. This summer up to the present time has been exceptionally free from warm spells.—W.P.

Voice of The People

Editor Examiner:

I was pleased to see under the heading last night a letter against a section of our business men. They depend on the public for their support and no conscientious person will throw down his barber or any other tradesman, because he tries to take a little of the enjoyable side of life for himself and his family—one half day per week during the hot spell. I always thought we had a bright and intelligent class of men in this business and eventually they will realize the benefit to be derived from this short vacation, and put their united efforts to help us in making the half-holiday a complete success.

A TRADESMAN.

CLIPPED A PACIFIST'S BEARD

Roman Enthusiast for War thus Punished a Socialist Deputy.

ROME, July 19.—Enthusiasm for the war runs high here nowadays, as is proved by the aggression recently suffered by the Socialist-Neutralist Deputy Decto Frabisio Maffi, who was celebrated for the magnificence of his beard. Armando Tirletti, a Roman carpenter who was indignant at the anti-war speeches of Maffi in the Chamber, followed the Deputy into a street car and seized his splendid beard and cut it off as a punishment for his attitude of neutrality.

The amateur barber was arrested after an exciting chase, and the beard was found in his pocket.

"I am perfectly aware," he said, cheerfully, "that I must go to prison. But a few days of lying on straw in a cell are well worth while for the pleasure I have had, as an ardent interventionist, in punishing a dangerous neutralist."

The Navy's Brand of Efficiency

covers everything afloat, from manoeuvring battle-cruisers, training great guns, and spotting "subs" to keeping brass-work "bright", decks spotless and faces clean-shaven. The naval life, with its training and traditions, develops men who are never satisfied with equipment that "will do", but only with that which will do best.

In this atmosphere the Gillette Safety Razor most emphatically "makes good". Always keen—always ready for instant action—swift and workmanlike—the Gillette commands the respect of the most exacting naval man, and the affection which every real man feels for a good tool.

The man ashore who shares the clean-cut efficiency of the Navy is equally enthusiastic over the Gillette Safety Razor—or will be the morning he tries it first. He will realize then what comfort and genuine satisfaction a man can get out of a three-minute Gillette shave!

These are days when no man should waste unnecessary time or money over shaving, particularly when so quick, so clean and so smooth a shave waits at home for every owner of a Gillette. If you are not already one of them, join their ranks to-day!

Changes In The Market Situation

Cooked Meats Are Quoted Higher —Butter Easier in Price

The following comment on the market situation as regards food stuffs appeared in the Canadian Grocer this week:—

Two important lines in which advances have been recorded during the week are salt and baking powder. Certain lines of soaps have also been increased in price to the retail trade. Cornflakes have been advanced from the lower quotations and there are indications that higher prices may come quite generaly. Corn is now a scarce article, as millers who have been endeavouring to buy in the United States for the manufacture of cornmeal and other produrts find there is none for sale at present. They state if there are still supplies in the United States they are being held out of the market. One milling concern is out of the market entirely on yellow cornmeal for the reason that corn has not been available. Prices on corn products, such as corn flour and hominy have been moved to higher levels in conformity with the situation in corn. Rolled oats are in firm market, due to the scarcity of the grain for milling purposes.

Cooked Meats Higher.

Cooked meats are quoted higher now that the summer demand has set in heavier. There has been a good demand for barrel pork by the lumber companies of the Maritime Provinces, as they are getting read for operations in the woods next winter. One large Ontario lumber company has also been in the market for this class of meat. Lard and compound are in easier tone, due to the light demand during the summer months. There is a desire to stir up business and prices are shaded when any business looms up as a possibility. Butter is in easier tone, although prices have not receded. Eggs are higher in price, due to lighter receipts.

Flour held in steady market with a better demand developing. Sugar refiners were still in a divided market, some holding at the advance recorded last week, while one refiner continued to quote at previous prices. Consumption of sugar has not yet started to be heavy. Cloves have been advanced quite generally. Cheaper stocks of coriander seed are on the way and if the ships are not intercepted by submarines lower prices can be expected in this commodity. Some of the first raspberries of the season reached the market during the week. Strawberries are dearer, as the zenith of production is thought to have passed. Business in grocery lines continued quiet.

FARMER INJURED.

Run Over by a Hay Tedder on Farm Near Lakehurst.

W. J. Northey, of Harvey, living near Lakehurst, was run over by a hay "tedder" on his farm on Tuesday. One wheel passed over his leg, bruising and wrenching it, but he is able to continue his work to-day.

Supplying Help For The Farmers

Motor Car Owners Who Are Willing to Assist Are Asked to Communicate With Mr. Joseph Wearing

At a meeting of the local branch of the Organization of Resources Committee arrangements were made for helping to supply labour to the farmers in this vicinity for the haying and harvest. The bureau established at the office of Mr. G. A. Gillespie, M.P.P., has been most satisfactory. Men and boys throughout the summer have been supplied to farmers in different parts of the county and it has become generally known that farmers needing help and men and boys desiring to go out on farms can get together by leaving their names at Mr. Gillespie's office. It was decided to continue this work and have this bureau become a permanent factor in supplying help to the farm. No charge is made and Mr. Gillespie has thrown his office open for this work.

Arrangements were also made to have automobiles take loads out on the Thursday and Saturday half-holidays and distribute men along the farms where crops were being taken in. Already a number of men have expressed their willingness to give their services free in this way on the half-holiday each week. Those willing to supply autos for one or more half days are asked to send in their names to the Secretary, Mr. Joseph Wearing, 408 Water street. Crops are excellent but it is impossible for the farmers to harvest them without the patriotic co-operation of men from the city.

A Teuton Riot At Transcona

Germans and Austrians Try to Hold Up Work on Government Elevator

WINNIPEG, JULY 20.—Determined that the huge Dominion Government elevator at Transcona shall not be completed in time to hold this year's crop, one hundred Austrians and Germans surrounded the works and threatened the Canadians working there. The aliens became so violent that the military were called out and a fight ensued, in which officers had to threaten to use their weapons. Twenty-three Austrians were handcuffed and brought into Winnipeg and turned over to the military tribunal.

The foreigners took to the brushwood, and had to be hunted down by the soldiers and constables. Many disturbances of this kind have been noted of late, and while there is on evidence of concerted action or German military intrigue, the conduct of these aliens has caused more or less trouble. They refuse to work unless at increased prices, and try to prevent others working.

The condition in the agricultural districts is equally unsatisfactory, as the Teutonic farmers can get all the help from their racial friends, who are not so particular whether British farmers get their farms worked or not. This is the crux of the labour situation in this section of the prairies at present, and the authorities are determined to stop it.

Surgery's Aid In Present War

Professor Rosstovitzeff, a Russian surgeon, has contributed an article to the Vratch on the influence of surgery on the outcome of the present war. He was assisted in its preparation by Professor Kolossoff, a mathematician, and their conclusions are based on statistics. They say that surgery can save nearly 44 per cent. of those injured in a given campaign. This summary of the paper appears in the current issue of The Medical Record:

The Value of Surgery.

"The value of surgeons in war has always been recognised as equivalent to that of a certain number of fighting men, but few have taken the trouble to demonstrate the exact value of surgical organization and mobilisation. It is, of course, understood that the entire problem of transportation of the wounded is a medical one, largely void of sentiment, and based essentially on restoring the greatest number of men to the ranks, and to a state of efficiency when peace returns. The figures dealt with in this paper are devoted entirely to casualties in battle. Sickness and disability from other causes are not enumerated. Moreover, prisoners and missing are not represented in the calculation.

Five Per Cent. Killed.

"The total losses comprise three classes —the dead, severely wounded, and slightly wounded. These may be said to average somewhat as follows: dead, 5 per cent.; severely wounded, 5 per cent., and slightly wounded, 15 per cent. for each pitched battle, the total casualties being estimated at 25 per cent. of effectives. It is assumed that all the effectives participate in the battle sooner or later, or, in other words, reserves not engaged in battle are supposed to be non-existent.

Can Save Almost Half.

"In figures, it is reckoned that surgery can save almost 44 per cent. of the number injured in the campaign. In other words, should 300,000 men be injured in such warfare, surgery would save the makings of a reserve army of 130,000. This amount of human salvage, huge as it is, probably falls short of the coloured reports of casualties given out to the press, in which the vast majority are listed as 'slightly wounded,' with the corollary that 75 per cent. of these will soon return to the ranks.'

Sanitation Essential.

"Sanitation is an essential part of medical organization, for it is assumed in all such calculations that the troops are to be kept in good physical condition, and that the hospitalization in the full sense of the term will ward off all agencies which could interfere with convalence from wounds. The term 'surgery' should read 'surgery and its auxiliaries,' when we speak of its power to revolutionize the results of warfare. The stretcher-bearer and ambulance driver play a major role at the front in these activities, just as do those of various other vocations in the rear, and the term surgery alone conveys too much the idea that the salvage is the result exclusively of wound treatment."

LATE WAR DESPATCHES

Special to The Examiner:

BERLIN (Official), July 21.—Germans have crossed the Zlochoff-Tarnopol Road on a front of forty kilometres finding burning villages and destructions in their path.

PETROGRAD, July 21.—Because Russians troops in the Tarnopol sector were not showing necessary stability and elsewhere were not fulfilling commands of their officers, they retired under a German offensive attack, the War Office announced to-day.

LONDON, July 21. — The Evening News to-day printed a Rome despatch stating that the German Kaiser was "seriously depressed and that his physicians had recommended he take the Homburg cure."

EVERYDAY READING

In a late issue of the Daily Examiner I noticed the question being asked, "Would it be safe or not, and why, for a true man to put absolute reliance in the Holy Spirit, to be taught by Him all things."

A true man, we will take for granted, is a man who has accepted Jesus as Saviour and Lord. There are a few people who would answer the question in the affirmative, without any hesitation. Doubtless there are many who do not believe that the Holy Spirit is a safe guide. There are others no doubt who are in a quandary in regard to the question. There are others, possibly, like the people at Ephesus in Paul's time, who have not heard so much as there is a Holy Spirit. And others are careless about solving the question. Personally I say the Holy Spirit gives us absolute guidance, and therefore it is perfectly safe to trust Him to teach us in all things. God in His providence and love has given us the Scripture, and Jesus said they testified of Him, but can the reading and study of the Scriptures (apart from the Holy Spirit) give us guidance? I emphatically say NO. Many to their sorrow and confusion have found this out. How varied the beliefs of individuals and organisations, and yet all claim Scriptural authority. Conscience is a God given facility that decides on the right or wrong of our actions, gives us no sure guidance, as it has to depend on our beliefs. Reason is a faculty of the mind, that judges and distinguishes. I ask the reader, can reason, coupled with common sense, give us guidance in their limited capacity. The answer comes back, NO. If all these mentioned cannot give guidance, what or who can? The answer is plain. God, the Holy Spirit, can. Jesus said the Holy Spirit bore witness of Him, and He also said the Holy Spirit would guide us into all truth. Jesus is the way, the truth and the life, and the Holy Spirit reveals this to us. Being taught or led by the Holy Spirit is synonymous to being taught or led by Jesus.

FARMERS ARE ASKED TO MAKE NEEDS KNOWN

GAULT, July 22.—An organized effort is to be made here to get the farmers of the community to send in their requirements for additional help to the office of J. S. Knapp, district representative. It is felt that no definite appeal can be made to employers until the actual necessity is known and the action being taken is on the recommendation of Prof. T. L. Walker, representing the organization of Resources Committee, Toronto. The South Waterloo Agricultural Society and the Board of Trade are co-operating in the movement.

Cooked vegetables may be curried, and it will be found a delicious way of using up small left-overs.

BAVARIA BARS GATES TO PRUSSIAN GUESTS

Limits Summer Travel to Invalids Whose Health Demands the "Cures"—Farmers Refuse to Sell Butter, Reducing It to Soap, Which Commands Fancy Prices.

HOLD BACK FOOD SUPPLIES

While the German people, according to a special cablegram from Berlin, is expected to worry along without breaking down from lack of food until the new harvest furnishes supplies that will enable the Government to increase the rations for a few months at least, there is plenty of evidence found in German newspapers recently reaching New York and London to show that living conditions in the empire during the Spring and early Summer were probably the worst since the beginning of the world war.

Tourists and Summer boarders from Prussia and other parts of North Germany, who spent considerable time and money in the South German resorts last season for the purpose of recreation and recuperation, and who incidentally aroused a great deal of opposition on the part of the natives because of their enormous consumption of food supplies needed by the South Germans themselves, are finding life harder than ever this season. Early in the year Bavaria decided to exclude all tourist traffic from neighbouring States during April, May, and June, except when the visitors carried their rations with them, and asked Baden and Wurttemberg to do likewise. This action aroused such a storm of indignation in the Prussian press that the authorities of Prussia got in touch with those of the South German States, and an arrangement was effected whereby travel was to be limited as far as possible to invalids who absolutely required "cure" sojourns in South Germany. Such food as South Germans supply to these was to be "reimbursed."

Except in the most urgent cases visitors were to be limited to local rations, while they might also remain for only a specified period. Intending emigrants from Prussia were to make their arrangements at once in order that the authorities might know in advance what special arrangements were required.

It is announced that railway travelling in Germany this Summer is to be discouraged except in the case of persons who must travel for their health.

Before the agreement was made the Vossische Zeitung put the problem up to Adolf von Batocki, the "Food Dictator," in the following words:

"When Batocki was appointed Food Controller we heard a lot about the 'organizing genius' who had been brought from the East Prussian bureaucracy to deal with our food problem. South Germany now provides him with an excellent field to show what he can do. Something must be done to permit those in urgent need of physical rehabilitation to visit these health-giving resorts in the south as of old. We await deeds from Batocki."

SHORT RATIONS FOR SANITARIUMS.

According to Swiss newspapers, food is extremely scarce even in the sanitariums of South Germany. They print an interview with an aged German who recently left an institution for nervous patients reduced to a physical wreck through the diet of beets and turnips upon which he had been compelled to exist for months. The old man wept for joy when he found himself where he was able to obtain a regular meal.

Despite all the talk of wholesale confiscation by the Central Government of food supplies in case the farmers and peasants failed to release their surplus products for the use of the city folk at the established maximum prices, there appears to be a feeling among the rural population that it is better to take chances with the officials and hold fast to the foodstuffs than to hand over almost everything and run the risk of going hungry themselves before the new crops are in. The press continually hammers away at the egotism and profit-lust of the agrarians, but without making any great impression upon the country people.

In East Prussia some of the local officials have summoned the peasants within their jurisdiction to meetings in the churches and obtained their signatures to pledges obligating them to do their best in the line of turning over the foodstuffs they produce. A document thus signed in church, at the instance of the Landrat of Stulluponen, in East Prussia, runs:

"Our fronts in east and west stand firm. Our navy, and in particular our submarine fleet, does its duty and will go on doing it. Our battle at home against the hunger which our enemies have sent into the country has reached its climax. Our holding out in the next five decisive months depends upon the adequate delivery of all foodstuffs by the farmers, and upon the conscientious observation of all rules by the consumers. We know that if food is delivered in insufficient quantities our beloved Fatherland will become subject to our enemies and so go to its ruin. In full recognition of the gravity of this peril we here in the church give our hands to our Landrat as a pledge that we will help him to the best of our ability and with all our strength in carrying out all economic regulations."

The document then recites special forms of wickedness, such as giving grain to cattle or selling butter secretly. The Kalnische Zeitung expresses its hope that the results of this movement will soon be seen in an adequate supply of food to the large towns.

FARMERS WITHHOLDING SUPPLIES.

Thee Munchner Neueste Nachrichten recently published some figures showing the extent of the holding back of foodstuffs in different sections of the empire. In the Thorn district during December the owners of 61,700 hens offered for sale only 2,814 eggs. A South German veterinarian reported that many farmers having as many as eighteen head of cows did not furnish a single quart of milk or a pound of butter for sale, although the cows were not dry. The calves were being fattened on the best of milk, and the hogs got plenty of grain and rich milk. In the Oppeln district from 45,402 head of cattle only 850 pounds of butter were delivered per week.

The mystery of where the butter goes in many rural districts was recently solved by some officials of the Food Bureau, who discovered farmers reducing it to soap, for which they got from $1 to $1.25 a pound, whereas the maximum price for butter was 60 cents.

GEESE AT $24 EACH.

In normal times the Mecklenburg Duchies supply Germany with a large quantity of geese. Complaint is rift that the Junkers, who control farm produce of all sorts in the Machlenburgs are demanding unprecedentedly usurious prices not only for geese but also for goslings. The latter sold at 60 cents in pre-war days. Now they easily command $7 apiece. The farmers plead in self-defense that consumers and dealers in the towns and cities will pay anything for geese, so that they are merely taking advantage of the market. Last Autumn fat Mecklenburg geese fetched $36 each.

Discontent and complaint over food inequalities have become so bitter in Berlin that the Prussian Food Commissioner, Dr. Michaelis, announces a new scheme of regulation. This consists of greater centralization for the area comprising Greater Berlin. One office will henceforth exercise complete control of food supplies in the seven district boroughs comprising the metropolitan area, an advisory board of eight or ten members acting in conjunction with the Food Commissioner. This body will supervise autocratically the foodstuffs allotted to each borough. It hopes to do away with the "grave discrepancies in the allowances" a head which exist as between different sections of Greater Berlin.

In a semi-official statement printed in the Berlin papers of May 18 the residents of the German capital are called upon to cheer up and forget their troubles. They are told that Germany is full of spies, "especially in English pay," and that the behaviour of Berlin is taken as symptomatic for the whole empire. It is suggested that, when a foreign observer sees long lines in the Berlin streets, he does not wait to discover that the people are waiting to buy "biscuits or sweets," but reports that they are starving. Thus the enemy is encouraged and the war is prolonged. The people of Berlin are advised of their special responsibilty as the inhabitants of the capital of the empire. The article concludes:

"At a time when it is really important to show foreign countries the real temper of Germany and the upright sentiment for unshakable holding out which has been brilliantly proved in difficult circumstances, at a time when the last battles must see a generation worthy of the great victory, let people keep guard on their tongues and their pens and see that they do not exaggerate the burdens of the war. Let them gratefully recognize how much better the state of things is among us than in the enemy countries trampled down my war, or in the British Isles, which are moving toward real starvation. The capital of the German Empire, which is victorious in the world war, has special duties of behavior which must not be forgotten."

U. S. Senate Fixes Wheat Price And Also Coal At Pit Mouth

Empowers President to Take Control of All Coal and Purchases Any Quantity of Wheat Needed—Minimum Wheat Price to Be $2.00 a Bushel

WASHINGTON, July 22.—A minimum price of $2 a bushel for wheat highest grade, was fixed by the Senate Saturday when it approved without roll call an amendment to the food bill offered by Senator Chamberlain, fixing this arbitrary price.

By a vote of 73 to 12 the Senate then adopted the Pomerene-Cummins amendment, empowering the President to take control of all coal in the United States at the mouth of the mines and to give the Federal Trade Commission authority to fix prices on it in every commercial transaction from the producer to the consumer.

The wheat amendment was passed principally as a concession to farmers since control over cotton, steel, and many other interests has been eliminated.

Chamberlain's amendment gives the President power to fix prices—but at not less than $2 a bushel for No. 1 Northern wheat or its equivalents. It gives him power, also, to assess duties on wheat in order to keep the price up to the $2 minimum and to purchase any quantity of wheat he deems necessary for the public good.

He may sell it to any citizen of the United States or to any Government allied in the war, and may hold or transport it in his discretion.

The anti-hoarding amendment was adopted. It punishes by imprisonment for from six months to three years a person in trade who hoards food to limit production or boost prices. Farmers and gardeners are not included.

An amendment providing that the Food bill shall not repeal the anti-trust laws was agreed to without opposition.

Testimony in Burns Agency Hearing Describes Tactics Used in "Wire-tapping" Case.

NEW YORK, July 20. — How detective fought detective in the 'wire tapping" case was told at the hearing before William Boardman, Deputy State Controller, of charges brought by Edward W. Edwards, secretary of the Allied Printing Trades Council against William J. Burns, a detective. Mr. Edwards seeks to cause revocation of Mr. Burns' license to conduct a detective agency.

It was E. J. Connors, an agency detective, who furnished the surprise of the day's hearing. He was employed by the Burns agency on the Harry K. Thaw case, but later worked for the Val O'Farrell agency. Mr. Connors said he had called at the offices of Seymour & Seymour at the direction of Mr. O'Farrell and that the had informed members of the law firm that the Burns agency was installing a dictaphone in the Seymour offices. He also asserted that the Burns agency had tried to "put a plant" in the O'Farrell agency by getting employment as O'Farrell detectives for two Burns men.

MORE PAY FOR LETTER CARRIERS

Announcement to This Effect Made in House Yesterday

OTTAWA, July 21.—Wages of letter-carriers in Canadian towns and cities are to be increased to meet the advance in the cost of living.

Announcement to this effect was made in the House of Commons tonight during consideration of the post-office estimates. In reply to Sir Herbert Ames, Hon. Mr. Doherty, Acting Postmaster-General, stated that provision would be made in the supplementary estimates for "an additional allowance" intended to meet the increase in the cost of living. What the allowance will amount to was not indicated.

Other interesting matters discussed related to mail matter to and from members of the Canadian Expeditionary Forces, rural mail delivery, and the salaries of rural mail carriers.

In reply to a number of questions as to why postage stamps are affixed to soldiers' letters after they reach Canada, Hon. Dr. Doherty said a new system was contemplated and in the near future a mark would be stamped on soldiers' letters at the starting point to indicate that they were from men on active service. That would do away with the need for placing stamps on the letters after they reach Canada.

What appears a saving in price is actually an extravagance when you buy ordinary, poor tea. Salads yields twice as many cups to the pound; hence it's economy.

Fried Bananas.

Cut firm, not too ripe, bananas in halves lengthwise. Have ready a frying pan with about tablespoon hot melted butter. Put in bananas and sprinkle with brown sugar. Let fry until brown, then turn and brown other side. Take out on plate turning over them the syrup in which they were fried. Excellent breakfast dish.

"The Postmaster's Daughter"

By LOUIS TRACY

"I thought that Grant was guilty, and I think so still," came the savage retort.

"A nice juryman you are, I must say! May I trouble you to pass the sugar?"

"Look here! What are you gettin' at? Damme if I can see through your game. What is it?"

"I didn't want to worry poor Peggy. And her father might set about you if he knew the facts, so I'm probably saving you a hiding as well as a period in jail. The only reliable witness we had as to events in Tomlin's place was a commercial traveller and he is positive that the house closed at ten o'clock. However, that's all right. How do you account for the marvellous improvement in your health? Dr. Foxton cannot understand your illness. He says you are wiry, and have a strong constitution."

"Dr. Foxton jolly near knocked me up," said Elkin. "I took his medicine till I was sick as a cat."

"But you took spirits, too."

"That's nothing fresh. Anyhow, I've dropped both, and am picking up every hour."

"Since when?"

"Since yesterday morning, if you want to know."

"I do. I am most interested. Dr. Foxton does not compound his own prescriptions, does he?"

"No. I get 'em made up at Siddle's."

"Ah. These country chemists often keep drugs in stock until they deteriorate or even set up chemical changes. Have you the bottles?"

"Yes. But what the ——"

"Anything left in them?"

"The last two are half full. Still ——"

"What a cross-grained chap you are? I buy your pictures, drink your tea, rescue you from a positively dangerous position, warn you against carrying any further a most serious libel, yet you won't let me help you in a matter affecting your health!"

"Help me? How?"

"Even you, I suppose, realize that Scotland Yard employs skilled analysts. Give me your bottles, in strict confidence, of course, and I will tell you what they really contain. Then you can compare the analyses with the doctor's prescriptions. The knowledge should be useful, to say the least. Siddle's reputation needn't suffer, but unless I am greatly mistaken, you will have the whip hand of him in future."

The prospect was alluring. Elkin would enjoy showing up the chemist, who had treated him rather as a precocious infant of late.

"By jing!" he cried, "I'm on that. But you a quid—— But no. You'd hardly lay against your own opinion. Just wait a tick. I'll bring 'em."

Furneaux stared fixedly at the table while his host was absent. His conscience was not pricking him with regard to an unmerited slur on the country chemists of Great Britain. All is fair in love and the detection of crime, and he simply had to get hold of those bottles by some daring, yet plausible ruse.

"Now—I wonder?" he muttered, as Elkin's step sounded on the stairs.

"There you are!" grinned the horse dealer. "Take a dose of the last one. It'll stir your liver to some tune."

Furneaux drew the corks out of both of the bottles and sniffed the contents. Then he tasted, with much tongue smacking.

"Um!" he said. "Stale laudanum, for a start. I expected as much. Bought by the gallon and sold by the drop. Is that the dog cart with my pictures?"

"Yes."

"Hail your man. He can give you a lift."

"But there's lots of things I want to ask you——"

"Probably. I'm here to ask questions, not to give information. I've a long way beyond the official tether already. If you've a grain of sense, and I think you are not altogether lacking in that respect, you'll keep a close tongue and act on the tips thrown out. You'll find pearls of price among the rubbish heap of my remarks generally. Good-by. See you on Wednesday."

And Furneaux climbed into the cart—holding the pictures so that they would not rattle and perhaps loosen the old gilded frames.

"Drive me to the chemist's," he said to the groom; within five minutes he was explaining his purchase to Siddle, and requesting as a favor, that the latter would wrap the set of prints in brown paper, making two parcels, and tying each securely, so that they might be dispatched by train.

Siddle examined one, the first of the series, which depicted the Aylesbury Steeplechase.

"Rather good," he said. "Where did you pick them up?"

"At Elkin's."

"Indeed. What an unexpected place!"

"That's the only way a poor man can get hold of a decent thing nowa-days. The dealers grab everything, and sell them as collections."

"Art is not in my line, though anyone can see that these are excellent."

"Ye. But you are looking at 'The Start.' Have a peep at this one, 'The Finish.' The artist would have his joke. You see that the dark horse wins."

"How did you persuade Elkin to part with them?"

"By paying him a tempting price, of course. I'm a weak-minded ass in such matters."

The chemist busied himself to oblige the detective, wrapping and tying the packages neatly. Furneaux insisted on paying sixpence for the paper, string and labor. There was quite a friendly argument, but he carried his point.

The dog cart then brought him to the station, where he tipped and dismissed the man; a little later he caught a London-bound train.

At half past seven precisely, Winter turned in through the Knoleworth-side gate of The Hollies (there were two, the approach to the house being semi-circular), and pushed the door open, as it was standing ajar.

Grant was waiting in the hall, and greeted him pleasantly.

"Here's a telegram which is meant for you, I fancy," he said.

Winter read:

"Sorry to spoil your party. Compelled to travel to London. Returning early to-morrow. F."

"That's pretty Fanny's way," smiled the Chief Inspector. "But there is something in the wind, or he would never have hurried off in this fashion. He tells me that the only pleasant evening he spent in Steynholme was under your roof, Mr. Grant."

"Come along in, Don Jaime!" drawled Hart's voice from the "den" which had been cleared of its litter, the lawn being deemed somewhat unsuitable for the purposes of a drawing room on that occasion. It was overlooked from too many quarters.

"Ah, we meet now under less uneven conditions, Mr. Hart," said Winter. "Do you know that Enrico Suares is in London?"

Hart, startled for once in his life, gazed at the detective fixedly.

"Since when?" he cried.

"He crossed from Lisbon last week."

Hart took a revolver from his hip pocket, and opened it, apparently to making sure that it was properly loaded.

"What's the law in England?" he inquired. "Can I shoot first, or must I wait till the other fellow has had a pop?"

Winter laughed.

"It's all right," he said. "Suares is in Holloway, awaiting extradition. But I owed you one for the rise you took out of me to-day."

A bell sounded and Peters came in. He glanced around.

"Where's Furneaux?" he demanded.

"Gone to London. Why this keen interest?" said Winter.

"There's something up. Elkin dropped in at the Hare and Hounds. He was simply bursting with curiosity, and had to talk to somebody. So he chose me."

"He would," was the dry comment.

"Fact, 'pon me honor. I didn't lead him on an inch. It seems that Furneaux bought some prints which caught his eye in Elkin's house, and Tomlin says that that hexplains hit."

"Explains what?"

"Furneaux's visit to Siddle, and certain bulky parcels brought in and brought out again."

"Queer little duck, Furneaux," said Hart. "Now, that my mind is at ease about the immediate future of the biggest rascal in Venezuela I can take an active part in Steynholme affairs once more. When it's all through I will make a novel of it, dashed if I don't, with the postmaster's daughter in the three-color process as a frontispiece."

"But who will be the villain?" said Peters.

Hart waved the negro-head pipe at the other three.

"Draw lots. I am indifferent," he said.

HEAT FLASHES, DIZZY, NERVOUS

Mrs. Wynn Tells How Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Helped Her During Change of Life.

Richmond, Va. — "After taking seven bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I feel like a new woman. I always had a headache during the Change of Life and was also troubled with other bad feelings common at that time—dizzy spells, nervous feelings and heat flashes. Now I am in better health than I ever was and recommend your remedies to all my friends."—Mrs. LENA WYNN, 2812 E. O Street, Richmond, Va.

While Change of Life is a most critical period of a woman's existence, the annoying symptoms which accompany it may be controlled, and normal health restored by the timely use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Such warning symptoms are a sense of suffocation, hot flashes, headaches, backaches, dread of impending evil, timidity, sounds in the ears, palpitation of the heart, sparks before the eyes, irregularities, constipation, variable appetite, weakness and inquietude, and dizziness.

For these abnormal conditions do not fail to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Preparedness on the Farm.

Every farmer ought to believe in preparedness, the kind of preparedness that provides tested rather than "guessed" seed corn; that sees that all farm machinery is carefully looked over and the badly worn or broken parts replaced before the begining of the rush season; that makes ready a supply of bolts and taps, extra lap rings and clevises, singletrees and at least one extra pair of doubletrees. Man labor and horse labor are too expensive and time too precious to take chances of risks which might easily be avoided.—Farm and Fireside.

Eating on the Stage.

You may imagine that an actor enjoys the meal he sits down to in a play, but be it ever so savory the most loathed food on record is that served on the stage. When one has to eat and drink the same thing six nights in the week and twice during matinees it becomes monotonous, and actors declare they cannot look the stage food in the face without it nauseating them.—Pittsburgh Dispatch.

Flower Growing Possibilities.

There are known and described more than 200 natural families or orders of flowering plants, embracing 7,000 genera and over 100,000 species. The species of begonia runs over 350; the violet family comprises 250 species; the pink family about 100 species.

OTHER PEOPLE'S AFFAIRS.

Unless You Have Real Tact Don't Try to Be the Third Party.

Have you a reputation of being a third party where two persons are vainly trying to manage their own affairs? It is only the most tactful sort of persons who can successfully play the role of third party without doing more harm than good.

Don't try to fix things up between quarreling lovers unless you are absolutely sure that you can trust your tact and intuition to do the right and only thing. Don't intervene in the affairs of a newly established household. Let the young people work things out for themselves. Don't try to bring up other people's children. They won't thank you. Nobody thanks the meddler, no matter how well intentioned she may be.

Now, to the humane soul who hates to see things go wrong when a word or two will apparently set them right, this withholding of interest seems most selfish. But it really isn't. It is the most considerate thing you can do sometimes to shut your eyes and let things take their natural course. They will right themselves in time, and you will not jeopardize your friendship by good natured meddling.

It is better to stand aside than to get mixed up as a third party in other people's troubles. Nobody loves a meddler.—Pittsburgh Press.

Animals Attack the Lungs.

Watch any flesh eating animal when it is attacking its prey or watch two animals having a fight to the death. You will notice one remarkable fact, and that is that they strike for the lungs. Most people, of course, are well aware where their own lungs are, but they haven't the slightest idea about any other lungs. Animals instinctively know, however, the position of the lungs of almost every other animal. When a tiger or a lion attacks a man it does its best to get just below the shoulder blades. If it strikes without warning you will always find that its powerful paws have torn right through to the lungs. A cat has just the same instinct. Watch it stalk a sparrow and you will see how cleverly it manoeuvres so as to get behind the unfortunate bird and pounce on its back, where the lungs are.—London Graphic.

Russian Folk Songs.

Concerning the folk songs of Russia, Cesar Cui wrote in his "La Musique en Russie:" "Russian folk songs are usually written within a very restricted compass and only rarely move beyond the interval of a fifth or a sixth. The older the song the narrower is the range of its compass. The theme always is short, sometimes extending no farther than two measures, but these two are repeated as often as the exigencies of the text demand. The folk songs are sung either by a single voice or by a chorus. In the latter case a single voice leads off with the subject, and then the chorus takes it up."

Care of Birds.

In an English treatise on the "Hygiene of Bird Keeping" attention is called to the thoughtless practice of hanging birds in cages just above the level of the sashes of windows and to the mistaken kindness of hanging a cage in a corner of a sitting room or a kitchen near the ceiling. In the one case the bird is subjected to drafts and will in all probability develop catarrh and bronchitis, and in the other it lives in a vitiated atmosphere.

Flowers and Blood.

A superstition dating from olden times exists to the effect that roses and flowers generally attain greater beauty in soil fertilized by blood, especially by human blood, than elsewhere. Persons who have visited Newmarket, England, know of the so called "bloody flower of Newmarket," which is found nowhere else than in the old moat, now filled up and in which, according to tradition, a very large quantity of human remains is interred. These flowers bloom in June and July and by the bloodlike hue of their blossoms suggest the name which has been given to them.

Doubtful Assistance.

Value of Forests.

It has been estimated that if the forests of the earth were completely stocked and scientifically worked they would yield annually the full equivalent of 120 times the present consumption of coal.

AMERICANS AT HOME IN CAMP NEAR FRONT

French Soldiers and Civilians Are Co-operating in Making Them Comfortable.

MAKE LONG HIKES DAILY

Men Getting Into Condition Rapidly as the Result of Stiff Training.

AMERICAN TRAINING CAMP IN FRANCE, July 20. — The American troops have been here for less than a week—they are not all here by any means—and they have already made themselves thoroughly at home, so much so that this section of France looks like a bit of America.

The correspondent made an extended visit to the encampments this morning and found the men fit and in good spirits and full of praise for the friendly co-operation of the French people, who have willingly and gladly given up many of their own comforts to accommodate all the Americans who have arrived, and so the countryside is dotted with newly-erected barracks that have sprung up over night and make even more picturesque this beautiful neighbourhood.

Water is abundant here, but uncertain as to purity, so the troops are adopting filtering methods by means of bags suspended from tri-poles, which astonish the local inhabitants almost as much as the Americans' inexplicable thirst for water, which is unknown to wine drinkers, many of whom seldom touch water.

A task which the army has taken upon itself is the clearing up of the entire countryside, and at the present pace the whole district will soon look like a well-ordered garden. Such prisoners as are under arrest for minor infractions of the regulations are employed each morning in making headquarters spotless, and are bringing such a degree of orderliness into the place that the original residents are amazed. Likewise they find it difficult to understand why the soldiers take so many baths, for the men make for the nearest stream and dive in as soon as they are at liberty.

The presence of the soldiers here has naturally introduced many novelties, but probably none is more welcome than the daily evening concert, which attracts people from far around, people who have never heard lively American music and who have been without music since the outbreak of the war.

An attractive feature of the camp is a lion cub, which occupies a corner in the camp of a certain regiment. The cub was presented as a mascot by Americans resident in Paris. He was young and playful and harmless a short time ago, but is growing astonishingly, and is a veritable terror to the townspeople, and now a source of doubtful amusement to the soldiers, many of whom bear scratches to testify to the nature of his playfulness.

The cost of silo filling is greatly reduced if several farmers use a silo cutter co-operatively.

Skim milk and grain can be fed to much better advantage to hogs than to mongrel dairy calves.

Rape seeded at the last cultivation of corn will furnished abundant nitrogenous feed for hogs in fall.

WAR AND THE FAMILY

Little Sisters of the Soil

By Josephine Dasham Bacon.

NEW YORK, Saturday.

IT is not because I think they will revolutionize the world, or the country, that I spent half the day watching the young farmers work on the plots established by the National League for Woman's Service. Sixty young women, laboring at little plots twenty feet square, won't do much directly for Mr. Hoover, will they?

But indirectly, quite honestly, I believe they may be like sixty little stones flung out into a sea of ignorance; there is no telling where their influence will stop.

And after I had talked to them I saw that they believed it too, every one of them, from the responsible dressmaker who looked ahead, saw a big business growing, probably, smaller and smaller and decided to jump ahead of disaster and take up agriculture with all the force and personality she had put into designing, down to the little high school girl in pigtails who foresees a big chance for trained instructors in school garden work, and cheerfully digs and waters and fertilizes through her one holiday week.

She struck me as a rather clever young person. A generation ago her aunt or her mother was looking ahead to stenography in just such a spirit. But now intensive agriculture is offering a new, big profession to the girls who see the trend of the times and realize their opportunities this summer.

A five cent car fare and $14 give any girl eight weeks' instruction, free tools, free fertilizer, free land, free seeds, and all the produce she can coax out of her tiny plot—Dr. Morgan, of Columbia University, says she can get $25 worth if she is clever and faithful.

So the college students and the music teachers and the women of leisure (the instructor called them that, but I assured her that there were no such things nowadays. They will be in natural history museums soon, with labels on their cases). All of them come up to the Columbia Gardens and there by the big Bedford road, where all the motorists can see them, they put their minds and their muscles to work at Mother Eve's ancient and honorable job.

But they are going to make more money out of it than she did, and if some kind patriot will only give them a modest canning plant or a dehydrator (or both) they will be able to give our first ancestress cards and spades as to disposal of their finished products. For the poor lady had nothing for the winter, and they, besides their experience and their training and their certificate, will have tomatoes to bake with their macaroni—which, as everybody knows today, gives just the proper number of calories.

Of course, they cannot go out after eight weeks' rapid training and pose as professors of agriculture. Far from it. But what they can do in this new line they have just demonstrated, and I can't imagine any more practical demonstration of the work of the league.

A large model farm in Westchester county, anxious to try out women workers against the day when they may be the only available force, engaged a large company of them, green hands every one, and sent to the league to supply, if they could, assistant demonstrators capable of handling groups of new labor under a supervisor. Promptly three such assistants were sent out from Columbia Gardens and to-day they are breaking in the first recruits to that army of the soil that alone can make possible the army in the trenches.

Pretty good, isn't it, for a school that began only this spring? And what a spring they only know who have had to plough and harrow the wet, lumpy soil.

I watched them squatting laboriously in their practical, jaunty overalls, slopping water in trenches about the fatigued little turnips (a turnip is apparently an aquatic plant!), scratching the earth between the tomatoes, exhibiting with worried face a diseased beet to the interested professor of botany from Columbia.

"That beet will never grow, the way you have treated it," said he bluntly, bending over the misunderstood vegetable with the air of a consulting surgeon.

"She won't waste her time when she gets through with me," he confided to me later. "She'll know right away when something goes wrong with her crops. Of course she'd never make any money hand cultivating tomatoes like that—a horse cultivator would run through twenty times as much in a quarter of the time—but she is learning a lot doing it this way."

Each tiny plot shows the owner's character. Here is a straggly, careless one, there a neat, four square speckless checkerboard, every leaf in place, every root uniform.

"That girl would do anything well," says the professor approvingly, "write a book or build a house or anything she handled."

The much photographed overalls, which you and I may have supposed partly due to a feminine desire to "dress the part," turn out to be almost necessary. Plants, it seems, don't like to be brushed by skirts, even short ones. And puttees were never made to kneel in, as you'll find out if you try. Chints weeding aprons are very pretty when you kneel before your hollyhocks and delphiniums, but if you are working between rows of seedlings you had better be bifurcated.

They found out all these things, you see, in England, and the English women must be our teachers over here, both in what they failed in and where they succeeded.

"We mustn't get caught as they did," one of the girls said to me, earnestly, "must we? We must be ready when they need us."

It looks to me as if they would be ready. Every one of them could take care of twenty green workers, at least, and every one of them would be worth her pay, besides doing a real service to her country.

If every community sent a half-dozen high school graduates, for instance, to such a summer school, what a series of missionaries they would make! How many heart-breaking failures, what incalculable waste, they could prevent! No community with such apostles in its midst could ever be ignorant of the simple, commonsense principals of intercropping, of hurrying something into the ground hot on the heels of what comes out of it. We should not suffer the shame of seeing our great American waste of acres of half-worked soil, side by side with the thrifty pocket handkerchief patches from which the Italian immigrant peddles his cart loads!

And they appreciate all this, these girls, be sure of that. They are not doing this for a joke. They are pretty sane, well educated people, and they know that for every sentimental young lady who longs to soothe (in a becoming cap) the burning brow of a wounded hero there must be somebody, somewhere, in overalls prodding the soil that their hero may be fed. Man cannot live by bandages alone, and the women who are pioneering in agriculture and wireless telegraphy and canteen cooking to-day mark the widening scope of women's work since 1861 far more clearly than any extension of the suffrage.

"Has your business really begun to go down hill?" I asked the dressmaker curiously.

She looked up from the string she was stretching as a guide for her cabbage sets. "Not so very much as yet," she answered, "but it will, I suppose. It's bound to."

She sat back on her heels and eyed me squarely.

"It ought to," she said brusquely. If that isn't constructive patriotism, what is, I ask you?

I don't mind admitting that I felt ashamed of my new sport skirt and the sickening price I paid for it.

And as I watched the little pig-tailed high school girl getting her points for her diploma with every turnip she watered (for a sensible school system allows the students to add this intensive agricultural work to their regular curriculum) it occurred to me that scientific gardening was coming into its own by the same route as scientific child training and scientific domestic economy.

So long as people believed that any woman "just naturally knew" how to tend children, a nurse girl commanded low pay, long hours and little respect. Anything on two legs that wore a skirt would do. But the idea of the kindergarten was born, and thousands of young women all over the land took their training, paid their money and raised the training of babies to an art.

Again, all females were supposed to grasp instinctively the complex processes that set the machinery of a house in motion. Hence the growing lack of interest in American kitchens on the part of American women.

But when the brilliant idea of the kitchen as laboratory flashed into the mind of the first cooking teachers all this was changed, and now the trained domestic science expert takes her pick of well paid positions long before she is graduated; institutions and hotels and schools fight for her.

Will not agriculture rise from the ranks into the peerage next? I think so. These farsighted young women are not attacking their crops in the spirit of the reluctant farmer's daughter. Anybody, they know, can pick cherries at a pinch; they are going to be on her lists. They are not planting cabbages listlessly when they would rather be playing the piano; for the purpose of knowing how to make them grow, and that is going to reduce the price of cabbages for you and me.

If some of the worthy philantropists who are always making it possible for poor girls to study Greek would endow a few hundred scholarships at $14 apiece for the purpose of studying fertilizers I can't help thinking that the general average of education wouldn't suffer this year.

If the National League for Woman's Service could offer 100 of these scholarships, for instance, to 100 of the women who have listed themselves as interested in agriculture can there be any doubt as to the value of their national service?

"Back to the Land!" is a fine slogan, but, as thousands of back to the landers have proved to their sorrow, it is necessary to go back intelligently in order to avoid going backward. A good stenographer is worth more than a poor farmer; but there are more places to learn stenography work than farming, and that is why this move seems to one who has watched its struggling beginnings so timely, so practical and so patriotic.

Here's hoping that next year will see 600 brown overalls where sixty work to-day.

Constructive Patriotism Demonstrated by College Girls in Overalls.

If You Cannot Afford to Build There Are Many Ways to Improve Your Old House.

MANY persons who had contemplated building new homes this year have postponed it because of the changed conditions. For some the high cost of materials has been a deterring factor; for others the general unsettlement consequent upon the war has made them unwilling to adventure upon any new enterprise or hazard extra expense.

In some cases there has been a determination to alter a house already built instead of constructing an entirely new one. The experience of a woman who made over an old house and who has many original ideas on the subject may be of benefit to those who contemplate making additions or changes in their old house in lieu of putting of a new one.

Mrs. George E. Molleson, of Mt. Kisco, N. Y., had an old house on ground which rose above the street, with hills at the back. She asked an architect how much it would cost to make certain changes. He told her frankly that he could not give her a definite figure as the undertaking of such alteration might entail another. As she did not want to take the risk of incurring a greater outlay of money than she could afford, she began to study what she had and to think out ways of providing more conveniences and more attractive features. In doing so she has evolved ideas for other houses similarly situated.

The house was designed for a corner plot 43 by 96 feet in size, to face the northeast, so that all the rooms could have two exposures to the sun. The rise of the land brings the back door two feet above the level of the front door.

Mrs. Molleson's house has a living room 22 feet long by 21 feet 6 inches wide, with triple windows at each end. Along one side is a porch 8 feet wide by 18 feet long and a double window opening on it. This is temporary, for in time there is to be a chimney with a big fireplace. The window seats are provided with boxes for storing all kinds of things which one wants to have out of sight and at the same time convenient of access.

The stairway is opposite the front door. Two steps lead to a landing which is on a level with the house in the rear. At one side is a lavatory. The pipes here may be capped and later carried above for a bathroom on the second floor. Two other steps lead to another landing which communicates with the dining room by means of a sliding door. Under the stairway in the living room is a built-in couch with book shelves above.

The dining room, which is 16 feet long by 13 feet 6 inches wide, also has built-in furniture, including a sideboard, the back of which is arranged to slide to afford communication with a serving table in the kitchen—a great convenience. Glass doors open from the dining room to a porch across the end, and there also is a bread window opening onto the porch from the living room.

The kitchen is arranged to make housekeeping as easy as possible. Outside the windows in the rear are two large boxes, one for wood and one for coal, which can be filled from the outside and opened from the inside for the supplies. By the use of a three cornered board in the coal closet the coal is prevented from coming out faster than is desired.

There are two refrigerators, one for the kitchen supplies and the other, just inside the kitchen from the dining room door, for the pantry supplies.

Mrs. Molleson not only has a broom closet in the kitchen, but there is one in the dining room and one off the hall on the second floor.

The garage is merely a shed at the kitchen end of the house, with the drying yard beyond. One can drive directly through it to the drive at the rear of the house and thus out to the other street. From a corner of the kitchen, with a door opening out to it from the garage, is a back stairway. Through this trunks can be taken directly to a storeroom overhead or through it to the rooms beyond if desired. Off the storeroom is a maid's room, with a door opening on to the roof of the garage, which can be used as a servants' porch, being entirely shut off from the other part of the house.

While it is highly desirable to have a maid's bathroom, she arranged for a door from the maid's room to another bathroom which could be used meanwhile until she could afford to put in another. Similarly the bath for the guest's room could be put in when desired. It is always well to have plumbing on the second floor as nearly as possible over that on the first floor. Then first floor pipes can be capped and left until it is desired to carry them higher.

The ventilation of a country house is extremely important. Mrs. Molleson hit upon a happy method of solving the problem for her house. Over the top of three of the dormer windows on each side of the house in the under side of the cornice she had a piece of wood cut out, five inches wide and two feet long, fastened on hinges, so it could be dropped down when necessary, for free ventilation of the space between the ceiling of the second floor and the roof, and at each end of the house there are eyebrow windows, making an excellent cross circulation. In the hall on the second floor just outside the guest room there is a trap door three feet square, arranged on a pulley, so that if can be opened from the hall. That permits the hot air to escape from the hall and a wire netting prevents flies from coming in. There is a similar trap in the bathroom off the master's bedroom.

Mrs. Molleson does not take ice and she does not need it in the hottest day in the year. A spring is piped into the house, flows through a zinc receptacle, with a corrugated bit bottom for circulation of air, and then into a lower receptacle, with a cement foundation, and out at the place provided for an outlet. The larger vessel holds many smaller ones, in which can be kept all manner of things which need to be preserved or chilled. As the water is constantly running there is nothing offensive about it, as it flows in a little stream from the house.

"I am not an architect," says Mrs. Molleson, but I know where to buy second hand materials and how to make an unpromising house comfortable, convenient and attractive with a small outlay of money. I like the problem of taking an old house and making it over into a thoroughly livable one."

Many From One

PROBABLY you are trying to save money this year and so are not buying many ornamental shrubs and flowers. Your dollars and your work have gone chiefly into the growing of vegetables.

This is all right, but we cannot let beauty die out altogether. Fortunately much may be done with a little money to increase the number of plants and bushes that will reward us with flowers another season, when we are hoping that the stress of war will not be so severe.

"You can easily multiply your shrubs and even roses during the summer if you will make slips and be sure to get them short," according to De la Mare's "Garden Guide." "Three inches is long enough. The slips should have a few leaves at the top; the others should be removed. This type of cutting is called a set wood cutting. Cuttings have no roots, no method of taking up food from the soil, so that food stored in the stem and leaves which should produce roots is lost by evaporation if too much foliage remains on the cutting. If the leaves are large they are often trimmed smaller. The cuttings when made should be placed in a box of sand or directly in the soil if it is sandy. Put the cuttings in rather deeply and firm them in solidly. If there is a large jar or bell glass handy use it to cover those plants which you usually think are a little more difficult to root, such as roses.

"But all cuttings, whether covered with a glass or not, should have a shading. A good place for the cuttings is under the grape vines, where it is shady. Water them thoroughly. Don't leave too many leaves on a cutting. Cuttings of any sort should be placed where they are to grow. Many plants root readily by the layering method, and as it is very convenient, perfectly simple and certain, it can be used in every garden, for some purpose. Grapes can easily be propagated by this method. A cane is merely bent down and a node or two covered with soil. They root readily and the new plant can soon be separated from the old one.

"Another type of layering is that by which the bush is mounded so that each shoot roots, making from five to twenty-five young plants instead of one. After they are well rooted the plant can be divided and each part will be a separate plant. Gooseberries and many ornamental shrubs can be mound layered. Raspberries are propagated by bending down their tips and covering with soil. The tips root and the little new plant resulting may be transplanted."

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

A Race For A Stake

But There Was More In It Than the Money.

By ALAN HINSDALE

A number of persons stood on the front porch of a summer hotel near Washington, now looking at their watches and now up the road as if expecting something or somebody. Among them was a young lady dressed evidently for an automobile ride.

"If he gets here at 3 o'clock he'll be an hour ahead of time," said one.

"What time is he due in Washington?" asked another.

"At 6."

"What's up on it?"

"Oh, nothing valuable. It's a gentleman's race against time. A dozen pairs of gloves are all there is in it."

"Here he comes now."

The last one of these remarks was scarcely spoken before a minute cloud of dust was easily discernible up the road. An automobile appeared a mere speck and began to grow in apparent size. In another minute it pulled up at the steps of the hotel. A young man jumped out, calling for gasoline and such other automobile equipments as he needed. The lady mentioned stepped up to him and said:

"Mr. Champlin, I believe."

"I am," replied the auto man, bowing and trying to get hold of his cap to pull it off.

"My cousin, Humphrey Cook, knowing that I was here, that I adore automobiling and that I wish to go to the city, has written me that you would stop here and possibly would take me in."

Mr. Champlin hesitated.

"I'll be no trouble," the lady added.

"Really I should be delighted for your company, but in case of any delay I may have to proceed at breakneck speed."

"The faster you go the better I shall like it."

"Very well. I'm an hour ahead and if nothing breaks shall have no trouble in reaching the goal on time. Are you ready?"

"I am."

"Step in, Miss— I beg your pardon. I didn't get your name."

"Hood—Jaqueline Hood," replied the girl.

Mr. Champlin started. "Jack Hood!" he exclaimed.

"The same. Is there anything about Jack Hood that you don't like?"

"I've heard she's the worst feminine daredevil the world has ever seen."

"You've also heard probably that she knows all about an auto. Perhaps she may aid you in case of trouble."

By this time Miss Hood was settling herself comfortably in the auto, tying her veil under her chin. There was a singular look on Champlin's face. He had bet Humphrey Cook that he would drive his auto to New York and return by a given time. Might not Cook have sent this girl to delay him?

"I'm sorry, Miss Hood," he said, "but I've changed my mind about taking you."

"I haven't changed mine about going."

A bewitching smile hovered on her lips, and her eyes danced with mischief.

"Very well," he said, "I'll take you. But remember that in case there's any rascality perpetrated I shall treat you just as if you were a man."

"Good! That's the way I wish to be treated."

During this scene the onlookers had gathered around the machine, and at the last words some of the men and all the women clapped their hands. Champlin got in, and the couple rolled away, followed by cheers and the waving of handkerchiefs. In another minute nothing could be seen of them but a tiny dust cloud.

For an hour Miss Hood entertained the driver of the auto in such a way as to make him forget everything but her. Nevertheless his eye was on the speed gauge and the clock, and nothing pertaining to winning his race was neglected. There are women who can do more with a man in an hour than other women can do in a lifetime. Miss Hood simply absorbed him.

"Have you time to stop for a glass of milk?" she asked.

"Certainly."

"Well, there's a farmhouse off the road up there. Would you mind getting one for me?"

Mr. Champlin stopped before the gate and went up to the house. A woman answered his knock at the door, and he went inside. He was no sooner out of sight than Miss Hood jumped out, took a small nickel plated monkey wrench from her belt, unscrewed a nut and put it in her pocket. She had not finished her work before Champlin reappeared with a glass of milk in his hand. Miss Hood was awakened to his presence by hearing the breaking of glass on stone. Looking up, she saw Champlin the picture of astonishment and chagrin. He knew that he had been "done."

Striding with a quick step to the auto, he said sternly:

"You know what I said before leaving—that if there was any rascality perpetrated I would treat you just as I should a man."

"Oh, yes," she replied, making a face at him; "I remember that."

"Give me what you have removed."

"I decline to do so."

Champlin made a dive for her. She sidled around the auto. He followed, chasing her in a circle. She was too fleet for him. He was strong, but she was agile. At every stop there would be the pretty face brimming with mischief, her eyes riveted on him that she should be ready for his slightest move. Finally he gave it up.

"Did Cook send you out to do this?"

"Yes."

"Well, I suppose I shall have to lose the bet."

"That isn't necessary."

"What do you mean?"

"That if you ask me to give you what I have taken I will do so."

"On what conditions?"

"No conditions."

"No conditions! What do you mean?"

"I mean that I agreed with Humphrey for a dozen pairs of gloves to come out and delay you. Please don't ask me why I prefer not to do so."

She cast down her eyes, and her meaning was plain. She had "gone soft" on Champlin.

She handed him the nut. He replaced it, and in another minute they were shooting again along the road.

Champlin was delighted. Cook had very nearly got ahead of him—would have got ahead of him had it not been that the girl had taken so great a fancy to him that she hadn't the heart to "do" him. What a splendid joke it would be on Cook and the party who were present at the making of the bet when Champlin and Miss Hood rolled up to the —— hotel on time! Miss Hood hadn't even asked for the gloves her cousin had offered her to help him win them. Champlin told her that as soon as he received the stakes he would give them to her and she could change them for ladies' gloves. Instead of being pleased at this, she appeared to be very much hurt. Champlin begged her to tell him why, and she replied that she had not consented to be a turncoat for a bribe. This left him to understand that she had done it all for him. There was a very tender scene between them, at the end of which the misunderstanding was made up, and for the rest of the journey Miss Cook held the steering wheel, while Mr. Champlin's arm was about her waist.

There were no more delays. On approaching the city, having still an hour's leeway, they concluded to stop at a convenient place and get the dust out of their throats with an ice. Champlin left the lady for a brief season while he poured out something more effective than an ice in doing away with dust. On rejoining her they partook of the ices and resumed their journey.

"What are you smiling at?" asked Miss Hood of her companion.

"Oh, I was thinking how surprised that cousin of yours will be when we roll up on time. That was a rascally proceeding of his, and it deserved to fail. If you hadn't been the dearest girl in the world it would have succeeded. But just think of his surprise when he hears of the other part of it."

He managed to get hold of her hand with his left, holding on to the wheel with one hand, and they bowled along in this way until they met another conveyance.

And now the dome of the capitol with the figure perched upon it loomed up faint in the distance. It was not long before the outskirts of the city were reached, and half an hour before the time limit had expired they stopped at the ladies' entrance of the —— hotel. A liveried servant advanced and said:

"Mr. Cook and a party of ladies and gentlemen are in a private dining room waiting for you, sir."

Entering the room, Champlin expected to find Cook eager to know why his scheme had failed. Instead Cook handed his cousin a dozen pairs of ladies' gloves. After this he put out his hand to Champlin.

"I congratulate you, old boy, with all my heart on your engagement."

Champlin stood mute with astonishment.

"Champ, old boy," added Cook, "you need an explanation. To make you lose I sent my cousin Jack out to effect an entrance into your auto and delay you on the way. If she succeeded she was to have a dozen pairs of gloves for a reward. She has lost the gloves."

"That's plain," said Champlin.

"Well, there was a bet between Jack and me of another dozen pairs of gloves against a hundred cigars that she would make you propose to her on the way."

Champlin looked so many emotions, of which astonishment and shamefacedness were the most prominent, that all burst into a laugh, in which he finally joined. Then, turning to Miss Hood, he advanced, with a puzzled, inquiring look on his face.

"Was it all a sham?" he asked.

She made no reply in words, but a slight color rising to her cheeks indicated that the brief period she had passed, even of a sham engagement, had not been unpleasant to her. Besides, Champlin was regarded as one of the best catches in Washington. Since he could get no word of confirmation he concluded to apply a test. Putting an arm around the girl's waist, he drew her toward him and kissed her. She submitted without a protest.

"It's a go!" shouted Cook, and there was a burst of merriment, all crowding around Miss Hood to congratulate her, the men with handshakes, the women with kisses.

"Good for you, Champ!" cried Humphrey Cook. "You've won out all around. But the stake on the race is nothing compared with winning a wife. And you've got a dandy one, that can run anything, from a car to a man, and you'll find that she can take both the auto and the man apart and put them together again without the least trouble."

The wedding journey was an auto trip to California.

In These War Times you want real food that contains the greatest amount of body-building material at lowest cost. The whole wheat grain is all food. Shredded Wheat Biscuit is the whole wheat in a digestible form. Two or three of these little loaves of baked whole wheat with milk and a little fruit make a nourishing, strengthening meal.

OUR UNPAID LABORERS.

Birds Do Great Work, Yet We Do Not Properly Protect Them.

One form of national waste which is far more serious than the American people realize is a result of the deplorable neglect to conserve bird life in this heedless and ungrateful country.

Ornithologists and other intelligent observers of nature who have made a study of the subject say with the sanction of camp experts that insects destroy one-tenth of the products of agriculture in the United States. More than 100,000 kinds of insects have been enumerated in the fields, orchards, meadows, pastures, vineyards, gardens and woods of this chief agricultural country of the world. A very large proportion of these insects are injurious to crops. Birds are the insects' worst enemies.

Nearly all birds destroy insect life. The federal department of agriculture has examined the stomachs of forty kinds of birds to determine accurately what they consume. It was found that among the birds which most effectively aid the farmers are phoebes, kingbirds, catbirds, swallows, brown thrashers, rose breasted grosbeaks, house wrens, vireos, native sparrows, cuckoos, orioles, warblers, shore larks, loggerhead shrikes and meadow larks. Even the crow and the crow blackbird, which have rested under suspicion so long, do more good than harm to the farmers.—Chicago News.

The Indoor and the Outdoor Man.

In the American Magazine Dean Herman Schneider says:

"The characteristics of men are so much on the surface that a keen analyst usually will uncover the correct one in the first interview. They signal the indoor and outdoor type of man. When a blizzard is beating against the house an 'indoor' man likes to hear the roar of the wind because it emphasizes the coziness of the inglenook and heightens his sense of protection. The 'outdoor' man is straightway seized by a desire to get out and fight the storm. Draw a picture of prospecting or construction work, and the second man will lean forward with tense muscles and radiant eyes. The other will draw more and more into himself, as if for shelter."

Toilet of the Tidy Ant.

No creature is more tidy than an ant, who cannot tolerate the presence of dirt on its body, says a writer in St. Nicholas. These little creatures actually use a number of real toilet articles in keeping themselves clean. A well known authority says their toilet articles consist of coarse and fine toothed combs, hair brushes, sponges, and even washes and soap. Their combs, however, are the genuine article and differ from ours mainly in that they are fastened to their legs. The ants have no set time for their toilet operations, but clean up whenever they get soiled.

TWO LONG YEARS HE SUFFERED

"Fruit-a-tives" Made Him Feel As If Walking On Air

OSHAWA, ONT., Nov. 26th, 1914.

"For over two years, I was troubled with Constipation, Drowsiness, Lack of Appetite and Headaches. One day I saw your sign which read "Fruit-a-tives make you feel like walking on air." This appealed to me, so I decided to try a box. In a very short time, I began to feel better, and now I feel fine. I have a good appetite, relish everything I eat, and the Headaches are gone entirely. I recommend this pleasant fruit medicine to all my friends".

Municipal Kitchens Thronged.

In the meantime the municipal kitchens have become so popular that it is estimated that at least 400,000 Berliners dine in them every day. Late in April the Berlin press joyfully announced that the price of eggs had been lowered, owing to increased imports, but a few days later it had to report that the neutral countries supplying the bulk of Berlin's egg supply of one a fortnight to each individual had made such demands that the price must go back to the old rate of eight cents apiece.

The military authorities in Berlin have come down with a heavy hand on the efforts of the town population to supplement their rations by obtaining supplies from the surrounding country. General von Kessel has issued an order in which he says that, while the authorities have hitherto connived at infringements of the regulations, "the movement has now assumed forms which imperil public order and security in the country, and threaten the orderly conduct of agriculture." He forbids henceforth all direct purchase or acquisition of food—other than gifts—from the producers of food, and especially of grain, potatoes, meat, bacon, butter, and eggs unless a license has been granted by the local authorities. Offenses against this order are punishable with imprisonment for one year and any food which is unlawfully obtained is liable to confiscation by the police. Moreover, the military authorities give notice that "if necessary, they will employ all the weapons at their disposal.

The Berliner Tageblatt says that the order has been issued without consultation of the Berlin municipal authorities, who on several occasions have protested against all such restrictions. Vorwarts indicates that the exemption of "gifts" is intended to favour the well-to-do classes, who can easily circumvent the order by bribery.

Pointing how hard hit the German miners were by the war Deputy Hue, a Social Democrat from Essen, said during the last session of the Reichstag that wages in the mines during the war had risen only 30 or 40 per cent., while the cost of living had increased by 200 to 300 per cent. The soap with which miners scrub themselves used to cost 3 cents a bar, and now costs 32 cents.

According to the Vossische Zeitung the stock of oleolmargarine has been increased about one-third of late. The paper says:

"The provident economic policy of the War Committee for Oil and Fats makes it possible to increase considerably the quantities of raw materials allotted to the oleomargarine factories. The increase in the allotments to the oleomargarine factories will amount to about 33 1-3 per cent. Consequently, it will be possible to increase the fat rations by about 1 3-5 ounces, and it is a particularly welcome fact that this raising of the rations has been secured for the next six months. The War Committee has achieved in the various fat-yielding spheres very favorable successes which have to do with the winning of oil from refuse and the removal of oil from corn and maize. The application of the new refining process for the purification of oils and fats which are otherwise not fit for food has also helped to make it now possible to increase the fat ration."

Flour from Beech Buds.

It was recently announced in the Berlin press that two brothers named Branco had succeeded in producing baking flour, fodder, and fat out of the buds of limes and beeches, and that the authorities had presented the discovery free of cost to all municipalities. It is declared that "according to expert estimates," about 500,000 tons of the new flour can be produced in Germany every year, and that it needs less yeast in baking than ordinary flour. The raw materials authorities also say that the new food smells and tastes good, has about the same nutritive value as barley, and yields about four times as much fat as barley, the fat "looking and tasting like butter."

The Imperial Grain Bureau seems to be rather more skeptical. It says that baking tests of the new flour mixed with wheaten flour gave a satisfactory result, but that the harvesting of the buds and the preparation of the flour and fat involve such an expenditure both of man power and money that it hardly seems likely that the invention can be exploited at present.

Comment upon the food situation appearing in German papers during the Spring shows that no pains were spared to impress the people with the seriousness of the case and to emphasize the necessity of making the limited supplies go as far as possible. Under the caption "Our Daily Bread," the Munchener Neueste Nachrichten said:

"We miss the help of thousands of hands; the last harvest was poor; the Winter is so long. Much has happened which ought not to have happened, matters which we do not need to be silent about and which we cannot forget. The time will come when reprisals will be taken for food usury and profiteering. But this is a question for the future. There is a certain quantity of grain available. None of us can work a miracle and make more of it. The man who has hidden away a sack of corn is a traitor. May it burden him every night of his life. There are people drinking milk who know that the children have none.

"It is going to be hard with us, very hard. But we shall have our daily bread. We do not need to interpret 'Daily Bread' as it was interpreted in the old days. A cup of milk, a dish of turnips, a salt herring and a handful of potatoes in war time is also daily bread. First of all the sick, the wounded, the children, the army, and then the others. The Germans are a nation of noblemen, a lordly people, over whom the storms of a thousand years have raged without breaking them. Who dare say we shall not hold out? French hate, Italian cunning, British hypocrisy are awaiting for any sign of despondency. And if we do not hold out at home the iron wall at the front will rock.

"If we must tighten still tighter our belt let it be so. On the island it will be drawn tighter still. A day is coming, a golden day after this iron one."

ADVISES SLEEPING INSTEAD OF EATING.

Writing in the International Korrespondens, the organ of the German trade unions, Herr Thomas, a Socialist Alderman of Frankfort, drew attention to the custom followed in Russia among the peasants of spending most of their time sleeping when food was scarce, and he recommended the application of this cure to the children of the German workers who were suffering from lack of nourishment. This suggestion provoked much sarcastic comment in the anti-Kaiser Socialist press.

Comparing the food troubles of Germany with those of Great Britain, the Frankfurter Zeitung wrote:

"For whom is time working? It is true that we have serious anxieties concerning our bread supply and our food supply generally, but we at least know where we stand. We have not got with anxious eyes to look out to see whether this or that ship arrives, and whether this or that regulation is applied in an exporting country. In good time, when things became scarce, we organised our bread supply, and the organisation, although it has to allot small quantities to the individual, can reckon with securities and foundations quite different from those which exist in England, where thus far there is no bread ration and no distribution system at all. Although it has been necessary for us to reduce the quantities of bread which can be distributed in the last quarter of the harvest year, we know that this deterioration need mean no catastrophe, whereas according to all our information is heavily veiled—England has the gloomy feeling of possible catastrophe."

CANADIANS MAKE SUCCESSFUL RAID

CHEMIN DES DAMES ANOTHER VERDUN FOR HUNS

German Losses In Unsuccessful Attacks Greatest Since Verdun

Five Days of Continuous Herculean Assault By Crown Prince's Troops Have Brought Them Nothing But Terrible Losses---Expected "Great Victory" Failed to Materialize---Canadians Are Successful in Raids Around Avion.

A SUMMARY OF TO-DAY'S WAR CABLES

(By Henry Wood, United Press Staff Correspondent.)

WITH THE FRENCH ARMIES IN THE FIELD, July 23.—Germany has found the Chemin Des Dames another Verdun.

To-day, five days of continuous, herculean assault by the Crown Prince's troops, have brought them nothing except losses unequalled by German troops since the attack on Verdun, in April, 1916.

From the viewpoint of quantity and equality of effectives employed the endless succession of the attacks, the fierceness of the fighting, and the German losses, the Chemin Des Dames' fighting has not been equalled since the Verdun campaign around Vaux.

There is every indication that the enemy staged its assault on Craonne, the Californie Casemates, Hurtebise, Cerny and Bray, with the idea that the Crown Prince would be able to telegraph the Reichstag by Thursday the numbers of a "great victory" on the western front.

PARIS, July 23.—Extremely violent attacks were again launched by the Germans against the French lines about Craonne last night.

The War Office to-day announced that the enemy penetrated French first lines positions on Craonne Plateau. Later they were driven out by strong counter attacks, except from positions held on a small portion of California Plateau.

The fighting lasted until late into the night, the official statement said. The Germans returned to the attack after being driven from the trenches first captured, but were unable to dislodge the French forces.

"The Plateau of Craonne was violently bombarded and attacked all evening," the statement said. The Casemates were subjected to renewed desperate German assaults which penetrated the French first line. They were immediately thrown back nearly everywhere.

"The combat raged until late at night. The Germans, despite furious onslaughts, were unable to dislodge the French, and all attacks on our communication trenches were fruitless.

WASHINGTON, July 23.—Plans for calling up drafted men for examination are nearly completed. A second group of National Guards men will be ordered out Wednesday for training. Differences over ship construction, in the Denman-Goethals row, will be settled by President Wilson. Congress is clearing the way for revenue measures. There is still much tangling of red tape, delay, haggling and much grabbing after the war dollar. But more rapid progress from now on was officially predicted. The Russian situation is far from encouraging, though authorities here are staking much on the ability of Premier Kerensky to save Russia from military impotence and internal chaos. One point of delay in America's programme lies in the National Guard situation. Many of the units called out will not see camps for weeks yet, due to delay in construction work, caused, army men charge, by political interference with camp section sites.

PARIS, July 23.—France approves the way in which its governmental and military chiefs are conducting the war. The fact that the Senate in secret session had formally and unanimously voted confidence in the Ribot Ministry, was announced to-day. The Upper Chamber took occasion again to thank the French armies and those of France's allies, and specifically approved the Government's declaration of its plans for the general conduct of the war. Hope was expressed that all propaganda against the discipline and security of the nation had stopped. Prior to the vote former Premier Clemenceau was vigorously cheered when he bitterly assailed the pacifists. Premier Ribot to-day announced his appreciation of the vote of confidence. "I will now be able to govern with a stronger hand," he asserted. "I rejoice in the Senate's support."

BIG VOTE OF CREDIT WILL BE ASKED FOR

LONDON, July 23.—In the Commons to-morrow the Government will ask for a vote of credit of 650 million pounds, the largest single vote since the outbreak of the war. It will bring the total for the war to 5,292 million pounds.

WASHINGTON, July 23.—"The Reichstag majority parties have forced the German Government to declare a renunciation of annexation and indemnities," said the Dutch newspaper Nieuwe Courant, according to despatches received to-day at the State Department.

GERMANS CLAIM RUSSIANS RETIRING.

COPENHAGEN, July 23.—Despatches received from Germany seek to convey the impression that the Russian front north of the Dniester is tottering, and that it is evident that the Russian seventh army south of the Zlochow gap, affretted by pressure on the flank, is also beginning to retire. Russians have destroyed bridges.

SUCCESSFUL RAIDS SOUTH OF AVION.

LONDON, July 23.—Extensive raiding operations were reported to-day by Field Marshal Haig. South of Avion a successful local operation last night reached all objectives. Many prisoners were taken, fifty-one having been brought in when the British Commander's report was filed. The raiders suffered little loss.

The successful raiding operations reported about Avion by Field Marshal Haig to-day were carried out by the Canadians.

LONDON, July 23.— The Russians have evacuated Tarnopol, the Galician stronghold, without a struggle, according to authoritative word received here late to-day.

LONDON, July 23.— The resumption of active fighting in Palestine, around Beersheba, forty miles distant from Jerusalem, was recounted in a report from the Egyptian headquarters to-day.

TOURISTS ARE FREE TO ENTER

WASHINGTON, July 23.—American tourists are free to enter Canada without passports the State Department was advised to-day.

PILGRIMAGE CANCELLED.

No Trip to Ste. Anne's This Year Because of Railway Difficulties.

The annual pilgrimage to Ste. Anne de Beaupre on July 26th has been cancelled this year on account of the difficulties the railway experience, and the policy of curtailing traffic to bare necessities.

ELECTRIC STORM PLAYED ABOUT THE CITY ON SATURDAY

House and Trees Were Struck But No Serious Damage Reported Crops Suffered Slightly

SOME OF THE EFFECTS

In the wake of Saturday afternoon's thunderstorm, one of the liveliest, loudest and wettest of the season, were the usual tales of the vagaries of the electric element which, Hunlike, causes most fright among women and children. Most men manage to maintain a superior poise that in many cases barely masks an inward quaking. The reports indicate that there was little damage on Saturday to the crops in this district. A few fields of grain were beaten down, but it was stated that they had suffered but little.

Hit a House.

An electric bolt hit a chimney on Mr. John Miller's house, 22 Wolsley Street. It cut a deep score in the brickwork from the chimney top straight down the outside wall and apparently disappeared in the ground. Mr. Miller was close to the stove that connected with the chimney, but felt no effects of the current. He was sure some neighbour's house had been struck, and rushed out, unaware that the current had come so close home.

At Rye's Boathouse.

H. B. Rye's boathouse afforded a dress circle view of the electric demonstration at the foot of George Street. A tree or two were hit, and with the loudest reverberation of the display an electric streak hit the river in front of the boathouse. Mr. Chris. Reidel who, with his wife and child, had been down the river, was just getting out of his boat when the flash was doused in the water nearby. He experienced all the sensations of a minor shock of electricity, and the twenty-five or more picnicers in the boathouse not only saw the flash but also smelt the sulphurous odor that hung in the air after it disappeared. It was stated that this huge spark ricochetted along the water in full view of the shelter of the boathouse.

At South Beach Too.

The Automobile Association's outing to South Beach ran into a storm that some of the members describe as one of the severest in their experience. Several trees were struck, and one of them ripped into splinters that provided souvenirs of the picnic. Some of the motor men were in the water while the storm was at its height, and when an electric bomb burst close to the shore line all of them felt the shock as part of it was conducted through the water. Several of them shouted out that they had been hit, and the general effect was of a proximity too near to be comfortable.

Telephone Lines Out.

The rural telephone lines to Otonabee and Ennismore were both put out of commission.

Petrograd Assassins Are Lynched In The Streets

PETROGRAD, July 23.—Three occupants of an automobile, a soldier, a sailor and a civilian, were lynched in the streets after they had fired shots into a group of officers and soldiers in front of the People's Palace to-day. A score were wounded by the shots. Admiral Verderefsky, commanding the Baltic fleet, was arrested on a charge of communicating a secret Government telegram to a committee of his sailors.

Peterborough Names Again Figure In The Casualty List To-day

Ptes. Wegg and Ball Formerly of the 93rd Battalion Have Been Wounded—Pte. Hugh Carmichael Operated On for Appendicitis—To-day's General Military News.

WOUNDED.

Pte. Ernest Wegg, formerly of 93rd Battalion, Peterborough.

Pte. J. A. Ball, formerly of the 93rd Battalion.

Pte. C. Ketchen, Canadian Infantry, Havelock.

ILL.

Pte. Hugh Carmichael, Canadian Infantry, son of Dr. Carmichael, Peterborough.

PTE. R. E. WEGG

Mrs. Annie Wegg received official word on Saturday that her husband, Pte. Robert Ernest Wegg, formerly of the 93rd Battalion, has been admitted to No. 13 Field Ambulance, on July 1st, suffering from a gunshot wound in the hand.

Pte. Wegg went overseas with the 93rd Battalion and was afterwards transferred to the 52nd Battalion at the front. The Examiner has published some very interesting letters from him, one appearing a few days ago.

PTE. J. A. BALL.

Pte. J. A. Ball of Lakefield, who went overseas as a Sergeant with the 93rd Battalion, is officially reported wounded. Pte. Ball enlisted with the Peterborough battalion in the late autumn of 1915, and was a Sergeant in the Lakefield platoon.

PTE. C. KETCHEN.

Pte. C. Ketchen of Havelock is among the district names on to-day's casualty list.

PTE. CARMICHAEL.

Dr. Carmichael has received a message from his son, Pte. Hugh Carmichael, stating that he had been operated on for appendicitis on July 5th and was going on well. Pte. Carmichael, who was a student at Queen's University, enlisted with the Divisional Ammunition Column and went overseas with a draft from that unit. On arriving in England, however, he was transferred to the Infantry. He was taken ill while enjoying a leave in Edinburgh and was operated on in the Scottish capital.

Mr. R. Bradfield has received the following letter from her son, Sergt. F. Bradfield who was wounded some time ago:

Woodcote Park Hospital,
Epsom

Dear Mother,—Received your letter this morning, dated May 20, and one May 28. I am back to Woodcote again, came here on Friday last and not feeling too bad. You said some thing about being in No. 13 Canadian Hospital, Bologne. I only was there over night. The M. O. here told me yesterday I could have sick leave now any time, so I may go out for 10 days to the same place I was last time I had leave from France. I don't think I will get to Canada, and any how three months is not enough; the trip over and back again is too tiresome and I have no use for the water. We are badly wanted in France at the present time.

I would like to hear those fellows pass a remark about liking to see England beat, I would get them about two years' hard labour Wait till we return some of those fellows will have to crawl into their hole and stay there. We don't consider it murder to kill a few of them just to scare the rest. I may get some kind of a job in England and they are sending a bunch of old N. C. O's to the States for instructors in trench warfare. I may get a chance for that, in fact, I hardly know what to do. Sometimes I get fed-up so much I wish I was in the trenches again. But, of course, that is only natural in the army.

I got a lot of back mail the other day, but no parcel from Mrs. Beavis. I got your parcel it was O.K. and one from Viola. There is no use in sending any parcels for a while for I don't know where I will be now for any length of time. The Doctor here told me it is not safe to operate, I got hurt inside. The only thing to do is carry on and wait, for results may come alright, and may take sick again any time. Something in my left side effects my kidneys, a drink of water will nearly double me up any time. I think the bottom rib is broke myself, it feels just like it's sticking into some thing. I don't know how they got the idea of a gun shot, I never was touched with anything. Got buried up by a shell, about six tons of concrete and timber on top of my legs and back and the Germans pounding the brains out of me with their rifle. I think I have killed about two hundred of them that I saw, and a lot more with bombs that I didn't see, and for this I want a few more. If I ever have the luck to mix with them again, they get no mercy from me. I never touched one of them when he was down and they tried it on me. Now if I ever see one again with both legs off, I will finish him. Well I think that is about all this time. Will write in a day or so again, so will say Good-bye.

Woodcote Park Hospital,
Epsom, England.

KINGSTON, July 23.—Lieut. William George Haslett, of this city, has been awarded the Military Cross for conspicuous bravery at the front. Lieut. Haslett was wounded, but nevertheless rallied his men and gained the objective, capturing a machine gun. For this deed he was awarded the Military Cross.

Lieut. Haslett left Kingston as a sergeant in the 21st battalion. His work at the front was conspicuous, and he received a commission some time after going into the trenches. He is the son of Wm. Haslett, ex-chief engineer of the Royal Military College, and was known in the city. His many friends will be glad to hear of the honour conferred upon him.

PTE. C. A. PENGELLY KILLED.

The Millbrook Reporter says: "Another of our boys has paid the great sacrifice. Pte. Pengelly enlisted early in 1916 and went over a year or so ago in the Pioneer Battalion, afterwards serving as a stretcher-bearer. Dr. Turner, in whose drug store he served for years, received the message from Ottawa on Monday, "killed in action," those brief laconic words that spell sorrow and anguish to the mother and friends at the home in South Monaghan, and sincere sympathy from us all. How long, how long, must the conflict go on till liberty is assured and Germany's devilshness is outdone.

Word has been received from Lieut. Jack McNabb of the 93rd Battalion, that he has been given a furlough to Canada and is sailing on the first available steamer.

SERGT. ROY SHORTS.

THE RUSSIAN FRONT IS BREAKING BEFORE ENEMY

RUSSIA'S MOST SERIOUS CRISIS IS BEING REACHED

Disaffection in the Army Is Permitting Teutons to Advance While Some Elements At Home Are Conspiring Against the Government

RUSSIANS RETREATING

LONDON, July 23. — Russia's gravest crisis was being reached today. Disaffection in the army, abetted by pacifist organizations of suspicious pro-German inclinations and the open mutiny of troops, was permitting Teutonic troops to advance unhindered. At home, the same pacifist elements were conspiring to oppose the Government. Premier Kerensky has left for the front, according to Petrograd despatches, alive to the imperative necessity of making the mutinous soldiers reform their ranks and fight to repel the invading Teutons. The Government has issued a powerful appeal to the people, appealing for unity, and declaring, "The fateful hour has struck." German troops are now already established in the suburbs of Tarnopol, and all the ground gained by Gen. Kornieff's offensive has been lost. Moreover, the steady retreat of the Russian mutineers on other parts of the Galician front threatens long established Russian positions.

The Kaiser has left Berlin for the Eastern front to stimulate his troops to renewed activity. Berlin claims of to-day detailed the yielding "under pressure" of the whole Sereth line. The retreat of the Russian troops over a front of thirty odd miles was announced.

STORM BLEW WIRES DOWN

The storm which swept over the city on Saturday afternoon kept the trouble department of the Fire Department busy for several hours after the storm. Wires were down all over the city. Chief Howard covered the entire trouble area in the new car, and by nine-thirty o'clock conditions were restored to normal. Two blocks of the fire alarm system was out of commission for some time.

Mr. W. R. Morris Was Elected To Office

At the thirty-fourth annual general meeting of the Institute of Chartered Accountants of Ontario which was held in Toronto on Saturday, Mr. W. R. Morris, of Peterborough was elected First Vice President for the ensuing year.

Sereth Bridgehead Has Been Reached by Germans—Russians May Have to Retreat From the Region of Halicz.

KERENSKY TO RESCUE

LONDON, July 22.—With the continued forward press of the Germans in the region of Zlochoff, Galicia, the Russian line on the front south of Brzesany is beginning to give way, according to the latest German official communication. The Sereth bridgehead near Tarnapol has been reached by the Germans, and at several points the railway running from Tarnapol to Kosowa has been taken. The Russians in their retreat have set on fire the town of Tarnapol and villages to the east. Should the Russian line immediately south of Brzesany give way, it is probable that the Russians will be forced to retreat from the region of Halicz.

M. Kerensky, the Russian Premier, who commanded the Russian forces when they started their offensive in Galicia early in July, again has gone to the fighting front, probably in an effort to put down the disaffection among the troops and have them face the enemy again. A proclamation issued by the Russian Provisional Government recognizes the seriousness of the situation, and announces that it is the duty to throw its entire strength against the foe and defend the Administration against counter revolutionary attempts.

Emperor William also is reported to have started for the eastern front.

THE RUSSIAN REPORT.

The official statement from Russian headquarters to-day reads:

"South-west of Dviask, in the direction of Vilna and Baranovichi, an intense artillery duel is proceeding. West of Tarnopol the enemy continues to attack in the direction of Tarnopol and towards the south along the Strips.

"Our troops have shown complete disobedience towards their commanders and are continuing their retreat beyond the Sereth. Only the 155th Division resisted in the region of Dolgeanka. Our armored cars fired on German cavalry on the Tarnopol road.

"Towards the evening of July 18, our troops made a stand on the Sereth on the Salojoe-Tarnopol-Tychkomse front. The village of Zagorbilia, a suburb of Tarnopol is in the hands of the enemy.

"In spite of our superiority in numbers in regions attacked, our retreat was almost interrupted. This is the result of the instability of our troops, disregard for military orders and the propaganda of the Maximalists.

"On the river Lomnica, after a bombardment, the enemy took the offensive in the regions of the villages of Babino and Studsianka, and forced our troops to evacuate Babino and cross to the right bank of the Lomnica. On the rest of the front there was rifle firing.

"The Roumanian and Caucasus fronts are unchanged."

THE AUSTRIAN STATEMENT

To-day's Austrian official statement says:

"The fighting in Eastern Galicia is developing into a formidable blow against the Russian arms. Yesterday afternoon our allies forced their way forward from Tarnopol to as far as the Sereth bridgehead. During the night the railway line from Kosowa to Tarnopol was reached at several points.

"The Rumian masses south-east of Brzesany are yielding. A movement on Kosowa has begun. The town of Tarnopol and numerous villages east of the Sereth are in flames. Much war material was captured in Jemirna. The number of prisoners has not yet been enumerated.

"On the lower Narayuvka River the artillery duel yesterday increased to considerable intensity.

"In the Carpathian there were local skirmishes."

SOLDIERS AND TOBACCO.

In the United States, as in Canada, the question has arisen whether cigarettes should be sent to soldiers, says the Toronto Star. The Indianapolis News says that smoking generally is an expensive and foolish habit, a judgment which many of us would regard as needlessly stern. But it thinks the boys at the front should be allowed to smoke. Those who enjoy the comforts of home, it says, do not realise what the deprivation of this comfort would mean to soldiers, drenched in mire and blood, and harassed as never men have been before with all the diabolical instruments of torture and death that ingenuity can devise:

"Anyone who has seen the realistic pictures of soldiers going into action smoking cigarettes must have felt a sense of relief that men could smoke in spite of the horrors around them. Sergeant McClintock, of the Canadian Grenadiers, in a recent speech in this city, said: 'You will see soldiers go over the top with a 'fag' in their lips. Frequently it is still there when their work is done.'"

In this case soldiers must be regarded as the best judges of what they want, and from all accounts it would be as cruel to deprive them of tobacco as of surgical dressings.

THAT EXTRA MONEY.

The Militia Department seems to have an unlucky gift of making itself unpopular in its treatment of returned soldiers. Three months ago the Government announced that it had been decided to give three months' pay and allowances to all overseas men upon their discharge from active service, and that this would apply to the 15,000 or more who were already home. It was also announced that this money would be paid in three instalments at the end of May, June and July. The natural result was that every returned man was on the qui vive for the extra money. The end of May failed to see its arrival, the end of June brought no cheque, and with July drawing to a close only half a dozen of Peterborough's returned soldiers have received the first instalment of the promised money, and now they complain that although the announcement said "pay and allowances," which invariably includes subsistence allowance, the latter has been omitted. It would have made matters much more pleasant for the Government if they had withheld the announcement of the grant until they were ready to pay the money, and if they had made no mention of allowances. The men will undoubtedly eventually get the promised extra remuneration, but the unbusinesslike manner in which the matter has been handled has had the effect of making the gift less appreciated than it should be.

AUTOMOBILE "PARKING" SPACE.

The proposal to provide in Peterborough parking space for automobiles finds support in the attraction such a facility should offer to the steadily increasing number of automobile owners in this district. Farmers are realising the value of the automobile to them, and with a good roads system in this county the advantage of motor transportation in the rural communities will be greatly enhanced. Peterborough's position as the centre of a large agricultural district, dotted with many villages, naturally forms a common market place, but as the automobile gradually replaces the horse on the country roads the more remote sections are brought closer. Distances are not so formidable, especially during all but the winter season, and if this city can afford special inducements for automobile owners their consideration should not be delayed. A "parking" service by means of which cars could be left in the care of a city official while the farmers transact business here ought to be appreciated.

On the other hand, since the automobile is regarded as an evidence of prosperity it should be to the advantage of the city to attract their owners to trade here.

There are indications to-day that the farmer of this province is about to step into a large field of interest and influence, and in this section Peterborough is a natural centre for their assemblies. Hence, the city should prepare to extend a warmer reception than it has shown in the past, and the proposed service is one of many attractions that are suggested.

CONSCRIPTION UNDER THE VOLUNTARY SYSTEM.

The more the system under which the Canadian army is managed is studied the more one is convinced that it is voluntary only in name, and this conviction is borne out by the experience of many recruits who have joined the colours in the past four or five months. It may be surprising to many readers to know that recently artillery recruits, both from the heavy batteries, field batteries, and ammunition columns have been converted into infantry on their arrival in England. Technically, these recruits can claim no breach of faith on the part of the authorities, because their attestation papers bind them to serve in any branch of the service to which they are assigned, but they are justified, nevertheless, in the opinion that they were recruited under false pretences. Eloquent recruiting officers were sent throughout Canada, appealing for men to man the guns and picturing the attractions of artillery life in glowing colours. Posters and newspaper advertisements told the same story and, influenced by these appeals, many young men came forward and volunteered. What has been the sequel? As soon as they arrived in England they were turned over to infantry reserve battalions for training, and will be packed off to France with rifle and bayonet. That is indeed conscription and even more rigorous than under the military service bill, for the latter concerns itself with the men who have not offered themselves, while the system outlined above hits young men who have given their services voluntarily, with the understanding that they would serve with the guns.

That is one phase of conscription under the present voluntary system, and here is another that has caused much justifiable complaint: A man applies for enlistment in an overseas unit, is passed by the doctors, and taken on the strength. If he is married his wife receives assigned pay, separation allowance, and a grant from the Patriotic Fund, and is able to keep herself and family. Then the man, perhaps, breaks down under the training and is unable to "carry on" for overseas work. A medical board looks him over, and he is struck off the strength of the overseas unit. In nine cases out of ten he is perfectly fit to return to the duties of civil life and support his family. But is he allowed to do so? Not much! He is transferred to the Special Service Company, and because that unit is not for overseas service the Patriotic Fund allowances is immediately cut off. There is no choice in the matter—nothing voluntary at all. The man must continue to do guard work, fatigue, or whatever duties they can find for him in the Special Service Company, while his wife and family, no matter how large the latter may be, have to live on the $20 separation allowance, and the husband's assigned pay, which cannot be more than $20.

Then again, there is the case of the man who has been overseas and has been invalided home through wounds or sickness. Until recently these men have been given treatment in convalescent homes, and then discharged to resume civilian life. Now, however, these men are not being discharged, but are being compelled to serve in the Special Service Company. Imagine the feelings of a man who has served a year or more in France, and been severely wounded, when he is brought home to Canada and instead of being discharged is forced to guard bridges, build roads, put up tents and perform other fatigues at Barriefield. A Peterborough soldier recently home from overseas, who was shot through both legs, but who is making a good recovery, told the Examiner on Saturday that he had been offered a position of foreman, at $4.00 per day, and although in a short time he will be physically fit to undertake the duties he will be unable to do so because he must report for duty at Barriefield, where the Special Service Company is, according to reports, already larger than there is any real need of in view of the work that is to be done.

It would seem only good business on the part of the militia authorities that where a man such as this can be assimiliated into civilian life that he should be discharged. Returned men are complaining that the authorities, in keeping them loafing around Barriefield, are unfitting them for civil life, and there is much truth in their complaint.

WEEKLY FINANCIAL REVIEW

Course of the Market.

Last week's stock market has had two kinds of uncertainties with which to deal. The more obvious of the two was the German cabinet crisis resulting in the resignation of von Bethmann-Hollweg after holding the Chancellorship since the days preceding the war. Whatever may prove to be the extent or intensity of the domestic situation politically within the German Empire, it can hardly be doubted that the change of Chancellors would not have occurred had the progress of the war been eminently satisfactory to Berlin. The domestic uncertainty has been the halting progress toward settling the policy of price-fixing in the iron and steel industry. It should be noted that the delays are the normal incident of popular government. If this country were subject to institutions of a Prussian character, the wish of the executive administration could hardly be discussed with impunity, and there would be no chance of smoothing out difficulties by conferences before the die was cast. While the break in the market has been considerable in the case of United States Steel common, the most potent indication of what may come next might be found in the almost universally bearish attitude of professional traders. When bearish sentiment has developed gradually the day when it seems to have converted most everybody is often the time when well-advised "shorts" begin to cover, and such a tendency often begins a new upward movement. Another element which has tended to add to the uncertainty has been the question as to the final form of the new war tax measure, particularly in regard to excess profits. Steel stocks, steamship shares, and oil issues appear to have the best of the outlook as compared with some of the industrial specialties and old-line issues which used to be dominant. The old saying that it is a long road that knows no turn is applicable to a market which has been sagging, as well as to sharp advances. Meanwhile the progress of legislation in Washington is being watched very keenly, and almost equal attention is naturally centred upon the German situation, so far as it can be understood on this side of the water under present conditions.

The Business Situation.

In the iron and steel industry there is almost a complete absence of inquiries looking toward new orders because of the delay in the price-fixing re-adjustments that would have far-reaching effects "Iron Age" has this to sage to business calling for the same entertained for some weeks of possible readjustments this would have far-reaching effects were sharpened into real prospects by the President's message to business calling for the same prices to the public as those fixed by the Government. Steel producers have expected to accept special prices from the Government and to have its requirements take up an increasing share of their output; but Chairman Gary in his address to the Iron and Steel Institute late in May said that they also expected that as costs of production were advancing the Government would be willing to increase its purchasing prices accordingly. The conference at Washington not only pointed in the other direction, but also foreshadowed an effort by the Government to get like low prices for its Allies. The effect on buyers was just what was to be expected. Throughout consuming industries the one policy is the postponement of buying until the Federal Trade Commission's cost-finding inquiry is finished." In regard to general conditions, Dun's "Review" says: "The economic problems occasioned by the war are becoming more sharply defined, and doubts about the readjustment still to be experienced impose restraint on business in not a few directions. With price uncertainties continuing, and with the effects of the export embargo yet to be determined, there is hesitancy and waiting in many quarters, and in some instances rather more evidence of the seasonal lull than appeared last year. To a not inconsiderable extent the lessening of regular demands in certain leading branches is attributable to the disinclination or inability of producers to engage themselves further; but buyers are also disposed to proceed with greater caution pending a clearer insight into the future, and purchasing by consumers is more conservative."

Other Factors.

Railroad stocks as a class are reflecting natural state of mind of the investing public who can hardly judge as yet how far the benefits of the policy of mobilization of national resources will tend to afford a partial remedy for the situation which in the opinion of the managements of the roads themselves appeared to demand an increase in freight rates throughout the country. It seems to be the concensus of opinion that this problem will work itself out in time to bring public opinion to bear in the autumn, provided the recently denied increase is really needed. General banking conditions continue good and other factors apart from those directly concerning the prosecution of the war are more or less negligible.

Press On Renewed Ship Controversy

"SHOULD BE SETTLED"

Cleveland Plain Dealer:—"The public does not know whether Denman or Goethals is right in his contentions. It does not care which is right. It does believe, however, that the difference between the two officials should be settled without delay; if not by voluntary agreement between the two, then by action of some higher authority."

"A PUBLIC SCANDAL"

Brooklyn Eagle:—"The country is rightly indignant over a personal row that has become nothing less than a public scandal. Sentiment is not so divided that any great difficulty should be found in settling the matter in a way that would insure the building of the greatest possible number of ships—steel as well as wooden—in the quickest possible time."

"IS DETRIMENTAL"

Troy Record:—"This is detrimental not only to speedy ship construction but also to public confidence in the administration. There should be drastic action taken immediately to clarify the atmosphere. This might be done by refining unmistakably the respective powers of the Shipping Board and the Emergency Fleet Corporation and leaving no cause for dispute."

"HAS ACCENTUATED IT."

Baltimore News:—"The quarrel stands precisely where it did several weeks ago, when the public was given to understand that the President had settled it and had given Goethals a free hand. Subsequent developments have shown that the President's interference, so far from composing the dispute, has accentuated it. The situation should not be permitted to continue. It is becoming a scandal."

"IT IS FAILING."

Philadelphia Public Ledger:—Doubtless Admiral von Tirpitz would be content to call the fight between Mr. Denman and General Goethals a very pretty quarrel as it stands. Those who in time of international crisis consult the sacred Scriptures might seek out the text about a house divided against itself. Certainly the President, in dividing authority between the two men, has divided our shipbuilding war against Germany, and it is failing."

"CHRONIC HARMONY."

New Orleans Times-Picayune:—"If the President finds it necessary to intervene and untangle a row squabble he should settle it in a way to insure against further tangles. The shipbuilding programme should not be exposed to interruptions and delays by wrangling among those in authority over it. Surely the chief executive can find a remedy for a chronic inharmony in this vital business of building ships, and ships and yet more ships to beat the U-boat campaign."

"CO-OPERATION IMPOSSIBLE"

Pittsburg Dispatch:—"Obstruction, rather than construction, has been the chief product of the five months. This cannot be continued indefinitely. It is plainly evident that co-operation between these factors is impossible. The attempt to patch up a peace by a division of authority has failed."

"CONTROVERSY WILL RESULT"

Rochester Union and Advertiser:—"It is now apparent that so long as these two men have overlapping power there will be trouble, and we may be nearly certain that so long as any two men have concurrent jurisdiction in such a matter as this, controversy, and consequently delay, will result."

Knights Are Raising $1,000,000 War Fund

NEW YORK, July 23.—A fund of $1,000,000 will be raised by the Knights of Columbus to meet the expenses of erecting and maintaining sixteen social centres for Roman Catholics who will be drafted into the national army and sent to the various cantonments in different sections of the country. This week has been designated as campaign week for the fraternity and the $1,000,000 assessment will be levied on the members, it was announced by the War Committee of the New York Chapter.

The decision of the National Board of Directors of the Knights of Columbus to undertake the work of providing recreation for Roman Catholics and men of other denominations in the national army was the result of an experiment on the Mexican border last year. There fifteen buildings were erected at important military centres and the work done received enthusiastic commendation from soldiers.

Soon after the declaration of a state of war with Germany a committee conferred with Newton D. Baker, Secretary of War, and obtained permission to continue the social centre work at the national army's cantonments. In the work the Knights of Columbus have been given the same status as has been accorded the Young Men's Christian Association.

In addition to providing entertainment and amusement for the soldiers the Knights of Columbus will undertake the support of priests who will be needed, but who have not been provided under the rule governing the number of chaplains in the army.

Complains Of Ill Treatment

Peterboro' Sergeant Says Hospital He is in is a Disgrace to Canada

Following is a copy of a letter received by Mrs. Plumpton from her son, Sergt. W. E. Plumpton, now on leave in England.

Ramsgate, Kent,
June 30, 1917

Dear Mother,—Just a line to let you know that I am fine and hope this will find you all the same.

This is some place it makes me wish I was anything but a Canadian, for this place is a disgrace to Canada. The treatment of our wounded who have done the fighting is not as good as a rich man would give a dog and a tramp on at that, one might better be in prison as he would be treated a lot better. They give us one pound ($5) a month, that has to do you for what ever you want and there is never a thing given you. You must buy all your own smokes and they will not even let us have our own clothes to wear and the suit that they give us to wear in hospital is a disgrace to anything; it would disgrace a German, let alone a Canadian.

I would like some of the Red Cross people to come around and to see what it is.

And there the papers are full of how a wounded Canadian is used—it is all d—— lies for in a Canadian hospital Canadians are used as dogs by these Safety First——who are over here for a good time.

The only place that they treat us at all like a man is in a English hospital where there is no Canadian nurses. I would like this to go to the paper so that the Red Cross people at home would know about it. Well I will close. I am going down to see Ed. the end of next week. Bye bye. With love and best wishes to mother.

From EDISON

Mrs. Plumpton states that she has sent money to her son and he has never received even a letter since he first went into the hospital on the 22nd of April.

years of age and previous to enlisting was a printer by trade, having worked for some time in that capacity on the Belleville "Ontario." He left there to take a course in linotype operating and had just completed the course when he enlisted.

The deceased soldier was well-known in this district and was a splendid young man. His death will be greatly mourned by a wide circle of friends. He leaves to mourn his loss besides his father, two brothers, Harry of Peterborough, and Fred of Newburg, and one sister, Mrs. J. A. Jarrell, Albert street.

Mrs. McMahon, 115 Robertson street, has received the following letter:

France, May 20.

Dear Mrs. McMahon,— It is with great regret that I am called upon to extend the sympathy of the non-commissioned officers and men of my platoon to you in your recent bereavement through the death of Pte. Buckingham, killed in action.

As he was not one of my section I had not the opportunity to make his personal acquaintance. However he and I had been together frequently and I am pleased to tell you I had found him to be a willing soldier and ready to go where duty led. It was on the morning of the 9th of May during our advance on the enemy positions that a heavy hostile shell fire was opened upon our right flank. Our men faced it bravely. Some of us, fortunately, came through unharmed; some were wounded, while others — Pte. Buckingham one of them—made the supreme sacrifice.

We feel the loss of our comrades, but they died with their faces to the enemy. Of that we are proud. They have made a sacrifice that cannot be excelled. Those they have left far away in the homeland have also made a sacrifice equally as noble.

Let us hope these sacrifices shall not be in vain—and they shall not.

Sincerely,

COAL CITY MENACED

Haig's Forces Make Steady Progress Towards Lens.

Haig is steadily driving towards the coal city. Large numbers of men and guns have been captured in the month's operations between Messines and Wytschaete Ridge. The foe's position at Lens grows daily more precarious. The mobilisation of the human resources of Great Britain is proving superior to that of the enemy. There must be equal mobilization of Canadian resources. Every man and woman in the Dominion must be animated by the spirit of the soldiers in the firing line. The country must adopt the motto of the National Service Board—"Serve by giving." It must observe that motto by the immediate practice of thrift. It must abandon luxuries, eliminate waste, practice economy. And it must invest the money thus saved in War Savings Certificates. Every dollar the country can spare is needed for war purposes. Every man and woman in the country is faced with a direct war duty. Save your dollars and invest them in Government war bonds, where they can be used for national purposes and employed to the best interest of the country.

MANY BOOTS STOLEN IN HOTELS

BERLIN, July 23.—The time-honoured custom among hotel guests of depositing one's footwear in the corridor outside the door to have it polished is likely to come into disuse for the time being. The growing demand for shoes, even castoffs, has encouraged thefts of fotwear in hotels.

In order to rescue hotel guests from their predicament in the case of such losses, the Imperial Clothing Bureau has ordained that purchasing certificates be issued without the ordinary restrictions whenever the applicant is able to prove that he has been robbed of his boots in a hotel.

Cadore, or "Caddy," as he is called by his team mates, is one of the owners of serial No. 809, and this was the eight hundred and twenty-fourth number drawn from the glass globe in the great lottery in Washington on Friday.

Cadore is twenty-one years old, single, and one of the biggest pitchers in the National League. He stands over six feet and is nearly as heavy as big Jeff Pfeffer. Cadore came to the Brooklyn team this season from the Montreal Club, where he had been farmed out for two years. He is a Brooklyn boy by birth.

Other Brooklyn players who discovered their serial numbers in the papers yesterday are further back than Cadore, Pfeffer, and Sherrod Smith, the southpaw, are in the 2,000 class. Pfeffer's serial number is 940, and his call number 2,922. Smith's serial number is 881, and his call number 2,809.

Frank O'Rourke, the young third baseman from the defunct Utica Club, is in the 7,000 class. His serial number is 361.

Casey Stengel and Jimmy Hickman, the little outfielder, both know their serial numbers, but they could not discover them among those published in the afternoon papers of yesterday. The other players have wired for their numbers.

Stengel's serial number is 1,033, and Hickman's 1,739.

Eddie Roush, the outfielder of the Reds, is among the draft numbers in the 2,200 class. His serial number is 2,169.

DIRE NEED OF MEN TO HARVEST THE CROPS.

Farmers Who Managed to Put Them in Alone Must Now Have Help.

COBOURG, July 23.—The cry for help for the haying and harvest is becoming more insistent in this district. "I managed to get the crop in," said a Hamilton township farmer, whose only son is with a siege battery overseas, and who is endeavouring to work his farm alone, "but now I must have help." Very little hay has been cut yet, he states and the grain will be ready to cut before the farmer, who is playing a lone hand—and there are many such—can get the hay cured and in the barns. Crops are looking well, but in this district there is dire need of men to help harvest them.

RISBERG STARS; WHITE SOX WIN

His Fielding, Batting and Base-Running Helped Beat Red Sox.

CHICAGO, July 22. — Risberg's fielding, batting and base running, and Russell's good pitching enabled Chicago to shut out Boston to-day, 2 to 0. Risberg doubled in the second inning, and went to third when Schalk singled. Russell fouled to Gardner, and Risberg dashed for home after the catch. The ball beat him, but he slid viciously to the plate and upset Agnew, who dropped the ball. In the sixth inning he sent Gandil home from second on a long single. His fielding saved Russell several times. Russell allowed the world's champions but four scattered hits and only two men reached second base. The score:

	R.	H.	E.
Boston	000000000	0	4 1
Chicago	01000100x	2	13 0

Batteries—Mays, Bader and Agnew, Thomas; Russell and Schalk.

At Cleveland.—Cleveland broke all American League record for the season when it defeated Philadelphia 20 to 6. Bagby, who was knocked out of the box by Philadelphia, on Friday, shut the Athletics out for six innings, when he retired with the score 11 to 0 in his favour. Philadelphia then proceeded to score six runs as a result of Gould's wildness and Lambeth's ineffectiveness. The score:

	R.	H.	E.
Philadelphia	006000402	6	11 4
Cleveland	20010836x	20	17 0

Batteries—Schaer, Bush, Seibold, and Meyer, Schang; Bagby, Gould, Lambeth and Billings.

At Detroit.—New York defeated Detroit 7 to 5 in a thrilling 13-inning game here to-day. Pipp started the final inning with a two-base hit, and a base on balls, two sacrifice hits, and a single followed. Two singles and a sacrifice hit gave the visitors a run in the eleventh inning, but Detroit tied the score when R. Jones came home on Burns' Texas Leaguer to centre. The score:

	R.	H.	E.
New York	012000010010	7	13 2
Detroit	103000000100	5	8 1

Batteries — Caldwell, Cullop, and Walters; Boland, Ehmke and Stanage.

At St. Louis — Plank shut out Washington in the first game to-day, and Ayres turned the tables on St. Louis, shutting them out, 5 to 0, in the second game. In the first game but one Washington player reached third. Washington drove Bothoron from the box in the second inning of the second game after scoring their first runs. The scores:

Peterborough Boy Is Recovering

The following letter was received by Miss L. Fair from her brother, Private W. E. Fair, of the 67th Battalion, Western Scots. Private Fair enlisted in Vancouver. He is a son of Mr. V. B. Fair who resides at 18 Reid street.

The letter reads as follows:

Dear Miss Fair,—Your brother Private W. E. Fair, is here and sends his love. He was hit at 12.30 a.m. on June 26th, with small pieces of shell and is doing well. His wounds sound a lot, but none of them are bad. They are in the back, right shoulder, the left hand and the face. No bones are broken. He will not be disfigured. He is happy, slept well and was so much improved that we sent him to the base this morning. He felt so much better that he sat up for breakfast. He will write again soon.

Yours sincerely,
CHAPLAIN,
67th Batt., Western Scots.

Forty German Planes Brought Down In Past Five Days

Special to The Examiner:

(By William Philip Simms, U. P. Staff Correspondent).

WITH THE BRITISH ARMIES IN THE FIELD, July 23.—Forty German airplanes brought down in five days is one indication of the frenzy of nervousness with which the Prussians are trying to find out what Field Marshal Haig is preparing for them.

The complacency with which the German Chancellor, Michaelis, announced his satisfaction with all things military is not apparent today on the west front. The curiosity of Boche planes is just one indication of a deep rooted apprehension that Haig is preparing another stroke. Just where this may come is worrying the Germans.

A RAID BY CANADIANS.

Wearing gas masks and moving like spectres in the night, Canadian troops early this morning penetrated the German lines to depth of five hundred yards on a seven hundred yard front east of Avion. It was a spectacular local attack of the kind which the British forces have been keeping the Boche nervous for the past few weeks.

Cost Of Living Stirs Britons

As Result Domestic Politics Is Still in State of Unrest

LONDON, July 22.—Domestic politics despite recent Cabinet changes, are still in a state of unrest. The Government is determined, as a needful war measure, to push the corn production bill through all stages before Parliament rises for the summer recess. The bill, which proposes to pay fixed prices to farmers for cereal crops for a number of years after the war as a means of inducing them to plow up grass lands and immediately sow cereals, is meeting with strong opposition in the House of Commons especially from the members of the Asquith party. The bill proposes to pay farm labourers a minimum wage of twenty-five shillings weekly.

The opponents of the bill contend that, reckoned by the present high cost of living, this is an inadequate wage, and their strong support of the amendment presented by George J. Wardle last week, making thirty shillings the minimum, threatened the Government with the prospect of defeat, and division on the amendment had to be deferred.

The Government contends that acceptance of this amendment would wreck the bill. Division on the amendment is expected to-morrow.

EIGHT COMMISSIONS REPORT.

Eight Commissions appointed by Premier Lloyd George in June to investigate industrial unrest in the country have just presented reports which agree in the main fact that the principal cause of unrest is the increased cost of living, so disproportionate to the advance in wages, and unequal distribution of food supplies. Next in point of importance they put the administration of munitions of war and military facts, which resulted in restriction on personal freedom and lack of confidence in the Government on the question of carrying out its promises to restore trade union customs.

The Commissions make a number of recommendations; one, that the Government should to some extent bear the increased cost of food, and another that "labour should take part in the affairs of the community as partners rather than as servants."

NATATORIUM OPENED.

Kitchener Citizen Constructs it to Give Youth Swimming Instruction.

KITCHENER, July 23. — The Kitchener Natatorium was formally opened yesterday, and was inspected by thousands of citizens. The new swimming tank is one of the largest and most modern of its kind in the Province, and was constructed by Mr. T. H Rieder, President of the Canadian Consolidated Rubber Company, for the purpose of giving the young people of the city an opportunity to learn to swim. The natatorium is located at 121 King Street West, and its equipment throughout is complete in every detail.

Automobile Association's Fine Outing

Spent An Enjoyable Time at South Beach On Saturday

One of the biggest successes in the way of a picnic this season was the family outing held on Saturday at South Beach by the Automobile Association. The motorists, headed by Mr. R. H. Turner and with the cars carrying the bigger baskets well in front, started to the Beach at 2.30 and outside of those detained in mending punctured tires, record time was made.

At the Beach an excellent programme in the way of races and baseball games was carried out between storms. The strict censorship kept by the Association forbids any publicity in the way the names of those successful in the events being printed, however, on the best of authority it has leaked out that Mr. Jefferies won the men's race, Dr. Pulkinghorn running him a close second, whilst Mr. R. Dobie is reported to have won the fat man's race by default. The ladies refused to enter into the sports.

The picnic lunch served on the verandah of the hotel practically wound up the activities, some few enjoying the Beach until 8 o'clock, the party returning to the city enthused by the idea of future events of the same kind.

Those who attended the picnic with their friends and families were: R. H. urner, E. W. Borbridge, J. A. McKone, C. F. Soudon, A. J. Grant, S. C. Gibbs, R. M. Waddell, A. D. Jardine, H. T. McFadden, W. R. Breyfogle, L. Y. eJffries, H. J. Lundgren, J. P. Pulkinghorn, W. C. Campbell, E. G. Hiland, R. Dobie, A. H. Stratton, C. E. Canfield.

Commission System In Police Affairs Approved By Chiefs

Three night sessions, until ten o'clock were necessitated by the lengthy programme of the convention of the Chief Constables' Association of Canada held in Quebec. Chief Thompson was back in his office this morning after a highly profitable week at the convention. Chief Constables from the cities of Canada clear across the country were present. Vancouver meeting Halifax, and they together meeting Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg, and Regina and the representatives of all the leading cities.

One of the important reslutions embodied a recommendation to the Government to take drastic steps to combat the spread of the drug habit in Canada. The suggestion from Kitchener, Ont., that the administration of police departments be returned to City Councils instead of Commissions was also discussed. The opinion of the convention was expressed in a motion by Sir Percy Sherwood, Commissioner of Dominion police and seconded by Col. Grassett of Toronto, urging the retention of the commission plan for the reason that it had been proved the most efficient. It was stated in the convention that where prohibition legislation had been put into force the results were reflected on the decrease of crime and in the number of arrests.

Can't Use Table Linen In Berlin Restaurants

BERLIN, July 23 (via London). — The order which was published recently prohibiting the use of table linen in hotels and restaurants on and after Oct. 1 has created considerable commotion among the proprietors of such establishments. When the need of conserving linen became pressing the Association of Hotelkeepers and Restaurateurs volunteered to refrain from using it on tables which could easily be cleaned, but they wanted to reserve the right to use it for tables which were permanently covered with cloth. The exception is not granted by the new order thus far, but the last word has not been spoken yet. Such tables are mainly in use in the large first-class hotels in Unter den Linden and the various quarters near the Tiergarten, in the restaurants of which all the tables have permanent cloth covers, which at meal times are spread with linen.

The proprietors of these places argue that they could not possibly serve meals without their customary linen to their guests, among whom are many who came to Germany as visitors of the Kaiser, diplomatists Generals of the highest rank, industrial magnates and merchant princes. The first class service, fine table decorations, a few flowers and the snowy linen did much to console the guests with the somewhat Spartan meals— Spartan, at least, compared with former opulence.

Probably the authorities will make some concessions to the first-class hotels if the minor caravanseries do not set up a howl. At Kempinsky's, the largest wine and eating house in Germany, it was feared that trade would fall off enormously if the use of oilcloth at least was not permitted, because it was impossible to keep the wooden tables sufficiently clean during the day, especially as soap and hot water were not plentiful. Many people, it was believed, would prefer to dine at home on what they could find in their depleted larders, preferring cleanliness to whatever luxury could be bought in the restaurants.

Of course, there is already an Ersatz, a substitute, for table linen—washable paper cloth—but it is said that grease and wine stains cannot be removed from it, and that it is dear compared with real linen.

But, despite all these complaints and grim forebodings, it is pretty certain that, linen or no linen, the Berliners will keep on crowding the restaurants.

GERMANS PERMANENTLY MENACED ON DUNES

British Command of Sea Makes Foe's Position Hard to Hold.

LONDON, July 23.—Reuter's correspondent at British Headquarters in France reports:

"The activity of the German artillery has been the feature along the Belgian sand dunes. The Germans attempted to consolidate along the support line, from which they drove back a battalion of the Royal Rifles and Northamptonshires recently, but the position was untenable and they retired. The only territorial result of the attack has been the creation of the widest No Man's Land. The Germans are permanently menaced in this area owing to our command of the sea and the likelihood of long-distance monitor bombardments."

A Friendly Critic of Germany

(A. J. DAWSON)

During the progress of the war we have had paeans of idolization of Germany and everything German, from German pens, and pages of vitriolic abuse and righteous wrath, from the pens of the writers of other nations. And the really impartial student of racial traits and national character has found but little to serve his purpose in any of this mass of material, for the simple reason that the whole of it has been informed far more by individual bias on one side or the other than by any desire to attain truth. There are available, however, other kinds of writings and studies of German character, recent in point of date, and actually, as well as technically neutral in point of view; and these, it need hardly be said, are a good deal more serviceable to the seeker after truth than all the diatribes of the more or less frenzied propagandists of either side.

Eighteen months ago the North American Republic was very definitely a neutral state, and, very naturally, the many millions of Germans resident in that country possessed an influence which sensibly tinged American opinion and feeling with regard to the great war and the people engaged therein. It was then that Mr. Poultney Bigelow, M.A., F.R.G.S., whose name and family have for so many years been associated with all that is best in the history of American diplomacy wrote his book: "Prussian Memories, 1864-1914." Germany and her friends will not soon forget the same author's previous work, "History of the German Struggle for Liberty, 1806-1848" which showed so much insight and sympathetic appreciation into and of German aspirations and efforts. The author entered a boarding school at Bonn, on the Rhine, at the early age of eight years. Bred in the atmosphere of Embassies and Courts, and growing up to speak French and German with the same natural ease that he used his native tongue, this writer's inborn love of adventure subsequently led him into travels more extensive than are possible for ninety-nine out of every hundred men. More than ninety times he crossed the Atlantic, and four times he circumnavigated the globe, in every quarter of which he has studied men and manners, and ripened his shrewd gifts of insight and sympathetic understanding. To this day he cherishes affectionately many German friendships; but these have never blinded him to German failings, though they have enabled him always to regard these with a more kindly and understanding eye than that of any untravelled foreigner. Also, of course, he wrote when the United States and the German Empire were still united by relations as friendly and amicable as any they have ever known. But, he was never a German, either in fact or by adoption; and thus his comments have real interest for the observer and the student. Thus, with regard to his school days in Germany

"I carried away warm affection for my English and American school mates, but for some reason or other the Prussian boys who came only for the day classes seemed to be of another species of the human family. Yet the German walks on two legs like ourselves; he wears clothes, he passes examinations, he is check full conventional forms of social intercourse of book knowledge, and trained to course. Reason argues that his Kultur is magnificent, but we boys could not reason, and I was drawn to those who would play fair and fight fair. If I know an Englishman at all, I know him through and through, and can trust him in fair weather or in foul. I have known hundreds of admirable Germans in the fifty years that have elapsed since the days of Dr. Kortegarn. These have been peasants and princes, priests and professors, editors members of Parliament, poets and painters, and chiefly, of course, officers of the Army and Navy. I have enjoyed their society, for I have asked little in return. Much have I learned from them, and have tried to pay back a part of my debt by speaking the truth when called upon."

On his second evening at school, the youthful Poulteney Bigelow was sharply introduced to Prussian discipline. It was during prayers, when all the boys were standing rigidly to attention. The eight-year old newcomer has fixed his eyes upon some flies on the ceiling when he received a resounding blow on the side of his head which would have floored him, but for the support of his neighbour, and the prayer was interrupted to allow the master to follow up his blow with a withering rebuke to the child for gazing upward.

"At Kortegarn's I learned to appreciate the wholly impersonal brutality of the conscientous Prussian drill-master, and in later years I accepted the existing order of things as being probably well adapted to the particular people over whom this method is mainly applied. One day in the West Indies, a German naval officer took me aboard his ship while the gunnery drill was on. The men appeared to be alert, and I listened with interest to the conversation of my host as we strolled from gun to gun. In the midst of a sentence he stopped, and drawing his hand back as one about to send a ball from centre field to home base he administered a blow on the cheek of a gunner that recalled vividly my experience at Kortegarn's religious exercises. The blow was accompanied by a few sharp words. The officer then smiled pleasantly, and went on with his conversation as might a man who had demolished a mosquito."

Many people of other nations are apt to forget in the face of the loudly proclaimed Deutschland uber Alles how very recent a combination that Deutschland really is. In 1866, as this author reminds us, Bavaria and Hanover were fighting against the Hohensollerns with at least as much fierceness and energy as they now exercise against France and Britain.

"At the swearing in of naval recruits the Emperor (the present Emperor) once thought fit to catechise a Bavarian blue jacket in regard to the duties of a loyal subject, and more particularly his readiness to fight the common enemy. 'And who is the common enemy?' asked William II. 'The Prussian,' answered confidently this truthful child of Munich. The Emperor is said to have laughed long and joyously, but the rest of the story I never heard."

Since the Russian Revolution and the American intervention in the present war, German diplomacy has apparently thought it well to make some show of German official interest in the aspirations of democracy, without, apparently, any very great success in the matter of convincing their own Socialist writers of their sincerity. As a fact, of course, the present regime in Germany is no nearer to even the mildest conception of real democracy than the Germany of Will. I. The whole essence of Prussian statesmanship and of that Prussian spirit which rules the German Empire to-day, is diametrically opposed to the fundamental elements of democratic thought, and could not possibly co-exist with any form of democratic development. In that connection, and with reference to the democratic pretensions Germany has been putting forward for the consideration of the new Russia, the following passage from Mr. Poulteney Bigelow's book is worth some thought:

"In 1863 Prussia played perhaps the most ignoble role in her military history up to that time by offering to assist in capturing and restoring to the Czar the Poles who sought to escape from his then very harsh administration. The houses of Romanoff and Hohensollern were one by consanquinity and unity in political ideals. The old Emperor William visited nowhere with pleasure excepting at the Russian Court, for it was only there that he found the congenial atmosphere of absolute monarchy, untainted by the remotest suspicion of ever having to consult constitutional representatives on any subject . . . It seemed ever a dreadful yesterday to him when amid the hootings of the Berlin people he had been forced to escape from their fury in disguise and find refuge with many another would-be autocrat of that day under the shadows of Westminster. My old friend, Ernest von Bunsen, whose father was Prussian Ambassador in London, has told me of the surprise in the household on answering a ring at the door bell early one morning in 1848. There stood the heir to the Prussian throne, homeless and helpless but for the generosity of a free country. It was Ernst von Bunsen's duty to escort his prince during the sight-seeing of this enforced exile, but I failed to extract from him any admission that this prospective Emperor took interest in anything English beyond the common externals of the average tourist. The marvellous mechanism in the great constitutional machine which has enabled one little isle to radiate the blessings of civil liberty, justice and religious toleration to all the ends of the earth; England's great statesmen, philanthropists, historians and explorers—these were a sealed book to William I. In later years, George von Bunsen, brother of Ernst of London, told me that to this Emperor the world that wore no uniform had no existence, and he illustrated this by saying that when Berlin finally erected a monument to Germany's great poet, Schiller, and begged his Majesty to honour the occasion by his presence, the answer was 'Schiller? I don't remember any such name among my officers!' The King paid no further attention to the matter, and only those are surprised who imagine that the flowers of Parnassus can bloom in the barrack-yard of Potsdam. . . . William II. loved and venerated this old Emperor, for in him he recognized the incarnation of Prussian ideals: a strong military state with just enough constitutional veneer to satisfy the civilian population, but never to such a degree as might even prove inconvenient to the police. It was a grim commentary on the danger of such plans when William I. was succeeded but only for a hundred days by his son, whom the aristocracy looked upon as a menace to their supremacy, Frederick II. was a sick man from the day of his accession to the end. Had he been a Romanoff or included in the pages of Tacitus, posterity would have credited him with a violent death, so unmeasured was the hatred manifested throughout the Prussian nobility for a man suspected of sharing the views of his English wife in matters of government. Had he been a socialist or a paid agent of Queen Victoria, he could not have evoked more slanderous or malicious comments. He was known to have entertained George von Bunsen and many other 'Liberals,' and his wife made no secret of enjoying the society of artistic, scientific and literary notables, without reference to caste. All this was blasphemy in Berlin minds. . . ."

But it is not alone in the political field that the Prussian spirit and Kultur sets a barrier between Germans and the rest of the world, so far as frank, free, friendly intercourse is concerned. The roots of this anti-democratic spirit go deeper than politics, and have their hold in the hearts and minds of the people which has evolved a feudal type of governance that only such an upheaval as the present war can sweep away. Mr. Poulteney Bigelow's book is full of evidence of this. But in this place one further instance only must suffice:

"Sweeping statements are abhorrant to the scientific historian, and when most visitors in Germany are painfully struck by the coarse manner of German young men towards virtue in women, this does not necessarily preclude a proportion of domestic happiness. . . . It is hard to conceive that an English or American girl could be happy under Prussian conditions unless her money had been sufficient to purchase a husband of high station . . . The Prussian has not, as I have before observed, emerged from the barbarism of thought and custom which characterized him in the fifteenth century, when his ancestral swamps were invaded by crusaders who converted him nominally to Christianity, but practically to Prussian Kultur in its most offensive aspect. The word Home, as we understand it, does not exist in Prussia, but in its place are innumerable restaurants and beer gardens. . . . Young men and even children of the better classes are apt to see more of this gregarious pot-house life than of the home with sisters and parents. A little of it goes a long way to one who is not by nature Bohemian, and a decently-bred student of the English-speaking world soon sickens of a society where waitresses and chamber-maids are handled with more freedom than fastidiousness, and where even women of social position are regarded as man's chattel. I have known German students to weep in reciting verses of Goethe or Heine, stand up through long Wagnerian operas in ecstacy of worship, and soon after wards gorge themselves with sausage and beer, resting now and then to rhapsodize on a theme of Kultur or pass a ribald joke with the Bier-madchen. When first I engaged a German governess for my children I was surprised to learn that half her meagre earnings were to be deducted and sent by me to her brother, a young officer in the army; but she told me this was a universal custom, and she did her share in the matter as cheerfully as though it were the case of a crippled sister, rather than a hulking young giant abundantly able to be supporting, not merely himself, but a family into the bargain. . . . The number of students and unmarried officers and officials who keep a mistress to do their cooking, washing and scrubbing, in other words, to whom the common slavey is a servant for the whole circle of his appetites, is appallingly large, if I may credit the statements of economists and the initiated."

But readers who desire to form unbiassed opinion regarding German characteristics should turn to the book itself, which contains many friendly tributes to German industry, perseverance, determination, and the like, and the genuinely impartial comments of a shrewd, disinterested observer upon every aspect of German Kultur.

Thomas Isaac Fatally Injured

Fenelon Township Farmer Thrown From a Rake and Instantly Killed

FENELON FALLS, July 23.—While hay-making here, Thomas Isaac, a farmer of Cameron Point, Fenelon Township, was thrown off the machine on which he was riding, and his neck was broken, causing instant death. The horses became frightened and bolted, but only ran a couple of yards when they collided with the fence. Mr. Isaac was 64 years of age and is survived by his widow, two sons and two daughters.

His two sons, who were working on the field with him, ran at once to his assistance, but found him already dead. The pole of the hay fork broke and ran into the ground, which caused Mr. Isaac to be thrown. He received a blow behind the ear, which either broke his neck or caused concussion of the brain.

He is survived by his wife, two daughters, Mrs. D. Burnett, of Baddow, and Miss Leta Isaac at home, as well as two sons, Rufus and William also at home.

Mrs. Robert Graham, of Verulam, and Miss Sarah Isaac (at home) are sisters while Geo. D. Isaac, of Cameron Point and James J. Isaac, of Lindsay, are brothers.

The deceased was one of the best known and most popular farmers of the district and had resided at his present farm over fifteen years. He was born near Brampton, but later moved to Hampton and at one time resided at Zion, Fenelon, before taking up his present farm.

VALOUR MEDAL FOR ELIHU ROOT

NEW YORK, July 23.—Elihu Root will be awarded the first valour medal of the committee of the National Arts Club on his return to America in recognition of his services as head of the mission to Russia.

Monkey; Longing For Love, Hugs Young Woman

Denver Seeks Simian Who Tried to Spoon on the Streets of City.

The loveable monkey is loose. When he swung from the low branches of a tree at Twelfth avenue and Detroit street and threw his arms about the neck of a young woman pedestrian, there was a lot of commotion in Denver, says the Post. Aside from breaking the spooning laws, the monkey shouldn't have chosen broad daylight. A scream from the young woman brought residents to their doors. They saw her running in one direction and the monkey in another. It was difficult for them to ascertain which was the more frightened, the young woman, or the lovable monkey.

Policemen from the Capitol Hill station have been pursuing the loveable monk all over the Montclair district. Where the monkey came from is a question. The keeper at City Park says all his monkeys are "just where they should be," that none of them would be ungentlemanly enough to leave home and try to hug pedestrians.

Residents of the Montclair disttict have joined in the hunt. A tree-to-tree search is being made by the posse.

In addition to the frightened womany pedestrians, the monkey was seen hugging several trees. Just now he is hugging some secluded spot.

Many of the new hats are close fitting with the brims turning up all around. They conceal the crown entirely.

NATIONAL GUARD TO BE IN FRANCE BY NEXT WINTER

Militia Will Be Sent Abroad Ahead of the National Army

CHOICE OF CAMPS IN SOUTH DEFENDED

FACT THAT STATE UNITS ALREADY ARE EQUIPPED WITH CANVAS LEADS TO DECISION.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 23.—Most of the National Guard of the United States will be in France before the end of the winter if transportation facilities enable the War Department to carry out its present programme.

The National Guard, or such of its units as are equipped and trained for active service, will be sent to France in advance of the national army to join the American expeditionary force under General Pershing.

That programme was announced by Mr. Baker, Secretary of War, in a letter made public at the War Department, in which he states the reasons for the establishment of National Guard cantonments in the South.

The exact language used by Mr. Baker in reference to the programme is as follows:

"It is intended to send the National Guard, or such units thereof as are properly equipped and trained, to join the American expeditionary force in France before the additional forces authorized by the act above (the Selective Draft law), now called the national army can be sent."

Mr. Baker also said:

"During the winter, if not before, it is hoped that sufficient tonnage will be available for the despatch of most of the National Guard to France."

EXPLAINS SOUTHERN SITES

There has been a great deal of speculation about the reasons which impelled the War Department to select Southern sites for the cantonments at which the National Guard, and particularly those of its divisions from the North, were to be trained for service at the front. Some criticism has been aimed at the locations of the sites.

The explanation given by Mr. Baker will remove, it is believed, all doubts concerning the relative advantages of Northern and Southern sites to meet the exigencies of the present situation.

When mobilization of the National Guard and the National Army was first determined upon it was not known how soon the latter force could be assembled, whereas the National Guard already was equipped and had received valuable training on the Mexican border, which would enable it to be ready for service in France at comparatively an early date.

Training and equipment would fit the men for service, but as they would have to remain in the United States until transportation facilities could be perfected, and as it was not known when that could be accomplished, it was deemed advisable to locate them in Southern cantonments immediately, where climatic conditions vary little, rather than establish them in the North, from which it would have been necessary to move them at the beginning of winter. That would have involved unnecessary trouble and expense.

EQUIPMENT IS DECIDING FACTOR.

Placing the National Guard under canvas was decided upon because it already was supplied with that equipment, and the price of lumber made it impossible to construct more than half of the entire number of cantonments, thirty-two, out of the appropriations provided. It also was learned that the sixteen wooden cantonments could not be completed by July 1, the month in which it had been intended to call the National Guard into the military service, but that they would be finished by September 1.

July was selected as the time for calling the National Guard into the service because the supply of clothing was deemed insufficient to meet the probable demands of the regular army, and while it was expected that the National Guard could be provided for by the end of that month, it was desirable that they should begin training at an earlier date. Being equipped with clothing suitable to a Southern climate and having the requisite canvas for ample shelter in such conditions, the sites of the cantonments for the National Guard were located in the South.

The cantonments which are to be constructed of lumber will be located in various divisional areas, and will be used for the National Army."

L. and P. S. Conductor Says Tanlac Ended Troubles After Everything Else Failed

Nearly everybody, especially railroad people, in London Port Stanley and St. Thomas, know Marshall Thomas, a popular conductor on the London & Port Stanley railroad, residing at 585 Gray street, London. Mr. Thomas is among many well-known people in this section to testify to the benefits they have derived from the use of the new medicine, Tanlac. In an interview at his residence a few days ago Mr. Thomas said:

"I suffered from stomach trouble for more than five years; for nearly four years of this time I never ate any breakfast, and the only thing I could take was a cup of tea. I always had a bad taste in my mouth and what little I managed to eat didn't taste right. I had a painful, burning sensation in the pit of my stomach, like I had swallowed a coal of fire, gas would form and make me miserable. I was so nervous I couldn't sleep much and would get up in the morning as tired as when I lay down at night, and felt tired and draggy all day. I seemed to have no energy or ambition and just felt my health rapidly slipping away from me. I tried all kinds of treatment and spent several hundred dollars trying to get well, but nothing seemed to reach my trouble and I continued to grow worse.

"Tanlac proved to be just what I needed and two bottles of the medicine have made me feel like a new man through and through. I can now eat a hearty breakfast every morning, my food tastes good and don't bother me like it did. The gas has about disappeared from my stomach. I'm not constipated like I was and my tired, sluggish feelings have left me. I have more energy and ambition now, in fact, I haven't felt as good in several years. Tanlac has done me more good than all the medicines I ever took and I have made up my mind to take a full course of six bottles to make sure those miserable feelings I used to have are snowed under for good."

Tanlac is sold in Peterborough by Warne Drug Co.

Drowned Man Drawn As No. 31

WINSTED, Conn., July 23.—Eugene Fields of Norfolk, whose number (31) was drawn at Washington, met death by drowning while fishing from a boat at Pond Hill, Norfolk, July 11.

In his report to Coroner Herman concerning Field's death, Medical Examiner Hamant of Norfolk, said: "Circumstances give strong suspicion of suicide. It is possible, however, that as he was seen to go into the water head first that he may have pitched over accidentally."

Fields had been arrested not long before on a non-support charge.

GOOD MUSIC AT ALL SAINTS' CHURCH

All Saints' church has been favoured these past two Sundays with Toronto soloists who have been staying in this city. Two Sundays ago Miss McCann sang a song specially composed by the Rev. Oswald J. Smith, of Dale church, Toronto, with good taste and expression.

Last evening Miss Hogg, who is a member of Dr. Harvey Robbs' choir, Toronto, sang a song of her entire composition, entitled, "Thy Will Be Done." Both words and music were greatly appreciated and should merit a good sale when published. This was the first time the song had been heard in public.

Indisputably the New Outstanding Novel

"Changing Winds"

By ST. JOHN ERVINE

The New York Times says—"As a war novel it is worthy to take its place with 'Mr. Britling Sees It Through.' 'Mr. Britling' is a story of war and how it affected the English folk of maturer years. 'Changing Winds' is a story of four young men to whom war came as they were realizing the splendid promise of life."

The Montreal Gazette says—"If all the delegates to the approaching Irish Convention would read and digest the unpalatable truths in 'Changing Winds' the Irish question would soon be settled and settled right."

All Manner Of Summer Furniture Pieces

OUL DAILY CALENDAR

Yet to be secret makes not sin the less,
'Tis only hidden from the vulgar view.—Dryden.

What an important part Summer Furniture plays in the comfort of a verandah, summer house or home? Its usefulness does not end with the passing of summer, however, for frequently we see the willow and rattan chair in den and living room. We thought this worthy of mention, as the summer season is now at its height and buyers of summer furniture are quite numerous. So let there be no doubt as to suitability of willow and rattan to den and sitting room environments.

China Will Join Allies, Declare Party Leaders

Kuo-min-tang Favours a Declaration of War Against Germany—Statement Signed By Prominent Men

"China Not a Menace to any Country if Governed Similarly to World's Democracies."

SHANGHAI, July 23.—Several leaders of the Kuo-min-tang, or young China party, including the Speaker of the House of Representatives, the erstwhile President and Vice President of the Senate and the secretary to the retired President, Li Yuan-hung, have issued the following statement:

"Owing to the publication in a foreign paper in Shanghai of an article dealing with the alleged activities of Germans in China there is danger of the impression being created that the Kuo-min-tang is opposed to a Chinese declaration of war against Germany.

"We categorically deny this. Some of the Kuo-min-tang leaders in Parliament were the first to advocate the entrance of China into the war, urging upon the then Premier, Tuan Chi-jui, the necessity of formulating a war policy aligning China on the side of the democracies."

"The political creed of the Kuo-min-tang logically and inevitably commits it to the support of a policy which will range China with the liberal Powers warring against Germany. If China is to be made strong and yet not be a menace and danger to the world, China must be governed similarly to the world's democracies, by rule of freedom and not the sword.

"Therefore, we opposed the autocracy of Yuan Shi-kai, and are now opposing the militarism of Yuan's real successor, Tuan Chi-jui.

"We maintain that the democracy of China is facing the same thing as that being fought out in Europe—the issue of government by the sword, or by the will of the governed. Tuan Chi-jui's training and experience as a servant of the Manchu autocracy disqualifies him for governing this country as a democratic State."

May Not Serve Beef Or Bacon In Restaurants On Two Days A Week

TORONTO, July 21.—The first definite regulations to emanate from the Food Controller, Hon. W. J. Hanna, were made public to-day. Mr. Hanna's statement follows:

"Many suggestions have been made and much information has been furnished to the committee, and, as a result of the consideration of these suggestions and information, it would appear that there is a widespread demand for regulations to be made covering all public eating places (a term which will require definition), and that these regulations shall include at least the following:

1. That no beef shall be served on Tuesday or on Friday.

2. That no bacon shall be served on Tuesday or on Friday and that no bacon shall be served except at breakfast on other days.

3. That at every meal there shall be supplied some substitute for white bread, for instance—corn bread, oatcake, and brown or graham bread; or in the alternative that on certain days of the week no white bread whatever be served.

4. That a printed notice shall be prominently displayed to the effect that the public should avoid all waste and should conserve the greatest possible amount of food, and, to that end, should eat less bread and other wheat products, and should substitute, in their seasons, green vegetables, fruits, and other perishable products for foods that may be stored for later use or exported.

5. Requiring that no more than two courses may be served for breakfast and luncheon, or three courses for dinner with courses to be defined.

This latter proposition, while urged from different quarters, is full of difficulties; for instance, it would appear not to be an easy matter to satisfactorily define courses.

As regards the general public, printed cards will be distributed setting forth the necessities of the situation, and asking every citizen to sign a form of pledge (furnished with the cards) to reduce considerably his or her consumption of bread, beef and bacon, and, at the very least, to observe in his or her own home the regulations which may finally be determined on for public eating houses.

It may also be thought advisable to give to each householder signing the pledge a card for display in his or her window announcing that he or she has done so; something like the cards said to have been adopted with success in England and which are being adopted in the United States.

The committee propose to hold meetings in several of the larger cities at which representatives of the various classes affected will be asked to express their views. After hearing what is said at such meetings the committee will report their final recommendations.

Y. M. C. A. BOYS PRODUCE FINE RESULTS AS AMATEUR GARDENERS

Mr. J. E. Smith Points Out the Success of Importing Seed For Local Potato Growing and Gives Reasons.

Some of the best gardens outside of the experimental farms at Ottawa and Guelph have been developed in Peterborough this year, according to Mr. T. J. Raynor of the seed branch of the Dominion Department of Ottawa, who visited many of the local plots recently accompanied by Mr. J. E. Smith, advertising manager of Farm and Dairy. Of the market gardeners it is naturally expected that they should make a fine showing, and among others whose work this summer has produced splendid results are Kitney Bros., Mr. John Williams and Mr. Bruce Johnston. But the greater production campaign encouraged large numbers of citizens to launch into gardening or to increase their former efforts, and everywhere the yield has repaid their toil. There are more citizens to-day than ever before who are eating new vegetables which they themselves have grown.

Mr. Smith has shown the Examiner golden wax beans cultivated by Wilbert Chartren, 470 Bolivar street, one of the boys in the Y.M.C.A. group of greater producers. In size and quality this sample could not be surpassed in the local market, and it is claimed that this boy's garden is as far, if not further, advanced than even the market gardeners.

Albert Brooks is another youth who has made a success of his garden, and among the sixty boys in the Y.M.C.A. contest have obtained almost uniform success. Twelve of them are entered for the Oke prize for the best showing of potatoes.

A Seed Suggestion.

On his farm, just below the city, Mr. John Williams has demonstrated the advisability of importing seed potatoes every year. He planted most of this year's crop in seed from New Ontario and New Brunswick, from which he has secured excellent crops. Mr. Smith states that it is generally believed, and may be accepted as a fact, that, in maturing, local potatoes increase their food value at the expense of their reproductiveness; that the best seed is obtained from potatoes whose vines have been touched or killed by the frost.

These latter crops have not matured to the same extent as those grown here at home. This is doubtless the explanation of Cuba's purchases of New Brunswick stock for seed purposes; and apparently the Cuban planters buy Canadian seed at a minimum price and resell its yield to Canadian consumers at a maximum price.

LIGHTNING ON SUNDAY KILLED FOUR BOYS

STRUCK DOWN NEAR LONDON WHILE RETURNING FROM SUNDAY SCHOOL.

LONDON, Ont., July 23.—Four boys, ranging in age from 15 to 17 years, and all residing in or near Scottsville, about seven miles south of this city, were killed yesterday by lightning while on their way home from Sunday School. The names of the victims are: Leonard and George Jones, of Scottsville; Glen Coyne, Scottsville, and Aubrey Lovely, of Payne's Mills. The storm in which they were killed occurred shortly after four o'clock, but the bodies were not found till about six o'clock, when Wesley Baker, a farmer, found them when going for his cattle.

Lightning Struck A Stable In Cavan Township

During the storm on Saturday afternoon, lighting damaged a stable belonging to Mr. Walter Bowles, who resides near Scott's Corners on the ninth concession of Cavan township. Several windows were torn out and a number of boards ripped off. The stable was not destroyed and the damage will be light.

Sunday's Air Raid Checked At The Coast

Special to The Examiner:

LONDON July 22.—The air raid on Sunday, which resulted in the repulse of about twenty-four airplanes, after they had dropped bombs on Felixstowe and Harwich, killing eleven persons and wounding twenty-six, was broken up as soon as the coast was reached, and the raid on London was frustrated. British planes pursued the enemy well out to sea. Reports received indicate that the authorities have made considerable improvement in defences since the last raid.

AUSTRIANS SENT TO ALIEN CAMP

Eighteen Austrian Reservists Who Figured in Edmonton Riot Captured.

WINNIPEG, July 23.—Eighteen of 25 Austrians captured after the riot at the Government Grain Elevator at Transcone on Thursday were interned Saturday by military police. They will be taken to Kapuskasing Camp, near Cochrane, Ont.

It was discovered that every one of the 25 men were Austrian reservists, and had undergone military service.

The Board Of Works Will Meet This Evening

The Board of Works committee of the City Council will meet this evening and in all probability will open tenders for the construction of sewers on Princess street, Romaine street and George street. It is very doubtful if tenders will be submitted for the work, as local contractors are rather shy of such work owing to labour conditions. There is a strong feeling in the Council that the work should be abandoned until after the war owing to the cost of materials as well as labour.

Mrs. Mooney Smiles As Death Penalty Is Demanded For Her

District Attorney in Bomb Trial Also Assails Condemned Husband of Prisoner.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., July 23.—Mrs. Rena Mooney smiled several times as she listened to District Attorney Charles M. Fickert repeatedly demand the death penalty for the defendants when he resumed his opening address to the jury trying her for murder resulting from a bomb explosion here last July in which ten persons were killed.

"If this jury does its duty anarchy cannot live; if it fails law and order cannot live," Mr. Fickert asserted.

"We have shown that this defendant aided in the commission of this crime, and death is the only adequate penalty. She has been the leading member of a group of anarchists, who called themselves the 'blasters,' treacherous snakes whose creed is crime and revolution and anarchy."

Mr. Fickert turned his attack to Thomas Mooney, husband of Mrs. Mooney, who is under sentence of death for the bomb murders, and then to Rober Minor, treasurer of the International Workers' Defence League, which financed the present and former trials of bomb defendants.

This league might justly be called "the International Murderers' League". Its object is to wring filthy money from ignorant people," he declared.

"This defendant and her co-conspirators knew they couldn't live in this country if the military forces were strengthened and they sought to hasten the revolution."

ROAD OIL ON MARKET SQUARE

On Saturday afternoon, at the close of the regular market session the market square was treated to a coat of asphaltic oil. This will not only benefit those who make use of the market, but will also benefit the large number of merchants who do business in that vicinity.

How The Kaiser Democratized Germany

The True Story of Recent Events in Berlin as Never Surpassed By Any Censor

'Twas on a meatless day in Berlin, with the weather cold and clammy and the people hot and talkative, that the Kaiser decided to stage a new version of "Dropping the Pilot; or, It Is Better to Fire Than To Fired." Calling his eldest son, he looked the Crown Prince in the face, shuddered and then wiped away a Rhine of tears.

"No!" he ejaculated, "I cannot abdicate. I have brought great woe upon the world, but I must spare my people this!"

The Crown Prince could not comprehend these strange words, for he was smoking a cigarette at the time. Even a German Crown Prince cannot be expected to think and to smoke a cigarette simultaneously.

The Kaiser, without consulting his junior partner of the firm of "Me und Gott," but with his ear glued to a telephone direct wire to Bavaria and Austria, determined on a bold step. He grasped the ends of his moustache that had hung earthward for three years and twisted them upward. Wilhelm was himself again, just as the telephone bell rang.

"This is your dearly beloved brother, Charles of Austria," said the voice over the wire. "What are you going to do—fish or cut bait?"

The Kaiser wanted to reply that he was anxious to fish, but the Americans would not let him, and if he tried to cut bait the Russians, the French and the British interfered — but the telphone rang.

"What is this story from Copenhagen that you have abdicated?" came from Herr Emberger—no relative of Wursburger.

"Nothing to it; nothing to it," the Kaiser replied, feeling whether his crown was still on his head. "I thought of it, but I just had another look at the Crown Prince."

"Well, how about Bethmann-Hollweg?"

"If you'll fix Copenhagen to tell the world it meant the democratization of Germany, I'll take a chance with the Chancellor."

"My dear, dear Chancellor," said the Kaiser a few minutes afterward, as Bethmann-Hollweg kneeled before the throne; "for eight years you have occupied the highest and most responsible offices in the Imperial and State services with eminent loyalty, and have successfully placed your brilliant powers and personality at the services of the Kaiser and the Empire and the King and the Fatherland. In these most grievous times you have stood by my side with counsel and aid. It is my heart's desire to express to you my most cordial thanks for your faithful service."

Sobbing, the great pilot-dropper stepped down from the throne. Approaching Bethman-Hollweg, who, looking out of the corner of an eye to see whether his noble lord had the insignium of a fuerst, a second or a graf, or a plain Iron Cross in his hand, the Kaiser circled until he was abaft the beam of his kneeling, expectant subject.

"I have decided with a heavy heart by to-day's decree," the Emperor continued, "to—"

And then he gave Bethmann-Hollweg such a kick from the south that the Chancellor flew up through the skylight of the palace with a rapidity of a Berliner retrieving a club sandwhich. The last news Copenhagen has heard is that the peace of the Kaiser and the pieces of Bethmann-Hollweg are settling down everyhere over the Teuton Empire.

Thus was Germany democratized.

WIFE IS CO-RESPONDENT.

Remarkable Case Brought to Light in English Divorce Court.

In an extraordinary case in London, a court has just set aside a decree of divorce granted in 1916 to Mrs. Vera Mary Ansell on the ground that the women mentioned as co-respondent in the suit was in reality the man's legal wife.

The "co-respondent," Mrs. Emily Vane Ansell, was married to Ansell at Durban in 1906. They lived in Canada, and in 1913 came to England. She followed him here in 1915 and found him living with Mrs. Mary Vera Ansell, a younger woman, with whom Ansell had gone through the form of marriage.

The second "wife" had a child. Ansell deserted her and went to live with his real wife. The real Mrs. Ansell offered to adopt the child, but the mother would not allow it. The latter said in court she had sued for divorce because she wanted to conceal her child's illegitimacy. Ansell is now in jail on a charge of fraud. He appeared in court in uniform.

HEAVY VEHICLES MUST KEEP TO RIGHT CURB.

Mr. A. Barbeau Fined for Driving Big Dray Down Centre of Road.

Mr. Archie Barbeau was fined five dollars in the Police Court this morning for a breach of the traffic by-law. He drove a heavy dray in the middle of the street instead of keeping as close as possible to the right hand curb. Chief Thompson stated that the by-law in general, and this clause especially must be observed, in order that traffic may be kept in its prescribed channels.

A HIGH TRIBUTE PAID TO CANADA

NEW YORK, July 21.—High tribute to Canada was paid to Lord Northcliffe to-day in an address at the luncheon of the Canadian Club.

After telling how an American recently said that if Great Britain had been as far away from Belgium as are the United States the British people would never have gone to Belgium's defence, and how he replied with the one word "Canada" Lord Northcliffe said:

"The immediate and the magnificent response of Canada to the call for volunteers will forever form one of the most splendid pages in her history—and I believe, nay I know, that the history of Canada will be the history of one of the greatest nations the world has known. It will never be forgotten that Canada, of her own free will, sent four hundred thousand men to fight the good fight for freedom and civilization."

John MacKay Badly Hurt

Fell Two Storeys in Quaker Oats Warehouse This Afternoon and Is Seriously Injured

John MacKay, a Polack labourer, met with a serious and probably fatal accident at the Quaker Oats this afternoon at 2.30, when he fell from the top of the building at present being wrecked by the Leonard Construction Company. Fortunately for the victim of the accident, he caught on the third floor, where he was picked up still conscious. Dr. Eastwood was summoned, but the exact nature of the injuries could not as yet be ascertained. Comstock's ambulance took the unfortunate man to Nicholls Hospital.

RUSSIANS WIN AT ONE POINT IN SPITE OF DISAFFECTIONS

Special to The Examiner.

PETROGRAD, July 23.—Despite the instability of certain regiments, Russian forces to-day succeeded in achieving signal successes over Teutonic troops in the neighbourhood of Krevno, in the Vilna sector, according to to-day's official report.

"We occupied a portion of the enemy's positions at Tsary Boguslie, penetrating to a depth of two miles at one point and taking a thousand prisoners," the statement said. "Our success was jeopardized by instability of certain deachments."

"Between the Sereth, the Strypa and the Zlota Lipa Rivers," the statement concluded, "the enemy occupied Nastasor, Bieniavna, Uvze and Slavintin." Krevno, near Vila, lies nearly 350 miles to the north of Tarnapol and Brzezany, around which the mutinous outbreak of the Russians first centred.

The sector between the Sereth, Strypa and Zlota Lipa rivers lies between Brzezany and Tarnapol.

HAROLD ECCLES WAS SERIOUSLY INJURED AT THE INCINERATOR

Was Said to Have Been Assaulted By the Caretaker of the City's Incinerator Plant

MAY NOT RECOVER

Harold Eccles, an employee of E. K. Graham, garbage contractor, is lying at the home of his employer in an unconscious condition, as a result of injuries received at the incinerator some time this morning. The injured man is suffering from severe wounds on the head, said to have been inflicted by William Faiers, cartaker at the incinerator. The man was discovered about ten o'clock this morning lying on an old rubber coat in the furnace room of the incinerator on Townsend St. He was unconscious, and an examination revealed severe wounds on the face and head. Doctors Harvey and Carmichael were summoned, and the man was partially revived. Later he was removed to the home of Mr. Graham in North Monaghan, where he later lapsed into unconsciousness.

Faiers, who resides at 56 Sherbrooke Street, admitted that he had struck Eccles as a result of an altercation. The weapon used is said by Chief Howard to have been one of the iron hooks used to drag the garbage into the openings leading into the furnaces.

Police Investigate.

When Chief Howard arrived on the scene he found Faiers running around in an excited state, looking for a doctor. Faiers said he had summoned three or four doctors, and that the man had been lying on the floor for about an hour. "I guess I have killed a man," Faiers remarked to Chief Howard. The latter was visiting the plant on other business when he discovered Eccles, and, on the instructions of Ald Dobbin, chairman of the Fire, Water and Light Committee, rendered whatever assistance was necessary.

The police are investigating the matter and an arrest may follow. At a late hour this afternoon, Eccles had not fully regained consciousness.

WORKED 20 HOURS A DAY.

Unique Case Before the Sheffield, Eng., Exemption Tribunal.

What the applicant's solicitor described as an absolutely unique case was dealt with by Sheffield Tribunal recently.

Exemption was claimed for W. Quite (37), married, class A, one of the chief clerks to the Sheffield recruiting officer, Major Barnsley, who was debarred by instructions from appealing for him.

It was stated that Quite worked daily at the recruiting office from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m., and went to the post office at 8 p.m. and worked as a night telephone operator.

For two years, said his solicitor, he had been working 20 hours a day, and frequently added Sunday duty. At the recruiting office about 40,000 men had passed through his hands.

Conditional exemption was granted.

Lady Assaulted By Nine Editors

Miss Annealey Kenealy, aged 40, who lives at Granville Place, Marble Arch, London, is the daughter of the late famous Q.C., Dr. Kenealy, who was counsel for the claimant in the famous Tichborne trial.

She appeared at the Mansion House Police Court, charged with resisting Police Constable Mills in the execution of his duty. Miss Kenealy, who did not answer to her bail, when the case was last heard, had been arrested on a warrant.

Police Constable Mills said that on the evening of June 11 he was called to the offices of the Daily Mirror in Bouverie street. In consequence of what the editor said, he asked Miss Kenealy, who was on the ground floor, to go away, but she refused. He told her that she would be ejected, and that he would stand by and see that no unnecessary violence was used.

When an attempt was made to eject her, she got hold of a stool and threatened to knock her brains out against a lamp-post. Eventually she was overpowered and put outside. Then she threw herself down on the pavement, screamed and shouted. Once more she refused to go away, and complained of being ill, but declined to go to the hospital. She said she would stay where she was, starve and die.

Miss Kenealy was describing to the court what happened at the Daily Mirror office, when Ald. Sir J. Knill pointed out that it was irrelevant.

Miss Kenealy: 'You shall not make me suffer in your attempt to protect Lord Rothermere. I shall make a statement as to why I went to the Daily Mirror office. I have my reputation as a public author to consider."

Describing her visit, Miss Kenealy alleged that nine members of the editorial staff rushed at her, with chairs raised in the air and threatened to knock her brains out.

"All this," she said, "I had to suffer merely because I asked for an answer to the letter that I wrote to Lord Rothermere. My brother founded the Daily Mirror and was its editor. He built up the fortunes of the people who are there."

Admitting that she screamed when the nine men assailed her, Miss Kenealy declared that they tore her shoes off, tore her dress and bruised her from head to foot. When she was out on bail she had fainting fits and had to keep her bed.

"I assure you," she added, "that I had a letter from Lord Rothermere (H. S. Harmsworth) telling me that the case against me had been dropped."

Sir John Knill said that Lord Rothermere had no power to have the proceedings withdrawn.

Miss Kenealy: I had Lord Rothermere's word that the case was withdrawn."

Police Constable Mills admitted that when she was ejected she had only one shoe on and her dress was partly torn.

A fine of 5s was imposed and Miss Kenealy was also ordered to pay the doctor's fee of 7s 6d.

I wish to go to prison, said Miss Kenealy, but her sister paid the fine.

When led out of court by her friends Miss Kenealy loudly protested that the matter was not finished with.

GRASS STEW PART OF PRISONERS' FARE

FOR PRISONERS IN GERMANY

Escaped Doctor Tells of Experiences —Luxembourgers Now Embittered Against Prussians.

Some inside facts about the life of the prisoners in a Prussian internment camp were disclosed last night by Dr. A. M. Mars, of San Francisco, Cal., who arrived at an Atlantic port on board a Spanish steamship. Although he is an American citizen of French parentage and has lived in the United States since he was two years old, Dr. Mars, who is a publisher of l'Avenir, a French paper in San Francisco, was seised in Luxembourg by the Prussian army and kept a prisoner for more than two years.

When taken to the Prussian internment camp, at Die Kirch, he was treated as roughly as were the other prisoners. Finally there was a serious outbreak of dysentery among both the Prussians and prisoners. He showed the army officer in charge that he could remedy the condition of the men and they permitted him to do so.

DRUGGED HIS GUARDS.

His work in this emergency altered his status and the Prussians allowed Dr. Mars to sleep and eat with the officers of the guard from that time on until he made his escape. He gave a sleeping potion to the two officers and doning the uniform of one of them got past the sentries into the open.

Dr. Mars said it took him two months to reach Madrid after suffering many hardships, and being forced to eat grass and leaves at times. It came easy to live this way, he said, after his experience in the interment camp, where the prisoners and others subsisted on a stew made from peelings of potatoes, grass and black rice.

EVEN RICE FAILED.

At the last the rice failed the Prussians, as it could not be obtained from Turkey. Water and artificial coffee were the only beverages for the 8,000 prisoners at the camp. Many were too weak to try to escape. When they did so they were bitten by the watch-dogs that were trained to bite any one not wearing the Prussian uniform. Dr. Mars was able to escape the dogs on account of his borrowed uniform.

FORCED TO FACTORY WORK

"British and Belgian prisoners receive the worst sort of treatment unless they work hard in the Prussian factories," he said.

Dr. Mars stated that the people of Luxembourg, who at one time were in favour of the Prussians, changed their attitude when they suffered at the hands of the army. Now their Grand Duchess, Marie Adelaide, is a prisoner in her castle and the people are greatly embittered against the Prussian invaders.

KAISER NOT POPULAR

He said that even the Prussian guards of the camp were losing hope that Germany would win the war and that they hated Von Hindenburg and also criticised the Kaiser and ruthlessness.

Indian Caste In British Hospital

Soldiers from the East Indies, fighting for Great Britain against the Germans, are a great problem in English hospitals when they are sent across the channel wounded. The "caste" question causes the trouble, and even an English medical officer who has been stationed in India for years seems unable to fathom the mysteries of Indian "caste." A correspondent of the Medical World writes as follows in regard to this subject:

Major S. James, chief of the hospital, which is equipped for 2,000 patients, and is conducted by officers of the Indian medical service, described the provision made for enabling Indians to live in accordance with the customs of their own country, and pointed out various conditions which must be strictly observed to prevent patients losing caste. They have to serve eight separate diets, cooked in twenty-one cookhouses in the hospital grounds, for the patients. For the staff sixteen other cookhouses are in use in the village. The Hindu cooks have to be of the same caste as the patients they cook for, or else higher. No beef is allowed inside the hospital, as the cow is the sacred animal to Hindus. Bacon and pork are also prohibited. As Indians must themselves slaughter the sheep they use for food, and in their special manner a slaughter house has been provided for them. Hindus sweep off the head of the animal with a single stroke of a talwar or sword. For Mohammedans the mouth of the animal must be pointed toward Mecca.

The hospital requires sixty or seventy gallons of water per man a day—not so much when it is remembered that an Indian must bathe before prayer and that a good Mohammedan must pray five times a day. The flooding of bathrooms is a common trouble, as the patients neglect to turn off the water. Before the electric light was in use they persisted in blowing out the gas, so there was always danger of poisoning. As Hindus who die must be cremated by members of their own caste, a site has been set apart for this, and the funeral ceremonies can be carried out as precisely as in India.

Mr. Clement (deputy surveyor) estimated the consumption of water at the Kitchener hospital as over 100 gallons.

A GOLDEN JOB.

(Wall Street Journal).

Directors who direct have heavy responsibilities and apparently the pay is none too high, but if one has the good fortune to be an official or director of sufficient corporations, the returns are not to be jeered at.

Recently a friend visiting one who is a director of many companies noticed that he threw a $20 gold piece into a drawer, apparently full of them, and learned that these were his director's fees. He commented on the number and the director remarked that it was about time he enumerated them, which he immediately did and commented: "I have enough here to buy a few bonds. I always throw my gold pieces in that drawer and invest them when I have collected a sufficient number."

Another well-known New York banker had made a habit of placing directors' fees in the savings bank to credit of his son who, when he became of age, had the tidy sum of $77,000 as a result of his father's work on directorates.

If a woman were satisfied with nature's handiwork there would be fewer toilet preparations on the market.

British Govt. Asks $3,250,000,000

LARGEST VOTE OF CREDIT YET SOUGHT.

LONDON, July 21.—In the House of Commons to-day the Government will ask for a vote of credit of £650,000,000, the largest single vote since the outbreak of the war. It will bring up the total for the war to £5,292,000,000.

PRICE INCREASE IN 20 YEARS.

Grocery Bill Has Grown Just 300 Per Cent.!

An Albany, N.Y., grocer, has kept an order for groceries of the year 1897, and has placed it side by side with a similar order for to-day. It gives a comparison showing the price advances. Here is a copy of the two:

NECESSITY AND INVENTION.

War played havoc with London's gasoline and petroleum supply. The National Steam Car Co., owning 172 steam omnibuses with paraffin fuel, was a patient sufferer, and the shortage of fuel forced the withdrawal of a number of buses, but not for long. Coke burners were tried with such good results that the whole fleet has been converted to coke burners.

The advantages claimed for the new contrivances are: speed, no fumes, flexibility, easy to drive and a light chassis. At a trial with a load of 2 3-4 tons, one bus ran 219 miles at a speed of 12 miles an hour, on a total consumption of 850 pounds coke. The cost was about 1 1-2 cents per mile for fuel. On the basis of 400 miles run each week, it is claimed coke will save $1,500 per car annually over the paraffin fuel. At the pre war prices the yearly saving would be about $750 per car.

IRISH FISHERS ARE WRATHY AT THE HUNS

German Pirates Play Havoc on South Coast of Ireland—Some Samples of Enemy Work—Many Fishermen Are Captives and Mercy is Shown to None.

SMASHING THE ENGINE

LONDON, July 24.—Nowhere is the Hun more hated now than among the fishermen of the south and south-west of Ireland. U-boats have been trying to destroy their fleets, and one story of the pirates' methods, in particular, has worked a complete revulsion of feeling. Pro-German leanings have gone by the board.

It is the story of a careful fisherman who had saved up to buy a motor-boat. She was a beauty and won the admiration of her crew and the envy of fellow-fishermen. With fabulous prices and good catches her owner's prediction that she would soon pay for herself was rapidly being fulfilled. Then came the pirates.

Laden with fish, she was speeding homeward when a rifle shot rang out. The arm of the man at the tiller, the owner's son, spurted a stream of blood and a German submarine appeared. "I'll teach you to stop when you are told," came in brutal tones from the deck of the submarine. "We heard no order given to stop," was the reply. The owner, quickly recognizing that he was engaged in a desperate game of hazard decided to play his trump card. "We are Irish; we are doing nothing to you."

Smashing the Engine.

"I do not care what you are. The next time you are ordered to stop, do so," said the submarine commander. Further, "You are feeding our enemies, the English, with this fish and your member of Parliament is complaining that owing to lack of quick transit a lot of fish is rotten by the time it reaches London. This fish, however, will not be bad when it gets there."

He ordered some of his crew to take what they required of the fish and pitch the rest overboard. Meanwhile the commander searched the motor-boat, and, finding some valuable lines and a sail, bundled them overboard weighted. Then he got a hammer and, assisted by another of his crew with a sledge-hammer, broke the sparking plug and other parts of the motor engine, telling the owner that he would not then smash up the boat itself as he had further use for it.

Returning to the submarine, he disappeared, but with little delay emerged again through the conning tower, followed by a number of Irish fishermen whom he had previously captured. The prisoners were ordered on board the damaged motorboat, and the owner was peremptorily told to use a pair of "sweeps" to row them ashore. This was galley-slave work, but had to be done. A point on shore was made for where it was known a doctor could be got. When the wounded man's arm had been attended to, the crippled boat was turned towards home, where, after arduous labour at the "sweeps" and loss of valuable time, the owner arrived with his companions, a sadder but much wiser man. An intensity of hatred of the murdering pirates has now replaced any other feeling that the Irish in the district may ever have had.

"We Thought Ye Liked Us."

It was early in May that U-boats of the latest pattern began to work havoc on the Irish fleet off Baltimore, County Cork. One pirate about 300 feet long popped up in the midst of a fleet of eighty mackerel boats, gave the fishermen in most cases three minutes to get into their small punts, and sank some ten craft by bombs before a patrol appeared. The loss to the fishermen and their families amounts to thousands of pounds. The Huns did not spare even the smaller craft, and they refused to let the fishermen take oars into their punts. One remonstrated with the U-boats commander: "I thought the Germans would do nothing to the Irish—that ye liked us?

"Ah, my dear fellow, you don't know the Germans yet," was the commander's reply.

The Germans boasted that they had sunk the Kinsale fleet and the Waterford fleet. They declared they would have every Irish fishing boat at the bottom of the sea before a month, and one of the pirates said they were going to shell the villages on the coast shortly.

The intense feeling of the Irish fishermen is shown in a Baltimore skipper's appeal to the Skibbereen Press to make the facts known. "Tell all America," he said, "that the Germans are the worst savages on earth, that this is the most cowardly blow yet, and that we hope and trust, with the aid of our kith and kin in America, the arch fiends will soon be swept off the face of the earth."

CASH WHEAT PRICES LOWER

Fixed Price on Wheat Had Effect of Lowering Market—The Cattle Market

The action of the Grain Supervisors' Board in fixing a price on wheat at $2.40 per bushel, to be effective August 1, has had the effect of lowering the cash price, the movement being towards the level decided upon. Toronto dealers yesterday lowered their quotations on the Manitoba northern at lake ports of 9 1-2c since the decision was announced. Ontario wheat quotations were unchanged, but there is very little, if any, offering and quotations are almost nominal. The flour situation is unchanged. The October wheat option at Winnipeg closed 4c higher than Saturday.

Manitoba wheat—No. 1 Northern, lake ports $2.60, nominal; No. 2, northern $2.57.

Manitoba oats—No. 2, 87 3-4c, track, bay ports.

American corn—Nominal, not quoted.

Ontario oats—No. 2, white, not quoted.

Ontario wheat—No. 2, winter, per case lots, $2.55 to $2.60; No. 2 winter, $2.53 to $2.58, according to freight outside.

Peas—No. 2, nominal.

Buckwheat—Nominal.

Rye—No. 2, nominal.

Manitoba flour—First patents, in jute bags, $12.90; second patents, $12.40; strong bakers, $12.

Ontario flour—Winter, according to sample, $11.00 to $11.10, track, Toronto, prompt shipments.

Millfeed—Car lots, delivered Montreal, shorts, $40.75 to $41; bran, $35; feed flour, per bag, $3.25; middlings $44 to $45.

Hay—Baled, track, Toronto, car lots, No. 2, $12 to $12.50; mixed, $9 to $11; straw, $8.

CATTLE MARKETS.

Union Stock Yards—Receipts 205 cars, with 4,240 cattle, 245 calves, 630 hogs, and 933 sheep and lambs.

The heat wave evidently hit the cattle trade rather hard yesterday. The market was extremely slow, and up to noon hour trade was almost at a complete standstill. Just how much prices were off it was difficult to estimate, but a conservative judgment would be from 40 cents to 50 cents lower than last week for the general run of butcher cattle.

Lambs also were down anywhere from $1.00 to $1.50.

Hogs were quoted 50 cents lower for to-day.

COUNTER REVOLT IS APPREHENDED

Russian Deserters Are To Be Fired On—Telegram From the Front Says All Must Be Risked to Save Country

RISING DEFINITELY SUPPRESSED

PETROGRAD, July 24—The chaotic conditions prevailing on part of the Russian front are disclosed in a telegram sent to Premier Kerensky, the Provisional Government and the Council of Workmen's and Soldiers' delegates by the Executive Committee and the Commissioner of the Provisional Government with the second army, on the south-western front.

The telegram announced the inauguration of stern measures to combat disaffection

"We unanimously recognize that the situation demands extreme measures and efforts, for everything must be risked to save the revolution from catastrophe," the message reads. "The commander-in-chief on the western front and the commander of the second army to-day have given orders to fire on deserters and runaways.

"Let the country know the truth. Let it act without mercy. Let it find enough courage to strike these who by their cowardice are destroying Russia and the revolution."

Fear Counter-Revolutions.

There are indications that the Workmen's and Soldiers' Council, after the events of the past week, and all circumstances connected therewith, are apprehensive of a counter-revolution. The central committee has issued a manifesto calling local organizations of the revolutionary democracy and army to be ready at any moment to rally round their political centres, namely, the Councils of the Workmen and Soldiers.

M. Pereveizeff, who resigned recently as Minister of Justice, has sent to the press a letter regarding his resignation. He said all his activity against law breakers was paralyzed by the general line of conduct of the Coalition Government.

Rising Definitely Suppressed.

London, July 24.—Despatches received by the Russian Embassy here state that the rising in Petrograd may be considered as definitely suppressed. The regiments which participated in the disturbances are being disarmed and disbanded, these advices report, and the city is being patrolled by troops.

THE HOME BEAUTY PARLOR

MAE MARTYN

Dolly: I made my faded "stringy" hair take on its natural color again and become soft, fluffy and brilliant by shampooing with canthrox, a teaspoonful of which I dissolved in a cup hot water. It gently, yet thoroughly, dissolved dust, dirt and excess oil, and, when I rinsed it, left the scalp healthy and pliant. Since my first trial I have nothing but this.

Ighigenia: Yes, you can be sure of hair beauty if you give it proper care. Rid your hair of itching dandruff by use of this economical, home-made tonic, which will make your scalp so healthy that the hair naturally grows long and heavy. Get an ounce of quinsois at your druggist's, dissolve it in one-half pint of alcohol, add done-half pint cold water, and rub into hair roots daily.

Antoinette: Instead of making over your gowns because you have outgrown them, why not try this harmless flesh reducer. Get four ounces of parmotis from your druggist. Dissolve it in one and one-half pints hot water. Take a tablespoonful before each meal and you will see a gradual decrease in weight without loss of strength or sagging skin. It is simple, harmless and effective. Requires no dieting or exercise.

Miss O.: The "face cream without grease," which you ask about is easily prepared at home by this recipe. Get from your druggist one ounce of almonois; dissolve it in one-half pint cold water. Add two teaspoonfuls glycerine, stir well and let stand over night. Apply it frequently, and prevent wrinkles and all skin flabbiness. It is cleansing, soothing and healing, and there is nothing better to relieve enlarged pores, muddiness and all roughness or redness of skin.

Christine: For your sallow, pimply skin, which indicates a liver upset, you should make up and use the old-time hardene blood, kidney and liver tonic. This is prepared by pouring one ounce hardene into one-half pint alcohol (do not use whisky) and then adding one-half cupful sugar and hot water to make a quart. Take a tablespoonful before meals and your skin will soon be clear and beautiful. The hardene tonic is good for most bodily ailments and aches, because it eliminates from the system the poisons causing them, and its timely use frequently prevents serious sickness.

CeNa: You say, "I am a slave to my powder rag." Why not try this fine liquid beautifier? It is lasting in effect and economical, besides being fine to whiten and tone the skin and rid it of sallowness or blemishes. Get 4 ounces of spurmax, add two teaspoonfuls glycerine and one-half pint hot water or witch hazel. This makes a big quantity and is far better than the ordinary face powders. It will be very becoming and will soon like a part of your skin.

Millicent: Don't be frightened into buying eyeglasses before you really need them. It is better to strengthen the eyes than to aid their weakness. For some years I have used this simple home-made tonic which has both beautified and strengthened mine. Dissolve an ounce of eyrotos in one-half pint of water. Two drops daily, or several times daily, will give relief to tired or aching eyes, and soon make them clear and sparkling.

JAPAN'S HOLD ON CHINA.

Tokio Commercial Expert Urges Further Increase in Trade.

WASHINGTON, July 21. — Japan should consolidate her commercial position in China, taking advantage of the present opportunity to anticipate "a most fierce war" in China by commercial competitors, according to Mr. Yoshida, expert of the Japanese Department of Commerce and Agriculture. The text of a discussion in Tokio of the Chinese commercial situation by him has just reached Washington, in which he says, in part:

"Since the outbreak of hostilities in Europe, Japan's trade with China has made remarkable progress. Japan's exports to China in 1913 amounted to 1,500,000,000 yen, but in 1916 the total increased to 1,900,000,000 yen, showing an increase of 26 per cent.. Cotton goods are the most important articles of export to China and are responsible for 34,780,000 yen out of a total of 1,900,000,000 yen.

"Before the war 70 per cent. of the cotton goods imported into China was supplied by Europe and America, and Japan's export did not exceed 20 per cent. Since the commencement of the war Japan's supply of cotton goods to China has greatly increased owing to the stoppage of imports from foreign countries, but it must be said that there is still considerable room for further increase. It is desirable that Japan should consolidate her commercial position in China, taking advantage of the present opportunity, as it is certain that a most fierce war will be waged in China by foreign commercial competitors.

"One one of the means of consolidating Japan's economic position in China, I would advise Japanese capitalists to start factories in China, so that Japanese goods may be supplied cheaper to the Chinese consumer than those imported from Japan. Some fear is entertained that this might occasion trouble among the Japanese manufacturers. I am inclined to the opinion, however, that there is no need for such apprehension, inasmuch as manufactures to be carried on in China will be limited to those of a comparatively simple nature suitable for Chinese workmen, while manufactures of a more difficult or complicated nature will be undertaken in Japan.

"Another way to increase Japan's commercial hold on China would be an endeavour to increase the amount of exports from China by Japanese merchants, along with the increase of exports from Japan. The reason that Great Britain is maintaining a firm foothold in the Yangtse region must be attributed to the fact that she keeps in her hands the trade on the Yangtse coast. Prior to the war about a third of the total export trade of China was in the hands of Germans, and Japan's share in the trade was a mere bagatelle. Thirdly, the extension of the coasting trade is most important.

"It is true that the Japanese flag is much in evidence in North China, but the same activity is not displayed in the South. The total amount of the coasting trade in China is put at 1,200,000,000 taels, of which something like 40 per cent. was carried on by British ships, while Japan's share was only a little more than 10 per cent. This was the state of affairs obtaining before the war, and things have been developing in favour of Japan since the outbreak of hostilities. It is desirable that Japanese should pay careful attention to the development of their interest in China after the restoration of peace."

THE PEACE OF THE PEOPLE.

(London Daily News)

It is the system that must go. The Romanoffs have gone. William Hohenzollern stands on his lonely pinnacle, a solitary insult to freedom. He will go, too. The world can have no peace with him or the system on which he rests. The peace that will come must be the peace not of princes and holy alliance, but the enduring peace of the peoples.

THE HEROES OF THE DUNES.

(After reading the account by Philip Gibbs).

Red were the dunes, red was the sky,
Red-winged the gulls went screaming by;
While in the waste of sand and blood,
Boyish and brave, six heroes stood.
Splendid they stood there, all unknown,
Nameless and fearless they fought alone,—
Fought unyielding that awful day;
Six boys holding the foe at bay.

Red was the Yser, red with blood,
Some have striven to cross the flood;
Six were left—just six; the tears
Flow at the tale of their few years.
One looked back and saw them stand
There alone in the crimsoned sand.
Round them the dead and dying lay—
Six boys holding the foe at bay.

Sluggish and cold the Yser creeps
Back of the dunes where valor sleeps.
Mourn, O world, for their pain and loss;
But above them a mighty cross
Rises forever. No names are writ—
Yet uncovered men bow to it—
Telling with tears about that day;
Six boys holding the foe at bay.

—Charlotte Elizabeth Wells.

CHAPTER XVII.
AN OFFICIAL HOUSEBREAKER.

No word bearing on the main topic in these men's minds was said during dinner. Grant was attentive to his guest, but markedly silent, almost distrait. Two such talkers as Hart and Peters, however, covered any gaps in this respect. Cigars and pipes were in evidence, and horrible though it may sound in the ears of a gourmet, the port was circulating, when Winter turned and gazed at the small window.

"Is that where the ghost appears?" he inquired.

"Yes," said Grant. "You know the whole story, of course?"

"Furneaux misses nothing, I assure you."

"He missed a daylight apparition this afternoon at any rate. I have no secrets from my friends, so I may as well tell you——"

"That Siddle called, and implored you to consider Doris Martin's future by avoiding her at present," put in the Chief Inspector.

Such shocks were losing some of their effect, on the principle that a man hears the burst of the thousandth high-explosive shell with a good deal less trepidation than attended the efforts of the first dozen. Still, Grant gazed at the speaker in profound astonishment.

"You Scotland Yard men seem to know everything," he said.

"A mere pretence. Try him on sheep raising in the Argentine, Jack," murmured Hart.

"Wally, this business is developing a very serious side," protested Grant. Hart stretched a long arm for the port decanter.

"Come, friend!" he addressed it gravely. "Let us commune! You and I together shall mingle joyous memories of—

A draught of the Warm South,
The true, the blushful Hippocrene."

"We read Siddle's visit aright, it would appear," said Winter quietly.

"Yes. That was his mission, put in a nutshell."

"And what did you say?"

"I told him that after Wednesday, I would ask Doris Martin to marry me, which is the best answer I can give him and all the world."

"Why 'after Wednesday'?"

"Because I shall know then the full extent of the annoyance which Ingerman can inflict."

"Did you give Siddle that reason?"

"Yes."

Winter frowned.

"You literary gentleman are all alike," he said vexedly. "You become such adepts in analysing human duplicity in your books that you never dream of trying to be wise as a serpent in your own affairs. The author who will split legal hairs by way of brightening his work will sign a contract with a publisher that draws tears from his lawyer when a dispute arises. Why be so candid with a rank outsider, like Siddle?"

"I distrust the man. Doris distrusts him, too."

"So you take him into your confidence."

"No; I merely gave him chapter and verse to prove that his interference is useless."

"Have you engaged a lawyer for Wednesday?"

"No; why should I? My hands are clean."

"But your clothes may suffer if enough mud is slung at you. Wire to this man in the morning, and mention my name—Winter, of course, not Franklin."

"Godlin's your friend, not Short," said Hart. "Sorry. It's a time-worn jape, but it fitted in admirably."

The detective scribbled a name and address on a card.

"I don't think that you need worry about Ingerman," he went on, "although it's well to be prepared. A smart solicitor can stop irrelevant statements, especially if ready for them. But there must be no more of this heart opening to all and sundry, Mr. Grant. Siddle is your rival. He, too, wants to marry Miss Martin, and regards you now as the only stumbling block."

"Siddle! That stick!" gasped Mr. Grant.

"Ridiculous, indeed monstrous," agreed Winter, rather heatedly, "but nevertheless a candidate for the lady's hand."

Then he laughed. Peters's keen eyes were watching him and Wally Hart was giving more heed to the conversation than was revealed by a fixed stare at the negro's head in meerschaum.

"You've bothered me," he went on. "I thought that you had more sense. Don't you understand that all these bits of gossip reach Ingerman through the filter of the snug at the Hare and Hounds?"

"The man's visit was unexpected, and his mission even more so. I just blurted out the facts."

"Well, you have rendered the services of a solicitor absolutely indispensable now."

Grant, by no means so clear headed these days as was his wont, followed the scent of Winter's red herring like the youngest hound in a pack; but Wally Hart and Peters, lookers-on in this chase, harked back to the right line.

"May I——" they both broke in simultaneously.

"Place to the fourth estate," bowed Hart solemnly.

"Thanks," said the journalist. "May I put a question, Winter?"

"A score, if you like."

"Totting up the average of the murder cases in which Furneaux and you have been engaged, in how many days do you count on spotting your man?"

"Sometimes we never get him."

"Oh, come a bit closer than that."

"Generally, given a clear run, with an established motive, we know who he is within eight days."

"Wednesday, in effect?"

"Can't say, this time?"

"Suppose as a hypothesis, you are convinced of a man's guilt, but can obtain little or no evidence?"

"He goes through life a free and independent citizen of this or any other country. Arrests on suspicion are not my long suit."

"How does one get evidence?" purred Hart. "It isn't scattered broadcast by a clever criminal. And you fellows seem to object to my method, which has been the only effectual one so far in this affair."

"If you had shot that specter the other night there would have been the deuce to pay."

"But you would now be sure of the murderer?"

"Why do you assume that?"

"Like Eugene Aram, he can't keep away from the scene of his crime."

Winter felt that he was skating on thin ice, so hastened to escape.

"Detective work is nearly all guessing," he said sententiously, "yet one must beware of what I may term obvious guessing. If cause and effect were so closely allied in certain classes of crime my department would cease to exist, and the protection of life and property might be left to the ordinary police. By the way, P. C. Robinson has been rather inactive during two whole days. That makes me suspicious. What is he up to? Can you throw a light on him, Peters?"

The journalist knew that he was being told peremptorily to cease prying. He kicked Hart under the table.

"Hi!" yelled Wally. "What's the matter? Strike your matches on your own shin, not mine."

"Peters is announcing that the discussion is now closed," said Winter firmly.

"Very well. He needn't emphasise the warning by a hob-nailed boot. When my injured feelings have recovered I'll discourse to you of strange folk and stranger doings on the banks of the Rio de la Plata, and your stock as an Argentine plutocrat will rise one hundred per cent. next time you are badgered by a man who knows the country."

"Meanwhile Robinson is hot-foot on the Elkin trail," laughed Peters. "His face was a study to-day when the groom supplied details of the picture-buying."

"Furneaux wanted that transaction to be widely known," said Winter. "He gave many publicity to it."

"Did he secure a bargain, I wonder?" said Grant.

"Oh, I expect so. He does not waste his hard earned money, even for official purposes."

But Winter was well aware of, and kept to himself, one phase of the art deal, at any rate. Furneaux had persuaded Siddle to fasten two bulky packages with string!

He was shaving the next morning when his colleague entered, spruce as ever in attire, but looking rather weary. The little man flung himself at full length on Winter's bed.

"Been up all night!" he explained. "Chemical analysis is fascinating but slow work—like watching a moth evolve from a grub. Had a fearful job, too, to get a chemist to chuck a theatre and attend to business. The blighter talked of office hours. Ore rotundo! Ten till four, and an hour and a half for lunch! Why can't we run our show on these lines, James?"

Winter finished carefully the left side of his broad expanse of face.

"You came down by the mail, I suppose?" he said casually.

"What a genius you are!" sighed Furneaux. "If I were trembling with expectation I could no more put a banal question like that than swallow the razor after I was done with it. You might at least have the common decency to thank me for leaving you to gorge on rare beats and vintage wines while I dallied with the deadly railway sandwich."

Winter scraped the other cheek, his chin and his upper lip.

"Shall I go to the bathroom first, or listen?" he inquired.

"Oh, well, I'm tired, and hiking these frail bones to bed till twelve, so I'll give you a condensed version," snapped Furneaux. "Elkin's illness began by whiskey and over-excitement, developed into steady poisoning by Siddle. The chemist used a rare agent, too—pure nicotine, easy in a sense to detect, but capable of a dozen reasonable explanations when revealed by the post mortem. But Elkin wasn't to be killed outright, I gather. The idea was to upset the stomach and brain till he was half crazy. As you can read print when it's before your eyes, I needn't go into the matter of motive; Elkin's behavior supplies all details."

"How about the knots? Hurry! I hate the feeling of soap drying on my skin."

"One running noose and twice two half hitches on each package."

"Good! Charles, we're going to pull off a real twister."

"We! Well, that takes it, as the girl said when her hat blew off with the fluffy transformation pinned to it."

Winter rushed to the bathroom and Furneaux crept languidly to bed.

Before going to Knoleworth, Mr. Franklin consulted with Tomlin as to a suitable dinner, to which the other guests staying at the inn, namely Mr. Peters, and the Scotland Yard gentleman—the little man with the French name—might be invited. This important point settled Mr. Franklin caught an early train, and was absent all day, being in fact closeted with Superintendent Fowler and a Treasury solicitor.

Furneaux was sound asleep long after twelve o'clock, and swore at Tomlin in French when the landlord ventured to arouse him. Tomlin went downstairs scratching his head.

"Least said, soonest mended," he communed, "but we may all be murdered in our beds if them's the sort of 'tecs we 'ave to look arter us!"

However, he cheered up toward night. Ingerman, a lawyer, and some pressmen, arriving for the inquest, filled every available room, and the kitchen was redolent of good fare. All parties gathered in the dining room, of course, and Ingerman had an eye for Mr. Franklin's party. The scraps of talk he overheard were nothing more exciting than the prospects of a certain horse for the Stewards' Cup. Peters had the tip straight from the stables. A racing certainty with a stone in hand.

After dinner the financier was surprised, when Furneaux approached and tapped him professionally on the shoulder.

"A word with you outside," he said.

Ingerman was irritated—perhaps slightly alarmed.

"Can't we talk here?" he said, in that singularly melodious voice of his.

"Better not, but I shan't detain you more than five minutes."

"Anything my legal adviser might wish to hear?"

"Not from me. Tell him yourself afterwards, if you wish."

In the quiet street the detective suddenly linked arms with his companion. Probably he smiled sardonically when he felt a telltale quiver run through Ingerman's lanky frame.

"You've brought down Norris, I see?" he began.

"Yes."

"Meaning to make things hot for Grant to-morrow?"

"Meaning to give justice the materials——"

WHY "FIDDLER" IS BARRED

Might Cause Parents to be Afraid to Have Sons go Overseas

Ottawa, July 20.—The official explanation for applying the censorship ban to the book, "The Fiddler," is that it is regarded as a slander on Canadian soldiers and a deterrent on recruiting. Primarily, the book is characterized as a savage and extreme attack against the liquor traffic in England, but incidentally soldiers are represented as being, as a result of this traffic, drunk and debauched, and also the victims of disease. It is calculated to cause unrest among those who have relatives overseas, and to discourage parents against allowing their sons to enlist. For this reason, and not because of the attack on liquor, the book has been barred.

If there should be any prosecutions of those who have the book in their possession they will have to be on wholesale lines, for thousands of copies have been sent around, despite the liability to $5,000 fine or or imprisonment for those who hold copies. Nearly every member of parliament, many newspapers, and a great many prominent people have been sent copies. The ban will not be raised, but that the penalties will be enforced is quite unlikely.

HOUSEWIVES ENROLL.

Hoover is Creating Domestic Army for Food Conservation.

Housewives throughout the United States are to be enrolled by the government to aid in food conservation. The enrolment is to take place between July 1 and 15, according to the plans announced by Herbert C. Hoover, America's Food Controller. Every woman in the country will be asked to sign a pledge to aid the government by household sacrifices. Hundreds of millions of dollars will be saved by such national effort in the opinion of American authorities. Millions can be saved in Canada by the same means. Household economy, industrial economy, commercial economy—all these are required if the Dominion is to practise that measure of thrift which is required if the national resources of the country are to bear the increasing war burden. The National Service Board is urging investment in War Savings Certificates. By buying these certificates you are giving your money directly for war purposes. The fighting line must be supported by the financial line.

Motoring in the Rockies

Motor travel in the Canadian Pacific Rockies received a great impulse when the Canadian Government withdrew the regulations forbidding automobile traffic within the confines of the National Park at Banff and itself put large numbers of Austrian prisoners to work upon an automobile road from Banff to Lake Louise. This in conjunction with the other road under construction from Banff on the Vermillion Pass to Windermere in the Upper Columbia Valley will render accessible some of the finest scenes in Canada which hetherto was reached only by pony service. A highway built specially for travel by motorcar through 100 miles of wholly unsettled country and over a route chosen with primary regard for scenic beauty—these are the features of the Banff-Windermere road now nearing completion in the Rocky Mountains of Alberta and British Columbia, just south of the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and to be known as the Highway of the Great Divide. The project has received widespread attention because of the demand by the large number of visitors who annually spend their holidays in the tourist resorts between Banff and Field for a first class motor highway linking these points together and extending about 65 miles in a southwesterly direction through two ranges of the Rockies to the Windermere valley which is assuming importance as a tourist center. In addition to scenic attractions the new road shortens the distance from Banff to the Windermere district from 170 to 103 miles and makes readily accessible a region only slightly known and in no way developed. Considerable sums have been spent by the Canadian Pacific Railway in improving the trails and roads in the Rocky Mountain Park, as it is believed that the successful handling of large numbers of tourists in a mountainous country is not possible unless access to surrounding territory is easy to the majority of such visitors. The railroad company was therefore willing to contribute to the cost of the Banff-Windermere road, and joint financial backing was arranged between the Dominion and Provincial Governments and the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Locating engineers were first in the field in 1910 and, after running lines over several alternative routes, selected one which crossed Sinclair and Vermillion passes, at elevations of 4860 and 5264 ft. respectively. The elevation at Banff is 4500 ft. The choice was based on a consideration of lowest grades, best scenic advantages, and least cost of construction and maintenance.

From Banff to Windermere the new route divides itself naturally into four divisions of unequal length. The first, an 18-mile stretch from Banff to Castle, was located and partially constructed in 1912. The second natural division, 11 miles long, reaches from Castle to the British Columbia boundary line, and was located late in 1912. Five preliminary lines were run out before an entirely satisfactory route was secured. Both these sections of the new road lie in the Banff Park and were paid for wholly by the Dominion Government.

Crossing the Great Divide, the road drops down through very fine scenes from the Vermillion Point Fields to the Kootnay River where there is a gap of about seventeen miles to be constructed to link up with the road running north from the Columbia River through the Sinclair Canyon. The photograph illustrates the Red Gates in the Sinclair Canyon, an immense cliff stained in iron oxide, well known in Indian legend.

KEEPS BABY'S SKIN HEALTHY

WHAT is so beautiful as the soft, rosy, delicate skin of the baby. And yet baby's skin is so tender and so easily chafed and irritated that it must have care and consideration.

It is a fine habit for mothers to have Dr. Chase's Ointment at hand for use after the bath. By its soothing, healing influence it soon allays the inflammation, brings relief and comfort, and prevents the development of eczema, for eczema is the natural result of neglected skin irritation.

Mrs. W. L. Barnes, Timmins, Ont., writes: "I want to tell you about the case of my little boy who had baby eczema when he was three months old. It started on the top of his head, on his forehead and around his ears. The doctors failed to do him any good, so I tried Dr. Chase's Ointment on the recommendation of a friend, and in a month's time the child was entirely free of this disagreeable skin disease. He is now four years old, and has never had any further trouble from ailments of this kind."

STOCKS AND BONDS.

Some Advice For Women Who Want to Invest Their Money.

In the Woman's Home Companion Harold Howland gives some good advice to women who wish to invest. He urges bond investments with safe and sure profits.

"For there," he says, "you have the maximum of security and the minimum danger of loss. You want an investment in which your money will be safe. You are not going to take it out of the old stocking hidden in the chimney or the ticking of the mattress, where you know it is safe, and run risks with it. In that you are wise. 'Safety first' is a perfectly good motto for the small investor as well as for the wayfarer. The price that you pay for your sense of security is the low rate of return on your money.

"If you want a little higher return on your investment and are willing to sacrifice a little your sense of security invest in good preferred stocks. If you invest wisely your risk is only slightly increased, and the greater probability of return will go far to make up.

"Do not buy common stock for investment unless it be of a thoroughly sound corporation that has no preferred stock, such common stocks as that have not the speculative quality of those where the preferred stock intervenes between the bonds and the common stock.

"But what bonds or stocks shall I buy? To answer that question you need more light. Your broker or your banker is the one to give it to you. Your inquiry will lead you into the fascinating realm of the stock market. But if you keep your head in its intoxicating atmosphere there is no reason why you should not keep your feet."

Roadside Trees.

It goes without saying that trees not only improve the appearance of the country highway, but add greatly to the value of abutting farm lands. Why, then, is not roadside planting more general? The sentiment in favor of extensive roadside tree planting needs to be quickened and increased throughout the country. Town and country officials, now quite generally alive to the necessity of "good roads," should realize that well kept, attractive roadsides are also important. It is not enough that the weeds and fence corner bushes be kept in subjection. Shade trees should be planted both for the comfort and the scenic effect that their presence insures.—Tree Talk.

Is Efficiency Misdirected?

Is the art of efficiency by any chance misdirected—misdirected toward products as an end in itself instead of toward the development of vitally initiative human individuals—joyous workers to whom product is a byproduct, wealth an incident; men who for the very joy of the working work explosively?—William H. Smyth in Industrial Management.

READ WHILE YOU ARE YOUNG.

Six Hours of It a Week May Spell Success For You.

Were I twenty-one again I should do a great deal of reading. I believe in reading. I don't recall having ever read anything that didn't do me some good. I wish I had read more when I was younger.

If I were twenty-one again I should read many books. I should read the standard novels to get a good way of expressing my thoughts. I should study the great philosophers, but with the temper of an iconoclast. The study of philosophy is a wonderful stimulus to the intellect, but must be undertaken with a mind alert to fallacy.

Then there are books which present actualities in statistical form and couple such statistics with authoritative explanatory comment. I refer to the various government reports on various subjects that engage the interest of the man who wishes to be well informed. Our government wastes thousands of dollars printing these reports, which need not be wasted if only our young men would read.

Read! I cannot too strongly recommend good reading. Six hours each week of serious reading is not much, but it may mean the difference between a $20,000 a year executive and a twenty-five dollar clerk. Read! Learn to think with—and against—the deep thinkers of the world!

All of the time while you have been studying and reading and learning to disagree with the philosophers, when their logic falls foul of your own reasoning, you should be doing something that is productive of well earned money.—William Maxwell in Collier's Weekly.

A "Lightning Calculator."

The Governor-General of Korea presented a watch to a native lad named An Myengwhan, an accountant in the employ of the Land Investigation Bureau at Seoul, in appreciation of his high mathematical talents. Among other accomplishments he can mentally add a column of twenty-five items of four figures each in seven seconds! This is much less than half the time required by the most expert accountants in Japan. This boy is only sixteen years old. His father died two years ago, and he is now supporting his mother, brother, and a sister on 70 sen. 37½ cents) a day—an unprecedented high wage for a Korean accountant. Mr. An was honored by a gift last year from Count Terauchi, when Governor General of Korea.—East and West News.

Sport in War-time.

"The real secret of the security of the British Empire is that we have acquired it not in the spirit of hate, or the spirit of conquest, or the spirit of greed, but in the genial good natured spirit of sport, under which every man must play fair and under which every man gets his chance. I think," writes John Astley Cooper in United Empire, "one of the most severe charges you can make against a true-born Briton in any sphere of life or occupation is to tell him seriously that he is no sportsman; and it is because we have fought this war as sportsmen, in the true spirit of sport, that after it is over there is every reasonable prospect that we shall command the respect not only of our Allies, but of our adversaries."

A New Fruit.

It is stated that a new subtropical fruit is destined to divide honors with the banana and grape-fruit in popular favor. It is the alligator pear, and grows on an evergreen tree of the laurel family, varies in weight from one to two pounds, and has a firm marrow-like pulp. Mr. E. Page Wilson, an authority on subtropical fruits, says: "While the grape-fruit is a luxury that is undoubtedly beneficial to the human system, it gives very little actual nourishment. The avocado, or alligator pear, on the other hand, is a complete and almost perfect food, for it contains all the necessary elements in good proportion." The avocado is being grown in certain districts of Southern Florida.

GERMANS IN BRAZIL

They Dominate Its Four Southern Maritime Provinces.

A STATE WITHIN A STATE.

Wonderful Colonizing Process That Has Placed a Million Subjects of the Fatherland in Control of 11,500 Square Miles of Territory.

"The Germanic element in Brazil is numerous and energetic," says a bulletin of the National Geographic society. "They number at least a million souls, and they are practically limited in residence to the four southernmost of the Brazilian maritime states—Rio Grande do Sul, Santa Catarina, Parana and Sao Paulo—where they have thrust their national roots far into foreign soil without losing any of their inborn characteristics. Theodore Roosevelt, writing in 1914 of Sao Paulo, says: 'In this province I met for the first time Germans born in the country who could speak only German.'

"German colonization in Brazil has been going on since 1825, when the settlement of San Leopoldo in Rio Grande do Sul was established. For ten years the stream of immigration continued, when it was interrupted by the sans-culotte revolt in southern Brazil. This interruption lasted for nine years. In 1848 the flood of settlers was perceptibly swollen by the families from Schleswig-Holstein and the other parts of Germany which were affected by the revolt of the duchies against Denmark.

"No less than thirteen important German colonies were established in southern Brazil between 1848 and 1860, the earliest settlers being greatly aided by generous grants of land from the Brazilian government, which allotted no less than 174 acres to each immigrant. Owing to speculative abuses this privilege was largely reduced—but without noticeable effect upon the movement—which was only checked by the imperial edict of 1859 forbidding the further migrations of Germans to Brazil. This edict remained in vigor until 1896, when, as Austin Harrison terms him in the pan-Germanic doctrine, 'the great sea emperor, William II, saw early and clearly into the future and taught his subjects to see too.'

"Under this teaching the Germanic flood swept in larger volume into Brazil and now has spread over a territory approximately as large as that of the American states of Florida, Georgia, Alabama, South Carolina, North Carolina, Virginia, West Virginia and Tennessee. Fully 250,000 Germans are to be found in the state of Rio Grande do Sul, where in the cities they have taken a strong hold upon the activities of the country and have practically absorbed commercial and industrial enterprise. In Port Alegre, the capital of the state, three German publications indicate and expound the Germanic doctrine.

"In Santa Catarina, the next state north, conditions are analogous. German customs and the German idiom prevail, and in many towns one may almost imagine himself in the fatherland. The Germanic element here was strong enough some years ago to elect a German governor, and with the exception of the officers of the federal court the officeholders are almost entirely German. The anomaly of Brazilian governmental reports written by Germans is by no means unusual.

"The German colony in this state owes no little of its strength to the fact that here for some time was the residence of the Prince de Joinville of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha, who married a daughter of Dom Pedro, the first emperor of Brazil; and the city of Joinville, German 'to the marrow, is a monument to his royal highness' efforts to form a nucleus for German immigration.

"The lands to which the Germans have taken title in south Brazil now gives them an area of holdings of 11,534 square miles, an extent equal that of Alsace-Lorraine and Saxony together. The aim of the Metropolitan and Hanseatic colonization companies at home has been to deflect the current of German emigration from the United States to Brazil and to have the Brazilian colonists retain their German allegiance.

"The success of the plan is attested by Konigsburg who, in his work on Rio Grande do Sul, says: 'These colonies have built a state within a state. Of German customs very little has been lost; also, the German dialect, with its native idiom, is handed down from generation to generation. Portuguese is little spoken, and even then the Germans use it with great difficulty.' The schoolteachers of the colonies are German pastors.

"Through their possession of land the Germans in Brazil control one-half of the world's supply of coffee, and the Germanization of the people is further carried out through the compulsion laid upon the army of employees and servants to learn the German language rather than to oblige the alien to gain the native tongue.

"'The ideals and ties of the immigrants,' says Frederic William Wile in the Eclectic Magazine, 'are essentially and ineradicably German.' It is Wile also who declares that 'the Germanization of Brazil is no twentieth century project. It has been in progress for more than seventy years, although aggressively prosecuted only during the past decade (writing in 1906) coincident with the rise of the expansion movement known as pan-Germanism.'"

CHURCHES OF RUSSIA.

In One of Them Is a Royal Tomb Made of Two Tons of Silver.

Russia is a land that is full of fascination for the tourist, and among its notable sights are the churches of the big cities. The Kremlin at Moscow is in itself worth a journey across half the world. Guarded by its battlemented walls are numerous churches, ancient and modern palaces of the czars and a thousand historic mementos.

The whole of Moscow is a picture never to be forgotten—especially if seen in its winter setting of snow. White streets pursuing their way by the side of convent walls or through historic gateways hum with the sound of swiftly moving sleighs; churches fantastic, irregular, immense, with cupolas of dazzling gold or shining, bewildering, dark blue, stand out free and isolated. Nearly every spot has its history.

There is, for instance, one famous church erected centuries ago by Ivan the Terrible, who brought an architect from Italy to design it and superintend its erection. A remarkable building was the result, and the czar expressed his pleasure. "I like your building so much," he said, "that I intend to take precautions to prevent another like it from being erected anywhere. I am therefore going to put out your eyes." And he did. It will be an unimaginative visitor who misses going to see that church.

In Petrograd numberless interesting sights await the tourist. I will mention but two. In the Alexander Nevski monastery's principal church is the tomb of Alexander, who some hundreds of years ago was a great fighting chief and whose remains were brought from Lake Ladoga. They are incased in two tons of silver. The pile of silver is to be seen by all who visit the church, and above it is a tiny light which never goes out, symbolizing the human soul.

Nearby is a church whose tombs are only for the very rich. The cost is heavy—about $5,000. Strange indeed is the spectacle as one enters the door. The tombs are raised like little tables, and on all of them appear the lights, never allowed to go out, symbolizing the souls of the departed, and on each table are fresh flowers. People kneel at these beflowered and romantic tombs daily.—New York Times.

PERILS OF PEARL DIVERS.

Dangers That Beset Native Workers in the Persian Gulf.

The lot of the native pearlers of the Persian gulf is a hard one, for all run the risk of getting scurvy from the lack of fresh food. Ice, of course, is unknown in the fleet, and the impure water breeds worms. The boiling and filtering of water do not appeal to oriental people as yet. The saibs, or rope pullers, get palms as hard and cracked as an ancient Bedouin's heel. They could prevent this by wearing gloves, but that would be a sign of effeminacy and bring ridicule upon them.

The exposure in the water gives many of the divers weak hearts and tuberculosis, and many of them become deaf because the weight of the water breaks their ear drums. Sharks abound in the gulf, and many divers have had a hand bitten off. One young Arab was brought to the American dispensary at Kuweit with his whole side laid open by a shark that had got a wide mouth hold upon him. The boy survived. We asked him if he would give up diving now.

"No," he said. "I will go back next year. I have to."

The danger of drowning is great, for sometimes a strong current carries the diver far away from his boat, and before the rope puller can bring him back he is drowned. The Arabs have no pulmotors, and they are not efficient in giving "first aid." If a man remains too long under the water it was "written on his forehead," and that is all there is to it.—E. E. Calverley in Scientific American.

Colors In Flags.

Red is by far the most predominant color in the flags of the world. There is only one flag in Europe that does not contain red, and that is the standard of Greece. After red, blue takes pride of place, but many flags are entirely red except for minor devices. Egypt, Morocco, Austria-Hungary and Japan possess all red flags. No fewer than forty-two other countries display red freely in their banners, and the color is, in a natural sense, typical of valor and bravery. Blue in flags represents justice; white stands for purity.—Exchange.

The Puzzle of Life.

Life is a quaint puzzle. Bits the most incongruous join into each other, and the scheme thus gradually becomes symmetrical and clear, when, lo, as the infant clasps his hands and cries, "See, see; the puzzle is made out!" all the pieces are swept back into the box—black box with the gilded nails!—Bulwer-Lytton.

HUMOR ON THE STAGE.

Making Fun Is a Serious Business, Says Charlie Chaplin.

"Making fun is serious business," says Charlie Chaplin in the Woman's Home Companion. "It calls for deep study and concentrated observation. Fun that causes some people to laugh makes others frown. That can't be helped. What matters is—to make most of the people laugh most of the time. How to do this is the problem.

"The principal thing you've got to do to keep an audience in good humor is to make them think they are superior to you in intelligence. You've got to be the clown.

"Pride comes before a fall, we are told. Well, there is nothing so funny as upset dignity. Visualize a bloated capitalist with Dundreary whiskers, light trousers, spats, frock coat, silk hat, all the insignia of a million dollars more or less.

"Now, when the capitalist's whiskers are pulled by an abandoned funny man the audience is convulsed. There is fun in striking contrast. One minute there is a picture of pride and dignity, austere, exclusive, apart from common humanity. If I reach out casually and hook that chap with the crook of my cane, drag him almost off his feet, pull his Dundrearys and step casually on his silk hat, a wave of mirth surges over the house. Perhaps people don't know why. But I do. It is because they never in all their lives believed anybody would have the effrontery to pull a millionaire's whiskers or step on his hat."

ELECTRIC HEATING.

The Way Sweden Used Nature to Solve the Fuel Problem.

Stockholm, up on the Baltic side of Sweden, is a cold proposition for many months. Not only its far north latitude, but its insular situation conduces to cold climatic conditions, for Stockholm is built mostly on islands and is called the Venice of the Baltic.

But the people keep warm during the long winters and do so through electrical heating arrangements. Fuel for individual families was an immense item, but in the last few years the electricians of the country have bent their energies to the development of the natural water power to the end that electricity has become the chief fuel.

Hot water tanks in buildings are heated by electricity from a nearby power plant, and the hot water is sent through the houses much as it goes through similarly heated houses in our cities. The electricity that heats the water is turned on at night when the family retires, and by morning the tank is so hot that the water, pumped automatically through the house pipes, gives the inhabitants all the comforts of steam heat and lasts the whole day.

We build coal fires in our furnaces and have smoke and ashes to contend with. The Swedes press a button that connects the house tank wire with the power plant, and the work is done, with no aftermath of cleaning up.—Memphis Commercial Appeal.

HEAT OF THE SUN.

Its Source of Supply Is a Puzzling Problem to Science.

Probably the most puzzling problem we have in connection with the sun is to account for its tremendous output of heat, which we are told has varied no more than a few tenths of a degree in 50,000,000 years, the period generally given by geologists for the duration of life upon the earth.

If we accept the theory most generally advanced in the past that the sun was formerly a vast nebula extending at least as far as the planet Neptune and that its heat was maintained by slow contractions, computation shows us that only 25,000,000 times the present output would be maintained from this source—that is, if its heat were supplied by contraction alone it would have lasted only half as long as life has been known to exist upon the earth.

This is plainly impossible, and though contraction undoubtedly supplies part of the solar heat, there must be some other source of supply as well. The discovery of radio-activity in recent years may have much to do with explaining this mystery.

It is interesting to consider that if the sun were composed of coal and its heat were kept up by the process of combustion more than a ton of coal would be required per square foot of surface per hour to supply the present output of heat. The sun would be entirely burned up in 5,000 years if made of coal.—New York Sun.

THREE MORE SUCCESSFUL BRITISH RAIDS

THE RUSSIAN CABINET TAKES VIGOROUS STEPS TO SAVE ARMY AND THE NATION

Clothed With Unlimited Powers New People's Cabinet Are Prepared to Invoke Measures of Bloodshed to Stop the Rout of the South-east Army and Clear Out the Nests of German Agitators ---Three Successful Night Raids Made By British Troops.

A SUMMARY OF TO-DAY'S WAR CABLES

Special to The Examiner:

PETROGRAD, July 24.—Clothed with "unlimited powers," the new people's cabinet was prepared to-day to invoke measures of bloodshed to stop the rout of the southeast army and to clean out nests of German agitators scattered throughout the nation. Premier Kerensky, arriving at the front to-day, was expected to order loyal troops without mercy to shoot down each of their fellow soldiers who yielded to German propaganda and started the mutiny. The rigorous policy of repression of traitors and of German sympathizers is the people's own plan. The All-Russia Workmen's and Soldiers' and Peasants' Congresses formerly approve it. A proclamation declaring all who disobey the Provisional Government's battle orders "will be regarded as traitors and cowards" and "shown no mercy," was issued to-day.

Petrograd is hoping that Kerensky will again perform a miracle at the front. With Tarnopol gone and the Teutonic armies pushing forward on a front of close to forty miles, the whole of the great Russian line as far north as Pinsk is menaced. The turning of the Russian flank may be attempted to avert a disaster. The Russian troops must be reformed, the malcontents weeded out or shot, and a firm stand made. Not alone on the front is the new policy of extermination of undesirables, of traitors and pro-Germans to be carried out. To-day in Petrograd strong forces of soldiers and special agents began a systematic uprooting of the German spy system as well as a sorting out of all suspicious troops. The first machine gun regiment was disarmed. Four hundred machine guns and truck loads of military supplies were seized. The regiment itself marched to the Winter Palace Square and formally surrendered. It was transferred to the new barracks and will shortly be sent to the front. Part of this regiment was among those who participated in last week's rioting in Petrograd. The existence of a huge German plot to overthrow the new democracy by a counter revolution was definitely proved to-day in the wholesale arrests in the capital. It was German money that incited the anarchists last week to treason, and it was German agents and provocators at the front who led the mutiny in the army.

PARIS, July 24.—Two further German attempts to storm the French lines northwest of Braye En Laonnois, preceded by violent bombardments last night, were repulsed by the defenders of the Chemin Des Dames line, to-day's official report stated. Between Cerny and Ailles the enemy likewise attempted an attack and likewise failed.

Storming attack directed by the Germans north of Nancy was crumbled in French fire that decimated the enemy's waves. The remaining Germans fled to their trenches, abandoning a number of prisoners. Around Craonne, the statement said, the enemy artillery fire was violent, especially around Californie Plateau.

German aviators last night bombed Nancy, without casualties to the city.

LONDON, July 24. — Three successful night raids were reported by Field Marshal Haig to-day. "West of Havrincourt, east of Vermelles and west of Hollebeke, we carried out successful raids at night, taking thirty prisoners."

COPENHAGEN, July 24.—Premier Kerensky has appointed Lieut.-Colonel Kostin Military Commander of the Petrograd district, according to despatches received to-day.

ROME, July 24.—America's war declaration intervened to stop a contribution of $150,000,000 by Henry Ford to the Socialists to secure peace, according to the Socialist Deputy Morgari, back from Stockholm to-day.

DETROIT, Mich., July 24.—Henry Ford's secretary, George Liebold, to-day denied the report from Rome.

WASHINGTON, July 24.—A new five billion war budget, two billion dollars more than the one that started America's war with Germany, was laid before Congress to-day.

WASHINGTON, July 24.—Serbia in a formal note made public at the State Department to-day, gives notice that "She reserves the right of claiming at the time of peace negotiations an indemnity corresponding to damage inflicted on State and its subjects."

Special to The Examiner:

PARIS, July 24.—The arrival here of General Cadorna, Commander-in-Chief of the Italian army, Foreign Minister Sonnino, and Admiral Throndirevel, of Italy, and Premier Lloyd George, Foreign Minister Balfour, First Sea Lord Sir John Jellicoe and General Robertson, of England. was announced to-day.

The officials are here to attend the Allied war conference.

Special to The Examiner:

BERLIN, via London, July 24.—Huge captures in prisoners and war material mark the continued advance of the Teutonic army against the Russian rout around Tarnopol, was the claim of to-day's official statement.

LONDON, July 24.—"I am convinced that President Wilson will throw America's full weight into the war," Bonar Law assured the House in his speech explaining the war expenditures.

Railway Hotels Will Obey Order

Special to The Examiner:

WINNIPEG, Man., July 24.—Hotelmen here state that to put into effect meatless days and curtailed courses would mean the closing of hotels, as since the bars are closed meals are the only means left to make money on in the hotel business. All railway hotels will obey the order of the Food Commissioner when it is officially announced.

Britain's New Vote of Credit Introduced To-day

Special to The Examiner:

LONDON, July 24. — A vote of credit for 550,000,000 pounds was introduced in the Commons by Chancellor of the Exchequer Bonar Law to-day. With to-day's budget, England's total of expenditures since the start of the war will reach 5,282,000,000 pounds.

GALLANT RESCUE AVERTED A DOUBLE DROWNING ACCIDENT

Fred Murphy, 57 Smith St., Jumped Into Otonabee River at Inverlea Park and Saved the Lives of Two Girl Swimmers.

BOTH WERE EXHAUSTED

Two young ladies, Barbara Cook, 113 Smith street, daughter of Lieut. Massie Cook, who is a prisoner of war in Germany, and Dorothy Stuart, 701 Stewart street, daughter of Mr. R. N. Stuart, owe their lives to the prompt intervention of Fred Murphy, 57 Smith street, aged eighteen.

Yesterday afternoon, at 4.30, the girls were bathing at Inverlea Park, when Barbara Cook, not a very strong swimmer at best, gave out, and called to Miss Stuart for assistance. Miss Stuart, who is a good swimmer, swam to her, but the girls got into the current and, unable to swim against it, were drifting under the Insanies bridge. They called for help and Fred Murphy, who was sitting with some companions, in the park, immediately jumped in, with his clothes on, and rescued the girls, who were thoroughly exhausted.

A double drowning might easily have been the result had it not been for the bravery and presence of mind of the young man who lost no time in coming to the rescue.

Does the City Intend To Refuse Help to Farmers For Harvest?

Mr. G. A. Gillespie, chairman of the Organization of Resources Committee, is at a loss to know how and where he can enlist men to help the farmers of this district in harvesting their crops. Recent appeals have brought practically no response.

Mr. Fred Easson, formerly a street railway motorman, is going out to one farm to-night, but where is the help to be obtained for the many farms that are being worked by their owners single handed?

In its seriousness the situation is almost pathetic. A man who is much among the farmers, stated this morning that on the majority of farms in this section there are no hired men, and the farmers are about to resign themselves to the conditions they cannot improve, and harvest whatever of the crops they can handle.

Such is the situation, and appeals seem useless. It has been stated frequently that the city assured the farmers they would receive all the help they required, and on that promise they seeded more extensively than they might otherwise have done. Now they ask the city to make good its offer, and the citizens either repudiate their promise or they are turning a deaf ear to the call from the land. One of the apparent ties to former farm hands and men who could assist in harvesting is the high wage rate that prevails in practically all the local industries. It is to be hoped that the citizens are not going to pay more than they anticipate for their whistle.

SAPPER H. ALLEN, A FORMER 93rd BATT. MAN IS REPORTED WOUNDED

Went Overseas With Peterborough County Battalion and Was Transferred to Engineers--Letters From Peterborough Boys Overseas---To-day's General Military News.

Sapper H. Allen, formerly of the 93rd Battalion, is officially reported wounded in to-day's casualty list. Sapper Allen enlisted here with Lieut.-Col. Johnston's battalion, and after going overseas was transferred to the Engineers. He had been at the front for some time.

Word has been received by Mr. H. S. Macdonald, 338 Rubidge street, that his son, Sapper J. Douglas Macdonald, of the 2nd Canadian Tunneling Company, has been awarded the military medal for gallant services rendered on June 7th, during the capture of Messines Ridge. Sapper Macdonald went overseas with the 2nd McGill University Company, and up until last December was a member of the Princess Patricias.

The following letter has been received by the Examiner, re Army Medical Boards:

To the Editor of the Examiner.

Dear Sir,—It is highly improbable that Canada is at the present time sending men overseas to serve King and country who are insane. This fact I would like to point out to the Village of Lakefield and the surrounding country. It is quite true that many men have been sent home from England as physically unfit, but this is understood from the fact that army life is different entirely from the civilian life and many diseases and weaknesses inherent are afterwards brought out through the conditions. Men who have been accustomed to indoor life all their lives are suddenly thrust out into the open where, night and day, they are subjected to the out-door life. What is disease but a means of nature whereby man is adapted to a change of environment. It is nature's way of changing environment. No wonder then that men are sent home as physically unfit. It is not the fault of medical boards. One man may be adapted to the army life, another may not. It is a scientific law that the "fittest survive, the weakest become diseased."

Final medical boards are generally very thorough; they do not allow insane men to go overseas. Vimy Ridge was not captured by lunatics; nor do I think that insane Canadians have played in this war. Only a couple of days ago the London papers were full of the courage and dash of the Canadians in a battle around Lens. Were they insane men? I do not think at the present moment an insane man can be found in Bramshott, Shorncliffe, or any other English training camp.

A. H. BAKER,
Ascot Camp, England.

IS APPOINTED.

Mrs. Patterson, 675 Water street, has received word that her son, Lieut. J. Russel Patterson has been appointed to the medical staff of the Ontario Military Hospital at Orpington, England.

Lieut. Patterson went overseas originally with a Queen's unit and saw much service in the far East.

LONDON, July 24.—Instructions have been issued by the Canadian authorities that all boys under 17 years of age in the overseas forces be returned forthwith to Canada.

The Examiner has received the following interesting letter from Pte. W. G. Nicholls formerly of the 93rd Battalion, and now somewhere in France with the 21st Battalion:

Somewhere in France,
June 20th, 1917.

As the battalion is out for a few days' rest I will try and write a few lines to let you know how things are going. I am fine and dandy and hope all the Peterborough boys are the same. We are resting in a little place with a name like a nursery rhyme. It is only a four-corner affair, dominated by a church. But, however, we are pleased to get away from the noise of the big guns, and smell of the dirty Huns.

Old Frits don't get much sleep those times; he is getting pretty sick of it. One night that I spent in the front line he only sent over three shells, and in return got about one hundred and three. Mr. Mowat and Mr. Widdifield joined our battalion about two weeks ago. There are about twenty-five 93rd boys with us, so you see there are a few old Heiny has missed. I saw where Lieut. Milburn was buried. Along with several others he is resting in peace in a nice cemetery near where he fell.

Old. Sgt. Saxby is with us. He had his pack shot off the second time in, but Sax don't mind that. Stan. Kernaghan was over to see us yesterday. He is with a transport, and I am taking a drive with him to-day.

I also saw Lieut. V. Eastwood of the 18th Battalion. I am glad to learn he won the Military Cross, as he sure deserves it. The boys tell me that he has been over the top every time the battalion has gone since he joined it. He is sure a brave, smart young officer, one which Peterborough can boast of. Well, I think we shall be home for Christmas, or at least those whom Fritz don't napoo. We have had a big rain storm and the mud is pretty thick.

It is very hard to write a letter from here, as we have very little news, so I think I will have to close. I am sending you a little poetry, written by a few old boys, and it is very popular in the trenches. With those few humble lines I guess I will close. My address is C Company, 21st Battalion, B.E.F., France.

OVER THE TOP.

"Did you ever go over the top?" he said,
"Did you ever go over the top?
Did you sweep along, an unbroken line,
With bayonets gleaming and eyes ashine,
And a feeling that went to your head like wine,
The time you went over the top?"

"Did you ever go over the top?" he said,
Did you ever go over the top?
Did the flare-lights shine on a glorious sight,
As they stabbed the stygian blackness of night;
Did you thrill with a feeling of savage delight,
The time you went over the top?"

"Did you ever go over the top?" he said,
Did you ever go over the top?
"Oh, tell me!" he said, "how you hold up your head,
Of the things that you thought and things that you said,
Of your glorious pride in the men that you led
The time you went over the top?

"Oh yes, I've been over the top," he said,
"You bet I've been over the top,
But I felt alone in the flare-lights glare,
And Mauser bullets were singeing my hair,
And my knees were knocking together for fair
The night I went over the top."

"Oh yes, I've been over the top," he said,
"You bet I've been over the top.
But it's lonesome out there in No Man's land,
And you miss the crowd and you miss the band,
And your feet take root in the place you stand,
The night you go over the top."

"Oh yes, I've been over the top," he said,
"You bet I've been over the top,
There were yards of wire got attached to my clothes,
And how I got out of it God only knows,
A secret I fear He will never disclose
Till I am finally "over the top."

"Oh yes, I've been over the top," I said,
"You bet I've been over the top.
The noise and confusion the shouts and the groans
Had paralyzed action and frozen my bones,
When a fellow went past me—I think it was Jones,
He was headed back over the top."

"Oh yes, I've been over the top," I said,
"You bet I've been over the top—
And since Jones got a Blighty and wasn't napoo,
"If they're handing them out," I thought, "Me for one, too,"
And blest if I didn't—in fact I got two,
The night I went over the top."

Pte. F. W. Panter, formerly of the 93rd Battalion, was one of the military representatives from the Providence Free Hospital, St. Helens, England, at the funeral of Sir Joseph B. Leach, well known philanthropist.

STIRRING APPEAL IS MADE TO CANADIANS

FAIRES CLAIMS ECCLES WAS HURT IN A FAIR FIGHT

Man Who Was Injured at the Incinerator is Much Better To-day —Police Report of Yesterday's Mix-up

FAIRES TELLS STORY

Harold Eccles, who yesterday morning was found in an unconscious condition at the city incinerator, is somewhat better to-day. Dr. E. E. Harvey, who is attending Eccles, stated this afternoon that the injured man shows some improvement to-day and in all probability will recover. The most severe injury was a blow on the jaw, which caused a slight concussion of the brain. Eccles has regained consciousness and is getting better.

The police are keeping in close touch with the condition of Eccles but there was no indication to-day of beginning any action against Faires, who claims that he merely punched Eccles on the chin in a fair fight that blew up over the possession of a barrel and the injured man's alleged abusive language.

In his report of an interview with Faires, Detective Meagher presented the following.

Faires said that an empty barrel had been taken from the yard at the plant and he had asked Eccles about it. Eccles said he hadn't seen it. Faires then saw the barrel on the garbage waggon drawn by Eccles and told Eccles it was the missing barrel. Eccles replied that Faires was a —— liar and struck him in the face. Faires struck him a couple of times, when they clinched and both rolled under the horses. While they were in this position Faires asked Eccles if he would be quiet and behave, to which he replied, "Let me up you ——, and I'll kill you." They both got up and Eccles again made for Faires, according to the latter's story, who struck Eccles and he fell under the horses. He made no move, so Faires pulled him to the other side of the floor and bathed him with water, which seemed to have no effect in reviving him. He then called Dr. Harvey, who attended to Eccles and ordered him sent home. Faires ordered a cab and accompanied Eccles to W. K. Graham's home in Monaghan.

Mr. Withers, caretaker of the incinerator, states that Faires' statement is correct and also says that Eccles has always been using filthy language and had been told by Withers that some one would educate him yet.

To the Examiner to-day both Faires and Withers claimed that no weapons had been used. It was a fair fist fight according to both men.

Message From Lord Rhondda Read By Canadian Food Controller Brings Home the Reasons For Saving Food in Canada.

HANNA'S ADDRESS

"We look to the resources of Canada and to the indomitable energy of Canadians for an answer that will shatter Germany's threat of starvation."—Lord Rhondda, British Food Controller, to the Canadian Food Controller, Hon. W. J. Hanna.

TORONTO, July 24.—With the reading of the extract, the Dominion Food Controller last evening put in a nutshell why food must be saved in Canada. It was plain. The message was stern and unequivocal; the honour of Canada is concerned in the reply to it.

NEW CALL TO WOMEN.

Mr. Hanna spoke to the first meeting at Convocation Hall of the Province-wide Convention of Women, called by them to insist on aiding in the war work. His British message and the home fact that prices in Canada would be fixed if the Government found it necessary, and that a Commission had already been appointed to inquire into bacon prices, were the dominant points in a plainly spoken business man's declaration of the duties of a Food Controller, and of why his efforts should be backed by the people throughout the Dominion.

LORD RHONDDA TO CANADA

Lord Rhondda, who was formerly as Mr. D. A. Thomas the first Imperial Government representative in Canada when the Munitions Board was formed, sent his message to Hon. Mr. Hanna by the usual channels of the Colonial Office and the Governor-General. That is the little punctilio of official tactfulness so vital in the avoidance of ripples in colonial life with the spirit, even while war is on, of Admiral Drake of Plymouth Hoe: "There is time to finish the game and to beat the Spaniard, too." The full text will be found in an adjoining column.

Mr. Hanna prefaced a lengthy review of the harvests of 1914, 1915 and 1916 by saying: "The Toronto Globe was right when it said the position of a Food Controller was no job for a stout man on a night like this." (Laughter.) He went on to say that for some time the demands of war had been for men, munitions and money. Then it had become for men, munitions and food. They might ask why the shift-about. They had gone on with the war for two years without food having been mentioned. In the fall of 1916, however, the demand grew for a greater supply of food. Mr. Hanna then detailed the fact that the harvests of 1914 and 1915 were exceptionally good, and that notwithstanding that Russia and other sources of supply in wheat had been cut off there was no marked shortage. But the consumption in 1916 had absorbed the 'slack' or overplus, so that when the figures were taken for the prospects of the harvest of

CANADA'S TIMBER.

One of the surprises to those visiting Europe in peace times is the method by which all lands are carefully examined and put to work according to their capacity. No farmer is permitted to locate on non-agricultural soil, and at the same time, good farming soil cannot be retained under such a crop as timber. Canada has only made a beginning at applying such a policy of business efficiency in the use of the nation's natural resources. Thousands of farmers are to-day tied to farms that produce only a few dollars an acre, their efforts and ambitions practically wasted in a time when man-power is at a high premium. Taking the whole of Canada's area more than two-thirds will never produce field crops, and the bulk of the two-thirds will prove profitable under only one crop, namely timber.

All efforts for the protection of the forests against fire and other forms of needless waste aim to keep in in a productive condition those millions of acres that can never grow field crops. Canada holds a tremendous national advantage in her forests, but from the beginning of the last century about two-thirds of the original inheritance has been destroyed by fires. Nearly all modern countries have put an end to forest fires by carefully organized protective systems.

SAFETY FIRST.

The sweltering weather of the past few days has driven hundreds of citizens into the river for a cooling plunge and last night the favorite swimming places—Inverlea Park, the foot of Dublin street, the "boat-houses," and the Vermont Marble Company Beach, in East City, all had scores of bathers in spite of the failure of the City Fathers to provide any facilities. At one of these swimming places a citizen made a suggestion to the Examiner, last night, that should be considered by the Council. He pointed out that there was no life saving apparatus at any of these points and suggested that the Council provide a life-saving buoy for each place, to be hung where it would easily be accessible in case of an accident. There are many small children who go to these bathing places and while it is true that there are usually many skilled swimmers in the water who help to make conditions safe for those who have not mastered the art, yet the life buoy would be of the greatest assistance if anything went wrong. The suggestion is a good one, and is passed on to the Council with the hope that the city fathers will see that they have some responsibility in the matter of safeguarding the lives of the citizens.

GREAT THINGS AND SMALL.

These are serious times for men who desire honestly to discharge their duties as public men and as electors, says the Toronto Star. Yet their anxieties and perplexities count for little when compared with the wearying and dangerous duties of our men in France. We think and decide at our ease, in physical comfort at least, and in safety, with the course of our thoughts undisturbed by hardship or by danger. Such sacrifices as are involved in heavier taxation or in contributions to this or that war fund are trifles compared with these made at the front. Only the sacrifice of bereavement by the death of a son or brother or husband or father can be weighed in the balance with those which are daily recorded in the list of casualties.

It is little that is asked of us when we are called upon so to do our duties as electors as to help our defenders and throw the strength of the nation into the cause. TThe disappearance of old political landmarks, the lack of leadership, the necessity of forming independent judgments, are not fit matters for lamentation in a time when things of far greater moment are to be considered.

We are in the midst of a war the like of which is not found in the recorded history of the human race. It is not national or Imperial pride or ambition that is now the object of our hopes and our fears. It is the welfare of the human race, the life or death of liberty and civilization. The triumph of German arms would be the end of liberty, and the unchecked sway of savages that murder women and children. The world under such sway would be hell upon earth—hell not only in sufferings but in degradation, in the wreck of all the fairest hopes of humanity, in abject submission to the foulest tyranny. We should not only be victims of that tyranny, we should be its slaves, living under slave-morality, our souls poisoned by the vices of our masters.

In such a time all anxieties about the fortunes of political parties seem trivial, serious only as they divert our minds and energies from greater things. Whether Liberal or Conservative shall rule is nothing in view of the danger of a calamity which would destroy all hopes of Liberalism and leave us nothing to conserve. We disagree, but our greatest ideals are common. We seek in different ways to preserve and enlarge freedom, to make this country and, so far as our power extends, to make the world a decent habitation for the human race, to uplift humanity ,and to advance civilization. We are fighting against the enemy of all these ideals, against anarchy and bestiality, whose triumph would make the instant annihilation of the human race a mercy.

These things have been said again and again during the war, but we seem to have lost some of the keenness of our realization, to be allowing ourselves to fall into a langour that can men only despair or dangerous confidence. There is something wrong in the attitude of mind which allows partizan conside ration to be even seriously discussed in this hour of the travail and peril of the world.

WILSON'S MANDATE.

"The draft law was accepted by the mandate of the people," is an arresting statement in a New York Times editorial on the operation of the Selective Conscription Act. Neutrality was the mandate generally interpreted in the re-election of President Wilson. Peace at any price was regarded as his fixed policy representing the attitude of the majority of the nation, and it was firmly believed that he was determined to keep the United States out of the war. His notes in reply to Germany's overt acts sounded evasive and as empty threats. Such was their reception in many quarters outside of the United States, and such was their reading in Germany as her subsequent aggressions testified.

If there was any disposition across the border to equivocate, to delay the Administration's war plans, might not the President's previous evowals and the seeming sentiment of the country at the last election be offered as pretexts that he had not a mandate from the people to declare war and commit the nation to conscription? Fortunately the "Americans' are made of finer fibre, and the Times thus expresses their mandatory decision:

"By our laws every citizens between the ages of 18 and 45 years is liable to military duty in time of war. The Selective Conscription Act gives form to that law, as far as it affects some of the younger men. If the occasion requires it, the law will be amended to draw into the national service both younger and older men. The present situation in Europe shows that there is little hope of a speedy termination of the great conflict of democracy with military autocracy. All the resources of this country must be thrown in the balance for our national safety. We are involved, through no fault of our own, in the most destructive war the world has ever known. Peace cannot be restored and the future safety of free institutions assured without the earnest courageous ,and self-sacrificing co-operation of every loyal citizen of the United States."

And concluding its reference to the conscriptive method—"It is the only fair way of raising an army in a democracy."

HIS MARRIAGE NO BAR TO WAR.

Chicago Bridegroom Taken to Hospital with Skull Fractured and Throat Cut.

CHICAGO, Ill., July 23.—The first of the slacker marriages here to make public appearance on the domestic junk pile was recorded at a hospital to-day when Conrad Jeffers, twenty-nine years old, was taken there with his skull fractured by hammer blows and his throat cut.

"He married me two months ago to escape the draft," Mrs. Jeffers said; "We quarrelled all the time. We had hours of it last night, ending finally in a fight."

Jeffers is in a critical condition.

HOW HE GOT IT.

Illustrated Sunday Magasine:—"You seem able bodied and healthy; you ought to be strong enough to work," she remarked scrutinizingly.

"Yes, ma'am, I know. And you seem beautiful enough to be on the stage, but evidently you prefer the simple life."

He got a square meal without any further reference to work.

MANNING A CANOE.

The Bow Paddle Should Be Both Cool Headed and Skillful.

Contrary to the general notion about the relative importance of those in a canoe's manning, the bow paddler stands first. Among Indian voyagers he is the captain of the crew. His will is law.

Not arbitrarily is a captain's power vested in the bow paddler. It is the outcome of experience, and the basis of it is skill. The advantage of a canoe is this, that, being lighter in draft than any other known craft, it can be taken into very shallow water.

And just here, accompanying this advantage, lies a danger which the bow man must be able by his skill to meet. It is his business to watch for and avoid obstacles—snags, "deadheads," slightly submerged tree trunks and shoals—and the last two are sometimes very difficult to see before one is almost upon them. But a bow man must be able to see them. Much is at stake, life itself even.

Especially in certain kinds of rapid running it is his trained eye for navigable water and his skilled hand quick to guide the boat into it on which the safety of the crew depends.—Outing.

Father of the American Navy.

A native born Irishman that the members of his race are particularly proud of is Commodore John Barry, the "Father of the American Navy." He was born in Wexford, Ireland, in 1745. His father put him on a merchant ship before he was twelve years old, and at fourteen he was employed on a ship sailing from Philadelphia. He was a master of ships before he was twenty-one years old. When the Revolution began Barry was employed by congress to fit for sea the first fleet which sailed from Philadelphia. Barry commanded the Lexington, which captured the first British war vessel taken by a regular cruiser. Blockaded by a superior British fleet in the Delaware, he landed with his sailors and marines and joined Washington's army.—Detroit Free Press.

Bait For Fishing.

A fish hasn't a nose, but it can smell. Recent experiments have proved this. Anglers have laid so much stress on the need of exciting a fish's interest by the look of food that the effect of scent has been overlooked. A shark will bite at a hook containing a piece of fat pork, although the pork does not look like any kind of fish that swims in the sea.

It may be heresy in angling to suggest that a "fly" should smell like a fly. These scientific experiments show how large a part smell plays in the food pursuit of fish. Bait, such as small crabs, was found and eaten by the fishes two or three times as rapidly when the shells were broken. Bait placed inside a gauze bag was smelled within three minutes of being lowered in the water, and almost at the same time all the fishes began nibbling at the bag. When cotton was stuffed into its so called "nostrils" the dogfish would seldom observe the food that came near them.—Chicago Herald.

Altered War Words.

An examination of modern military terms reveals the fact that very few of them possess the meaning originally assigned to them. Munitions, for example, in ancient times signified not only the materials of warfare, but also the fixed defenses of an army. Thus the translators of the authorized version of the Bible use the phrase "munitions of rocks" to translate "impregnable rock fortresses," and the defending army is charged to "keep the munitions" when the meaning is "guard the fortresses." Carriage is another word with a changed meaning. In Acts appears the phrase "We took up our carriages." It is one Greek word meaning "having packed up," and the Geneva version (1557) has "we trussed up our fardels." In those days the word's meaning was "something carried," not as now, "something that carries."—London Chronicle.

Two Classes of Debts.

"Avoid useless and unnecessary debts as you would a pestilence," advises a successful financier. "There are two classes of debts. One is constructive credit, and the other is a destructive credit. On one hand a farmer or business man may borrow to buy more land, more stock, build improvements. On the other hand, borrowing may be done simply to buy an automobile or to spend in some way that the investment itself will not pay back the loan."

Keeping Late Hours.

"Life on the farm is not what it used to be."

"How is that?"

"When a farmer motors into town every night to attend a theater you can't expect him to get up at daybreak."—Birmingham Age-Herald.

Typewriter Knowledge.

"Look at this letter," said the exasperated man to his blond typewriter. "Every word in it that should have two 's's' you've only put one."

"Well, sir," said the girl timidly, "there's only one 's' on the keyboard."—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Both Sweepers.

"Where's your father, boy?" asked the gentlemanly agent.

"Sweepin' the horizon," replied the astronomer's son.

"And your mother—where is she?"

"She's out sweeping the backyard."—Pearson's Weekly.

Valuations.

"You can't judge things by what they cost."

"True enough. An artificial limb is very expensive, and a real leg you get free."—Washington Star.

A bit of cloth or chamois should always be kept in the sewing machine drawer to wipe off the machine before beginning to stitch.

GUATEMALA'S ARMY.

Central American Republic Now in Lists Against Germany.

Guatemala's decision to follow the example of the United States in breaking off diplomatic relations with Germany adds to the world alliance against Teutonic imperialism the strongest of Central American republics.

With an army which in peace times numbers 7,000 men, and with a reserve force estimated from 78,000 to 87,000, Guatemala is by far the most important military force in Central America. In area it is several thousand square miles larger than the island of Cuba and approximates the size of Louisiana, with a population equal to that of Virginia. Of its sister republics, Nicaragua embraces slightly more territory, but has less than one-third the population.

The total available unorganized military strength of Guatemala is 338,000 men, which is three-fourths as large as all the rest of Central America combined.

Guatemala has seventy miles of coast line on the Atlantic seaboard and 200 miles on the Pacific, the best harbor, Puerto Barrios, being on the Atlantic, with regular steamship service to New York and New Orleans.

The fact that Guatemala was the first of the Central American republics to align itself with the United States came as something of a surprise in view of the fact that the country's industrial and commercial life had been permeated by German influence before the war. It was German capital which had built much of the 502 miles of railway in the republic, and it was Germany which used to buy a large percentage of the coffee produced on the Guatemalan plantations, many of which were either owned or managed by Germans. One of the leading educational institutions of the country is a German school endowed by the German Government. German cotton goods occupied an important place in the country's imports before the world-war restricted shipping.

While coffee is Guatemala's chief article of export, the country also produces hides, rubber, bananas, sugar, and chicle, the leading customers now being the United States and Great Britain.

The capital of the republic, Guatemala City, a well-lighted, modern town of 90,000 inhabitants, five-sixth of whom are of European origin, is situated 85 miles from the Pacific coast on a plateau nearly 5,000 feet above sea level.

Estrada Cabrera, president of Guatemala, has been the chief executive of the country for 19 years and only a few weeks ago began another term of six years.

Germany and Japan.

Undiscouraged by the mitten, Germany continues to woo Japan. The triple alliance of Japan, Mexico, and Germany against the United States which Zimmermann proposed did not seem to suit Japan's taste, so now Admiral von Hintze, who was Germany's Minister to China until China broke off relations, tries her with another. He stops off at Yokohama on his way home and proposes an alliance of Japan, Germany and Russia, evidently counting on the success of the reactionary movement in the last-named country to restore the Russian throne with a German puppet on it. The dispatch says:

"An eventual alliance between Germany and Japan that would secure for all time the rights of the two countries in the Far East was forecast by Admiral von Hintze, formerly German Minister to China, in an interview with a reporter of the Kokumin Shimbun. The German Admiral added his belief that later Russia would come into the agreement, and thus form a powerful triple alliance that would exercise a predominating sway over the two hemispheres and insure a world peace."

Germany cannot give up the habit of partitioning the future. All her schemes lately have been aimed at the United States, the von Hintze scheme included. Japan's indignant repudiation of the idea that she would betray her allies does not in the least prevent the unconquerable German theorist from proceeding blandly on the supposition that she does not mean what she says and that she can be bribed. On this assumption, and the assumption that the socialistic tools of Germany in Russia will succeed in overthrowing the Liberal Government and opening the way for a new dynasty of German dictation, rests this latest and most fantastic scheme of all. There is only one characteristic German touch that we miss in it: Von Hintze does not discover that the Russians and Japanese are "of like race."

Great French Democrat.

From the beginning, the chief problem of the Allies has been the organization for war of the great industries of production and transportation. For that organization the co-operation of labor is imperative. Both in England and in France the war has brought representatives of the industrial classes to power in the Government. Just as the men and women who are working in the munition plants and in the fields while they send their boys to the trenches are forcing the displacement in England of the old official class which controlled parliament and the army, so in France the war has made the Government more genuinely democratic, more representative of the whole people. Viviani the partisan, the radical, the representative of labor, made more practical and more conservative by the heavy responsibilities that he has borne long and well, is a part of that movement in France just as Lloyd George is in England. He has helped to carry forward the complete subordination of party and person, of caste and creed, to the cause of country, which has given France the power to accomplish her tremendous task.

When the sick room is being ventilated, a screen should be placed in front of the window to prevent danger of a draught.

New Order Affects Freight Rates

Special to The Examiner:

WASHINGTON, July 24. — Interstate Commerce Commission to-day ordered all railroads engaged in Inter-state Commerce to cease charging proportionately lower freight rates on conditions shipped from eastern cities to the Pacific coast than on goods from eastern cities to mid-continent points. The order is effective October 15, 1917. The Commission found that lower rates charged to Pacific coast points were not justified by existing war competition.

Two Potato Crops In One Season

Oklahoma Farmer Makes His Truck Land Yield Double.

One of the revered traditions in Oklahoma agriculture is that you can't successfully grow second or fall crop Irish potatoes. Craton Nelson, living ten miles southeast of Stillwater, does it and for fourteen consecutive years has met success, says an exchange.

Of course, Nelson isn't the only farmer in this section of the country who grows second crop potatoes. There are few enough of them, however, and there have been hundreds who have tried and failed.

Mr. Nelson has outlined his method of growing fall crop potatoes. It is lready too late for other farmers to take the first step in this system, but, by following directions a paying yield might still be expected. Following is the plan as told by Mr. Markland:

"Mr. Nelson ploughs the land intended for fall potatoes during the early spring. He ploughs deeply. During the summer he continues cultivation. He keeps in the soil all of the moisture that is possible to save.

"Seed for the second crop is taken from the first crop, and every safeguard is placed around the harvesting of this crop to insure seed potatoes that will germinate properly. The potatoes are dug early in the morning, and the sun is not allowed to touch them.

Mr. Nelson selects potatoes about the size of a small egg and then splits them once through the blossom end. No effort is made to cure tre potatoes used for seed. They are usually planted immediately after cutting. The potatoes are planted in the cool of the morning or immediately after a shower. They are planted in a deep furrow and plenty of dirt thrown over them. Care is taken that the top soil is not thrown on the seed.

"Aside from his preparation of the ground to obtain as much moisture conservation as possible, Mr. Nelson attributes his success to three things:

Fist—He uses Early Triumph variety.

Second—He never plants a potato without cutting it.

Third—He never allows the sun to touch the potato.

There is little difficulty in keeping second crop Irish potatoes in this country. The difficulty is in growing them. Other farmers have had success with second crop potatoes, but it usually will be found that they use much the same method as Mr. Nelson. All of them agree that the first crop potatoes must be kept out of the sun. In storing first crop potatoes this point is also vital."

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

A Crop of Potatoes

It Was Connected With a Romance.

By F. A. MITCHEL

When the time approached for our going to our modest country home for the summer I had just parted with my fifth servant in as many months. I concluded to advertise for another. I wrote out a tempting description of the place, expatiating on the delicious country air and mentioning that the house stood in a four acre lot.

I received just one reply. A few days after the issue of the advertisement a girl came to see me who said that she was looking for a situation. She was very plainly dressed, but there was an air about her that did not accord with her attire. She did not seem so interested in the wages I proposed to pay as in the place where she was to spend the summer. She asked me if there was room for a kitchen garden, adding that she would like to try her hand at raising vegetables. When I informed her that she could have all the land she could plant, that the soil was excellent and had never grown anything but grass, she accepted the position, but on condition that she might be permitted to go to the place by the middle of April in order to get her planting done in season. It was not my intention to go to the country before the 1st of May.

Margaret, my new maid, agreed to fill her position in my household for the few weeks remaining till she was to depart for the country. She came one day at noon and cooked the dinner. I had told my husband that I had secured a prize, and when he saw Margaret and ate the dinner she had prepared he admitted that I was right in my assumption.

"But I fear," he said, "that she will be above her work. She is evidently not of the servant class. I can't exactly make out to what class she belongs; but, from her personality, leaving out the fact that she is a servant, I would place her well up in the social scale. I don't believe she will be satisfied to remain long with you."

"If she plants a garden she will have to remain with me," I replied, "till she has gathered her crop."

Margaret showed no disposition to be dissatisfied with her work so long as we were in the city nor, for that matter, ever displayed such dissatisfaction. True, I treated her with more consideration than I had ever treated a servant before. But she did not exact such consideration and was always perfectly respectful to me, though she never addressed me as "ma'am." It was always "Yes, Mrs. Ackerman," and "No, Mrs. Ackerman."

On the 15th of April my maid left me for the country. I supposed that she would fear to sleep alone in the house, but she said she might have a sister with her some of the time, with my permission. This I of course granted. We missed the delightful meals Margaret prepared for us, for she was the best cook I ever knew. I was glad when the time came to follow her, though my husband said that if she were to make a farmer of herself she would deteriorate as a cook.

When I reached my cottage I found Margaret domesticated. She was alone, her sister having gone away the day before my arrival. What was my surprise to see two-thirds of the ground laid out for a garden and a few sprouts here and there. I asked Margaret who had turned over the ground, and she said she had hired a farmer in the neighborhood to plow it and a friend of hers had leveled it. She had done the rest herself.

"What have you planted, Margaret?" I asked.

"I have put in a variety in that corner," she said, pointing, "for your table; the rest has been given up to potatoes."

"Potatoes!" I exclaimed. "What do you propose to do with so many potatoes?"

"Sell them. You see, Mrs. Ackerman, that the world's war is reducing the earth's products. Not only will this tend to raise the price of food, but speculators will make this an excuse to hoard their products, which will greatly enhance the market value. I have put in this crop on speculation."

I was astonished. A servant girl had secured a situation that brought with it a piece of ground and had used it to enter upon a speculation. Her action was predicated upon sound reasoning and business principles. My husband's prediction that I would find her above her business was true in one respect, but false in another. She knew her place as a servant, but was competent to act in a far wider field.

As the weather warmed the vegetables in Margaret's garden came up, and since both the soil and the weather were admirably fitted for the growth of potatoes there was every prospect of her securing a fine crop. The stalks were not too luxuriant, and Margaret said she did not fear that the crop would be mostly stalk with few potatoes. The corner that she had planted for our private use gave us such a variety of vegetable food as one could enjoy.

And this corner was of especial satisfaction to us because by midsummer Margaret's calculations on prices had begun to show themselves correct. We could not buy vegetables even from the farmers about us at prices we could afford to pay, and, as for potatoes, when the old year's stock had given out one would have been obliged to go without them had we not bought the few we needed from Margaret.

When the summer was drawing to an end a man drove up in a wagon one morning and asked if Margaret Sayles was in. Margaret was out in the garden, and I sent him there. Later I saw him digging the potatoes, putting them in gunny sacks and loading them on to the wagon. I did not notice the man's appearance particularly, but he wore a slouch felt hat and a pair of overalls. I don't know how many loads of potatoes he took away with him, but he was all day at the work.

That evening I asked Margaret how she was coming out on her crop. She said that she believed she would do very well, since potatoes were increasing in price every day. I replied that I was well aware of the fact, to my cost. She added that she had been solicited by the neighboring farmers to hold her property for a better price, but had declined. She did not believe in the principle and would risk losing all she had made. The price might drop and the potatoes might rot on her hands. I told her I thought she was wise.

We returned to the city on the 1st of September. Margaret continued to serve me faithfully till the end of the year, when she notified me that she expected to be married in the spring and would leave me whenever I had found another servant to suit me. Of course this was a great disappointment, but I had no blame for Margaret. I asked her whom she was to marry, and she told me her betrothed was the man who had carted away her potatoes, adding that he was a practical gardener.

When she told me this I was sorry that I had not more carefully noticed the man. I was a trifle disappointed that she was not to marry some one in a higher station, for both my husband and I clung to the idea that Margaret was fitted to fill almost any grade in social life. I asked a number of other questions about her betrothed, but she was as reticent about this as she had been about all matters pertaining to herself.

Margaret would not leave me till I had tried several persons to take her place. Finally I found a woman who was fairly satisfactory, and I insisted on parting with Margaret, for I knew that she wished to spend her time preparing for her wedding. I felt that I was losing a companion rather than a servant, and she seemed to have formed some attachment for me.

"Let me know when the wedding is to come off," I said.

"You will certainly receive an invitation," was her reply.

One morning in June it came. It was an engraved note stating that Mrs. Elihu Sayles would be pleased to see me at the wedding of her daughter, Margaret, at the residence of Mr. William Ferguson. There was nothing about it that bespoke the servant. Indeed, there was everything indicating that the parties concerned were of the better class.

On the day of the nuptials I drove up to the house of Mr. Ferguson, which I found on a first class residence street. Other vehicles were arriving, and those alighting were in costumes appropriate to a wedding in high life. There were perhaps fifty guests in all. At noon the couple took their position before the officiating clergyman, and in the groom, attired in a Prince Albert coat and gray trousers, I recognized the man who had carted away Margaret's potatoes. The bride was in traveling costume.

After the ceremony I passed the bride with the throng of guests, and her mother, saying that she would like to make me acquainted with her brother, Mr. Ferguson, took me to him. He beckoned me to follow him to another room and then and there explained the mystery of Margaret and her potato crop.

"If I were a young man seeking a helpmate," he said, "I should consider myself most fortunate if I could secure my niece Margaret. Her father brought her up in comfort, but practically. He considered the basis of a woman's education cookery and sent his daughter to a cooking school. He died a few years ago, and she has since, up to the time she went to you, made her living by some plan connected with cooking. She became engaged to the man she has just married a year ago. He has been studying agriculture and has just been graduated, but had no funds. Seeing your advertisement, it occurred to Margaret that by accepting a position with you she might secure the use of ground without cost on which to raise a crop. She sold her potatoes for $800, which is the capital on which the couple are to commence married life. Her husband will become scientific superintendent of a gentleman's farm at a good salary."

I was introduced to a number of Margaret's friends and relatives and found them all persons of refinement. Furthermore, they all spoke in the highest terms of her, not only praising her for her practical makeup, but especially commenting upon the absence in her of that false pride which prevents so many persons from accepting positions which are calculated to exclude them from social prestige. She did not hesitate to take a position which, though considered servile by the world, is perfectly honorable and furnished the key to fortune.

Margaret and her husband made a second step upward, occupying a cottage on the farm he managed, but it was not long before they had accumulated sufficient capital to buy a tract of land on which they planted fruit trees and eventually made a fortune.

There is nothing to be added to my story except that Margaret has become one of my most valued friends.

LITTLE BOY HAD DIARRHOEA
Only Blood Passed Bowels

Diarrhoea, dysentery and summer complaint are responsible for more deaths, especially of children, during the summer months, than any other form of disease.

Diarrhoea does not need to persist for any length of time until the whole system is weakened and no other disease so quickly undermines the strength and brings about a condition of prostration and often collapse.

Mrs. E. Stoddard, Lower Clark's Harbour, N.S., writes. "When my little boy was a year and a half old he was taken awfully bad with diarrhoea. I had the doctor, but he got worse so that only blood passed his bowels. I tried everything, but he got no relief. One day while I was at work, I picked up a piece of paper, and on it was an advertisement for Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry. After trying a bottle he began to get better and the second one made a cure. I would not be without it in the house for my little ones. I am proud to say "Dr. Fowler's" saved my little boy's life."

Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry has been on the market for the past 72 years and there are many imitations of this wonderful bowel complaint remedy. See that you get the genuine when you ask for it. Price 35c.

Early American Theatricals.

The earliest attempt to introduce theatrical performances in this country was made about 1686 in New England, but Increase Mather wrote and spoke so forcibly in opposition to the project that it was speedily abandoned. The first theatrical performance in New York city of which there is any clear record was given March 5, 1750. The theater was on Nassau street, between John street and Maiden lane, and the play was "Richard III.," Thomas Kean, the junior manager of the company, enacting the part of Richard.—New York World.

BOILED THEM TO DEATH.

How Poisoners Were Punished in the Good Old Days.

Our forefathers deemed hanging too good for people who went about deliberately poisoning other people. They substituted for that punishment boiling to death, the first to suffer this penalty being Richard Rosse, cook to the bishop of Rochester in the reign of Henry VIII.

In medieval times in Europe poisoners when detected were usually broken alive upon the wheel after having first been given a taste of the rack while in prison awaiting execution as a sort of gentle reminder of what they had presently got to go through.

For wholesale poisoners, however, even this dreadful death was not deemed sufficiently painful, and new and special modes of punishment were invented. Thus Louise Mabre, a Parisian baby farmer, who in 1763 was proved to have done to death no fewer than sixty-two infants by administering to them carefully graduated doses of white arsenic mingled with powdered glass, was sentenced to be shut up in an iron cage with sixteen wild cats and suspended over a slow fire.

This was done, and with the result that when the cats became infuriated with heat and pain they turned their rage upon her "and after thirty-five minutes of the most horrible sufferings put an end to her existence, the whole of the cats dying at the same time or within a few minutes after."—London Mail.

SHIPPING DAY OLD CHICKS.

As They Need No Water Nor Food For Sixty Hours It Is Easy.

When little chicks come from the shell they need neither water nor food for sixty hours. That fact has given rise to a new business. Day old chicks are sold and shipped by people who operate incubators. Those who buy are relieved of the trouble, of the inconvenience, and to some extent of the uncertainty of hatching. Only a small percentage of day old chicks perish while on the way from shipper to customer. People are thus enabled to get the little chicks and begin the poultry business without the necessity of purchasing an incubator.

Special boxes of pasteboard are made for shipping purposes. Some have a capacity of twenty-five chicks, some of fifty and some of 100. It is doubtless best that no more than twenty-five shall in any case occupy a single compartment. The walls of the boxes are moderately thick, and some soft material as grass is put in the bottom. Otherwise there are no especial provisions against cold weather. However, the chicks themselves may be depended upon to cluster together and in this way keep one another warm.

The boxes are not to be opened en route nor are the chicks to be given food or water. Successful shipments have been made for 2,000 miles.—Popular Science Monthly.

Tanned Skin.

In the majority of cases tanned skin is an indication of health. It is a condition resulting from the action of chemical rays or of the ultra violet rays of the sun on the pigment of the skin. Tan may be produced also by exposure to the rays of a mercury lamp or it may be caused electrically. But in these cases it is no indication of the state of health. It does not mean that there has been a multiplication of red corpuscles in the blood, such as follows healthful exercise in the open air. The tan acquired by the skin at sea or ashore as a result of life and exercise in the open air is always a sign of health, for the reason that it is accompanied by general conditions that do not obtain in the case of electric tan.—New York Times.

Ouimet To Be Among Those Drafted First

BOSTON, July 24.—Francis Ouimen, Western amateur golf champion, former national amateur and open champion, is certain to be one of Uncle Sam's new army. His number is 2166, which was the 127th number to be drawn at Washington. But he is the 26th man who must report in Brookline, his place of registration.

There are no grounds on which Ouimet can claim exemption, and his physique seems to make it sure that he will be in training at Ayer Junction, Mass., in September.

Ouimet will be a conscript by less than 24 hours. He was born on June 5, 1886, which made him 30 years and 364 days old on registration day. Ouimet, Western amateur golf champion, was non-committal on the result of the draft.

RICHARD HALL & SON LIMITED

THE FOOD CONTROLLER'S DEPARTMENT PROMISES TO BE HUGE MACHINE

Wide Variety of Bodies Have Been United and If Mr. Hanna's Plans Materialize the Department Will Cover Every Branch of Life and Business

OTTAWA, July 23.—The collective food experience of the Dominion is to be employed to solve the food problem and secure essential food supplies for Great Britain and the allied armies and nations, according to official announcement to-day. There is to be the closest possible co-operation between the Food Controller's office, the Federal and Provincial Governments, and national and local organisations of a public character.

The basis of organization of the Food Controller's office provides for the creation of six departments to deal with various phases of the food problem.

ALL SORTS OF BODIES IN IT

There will be a central Advisory Committee, composed of representatives of the Government, the churches, labour organizations, educational departments and institutions, urban interests, farmers, rural municipalities, and men's and women's organisations. This central body will advise the departments through the Food Controller.

Provincial machinery is to be established through the creation of special Provincial committees to discussion upon plans prepared by the departments and approved by the Food Controller. Each Provincial committee will include in its personnel representatives of the Government, the churches, schools, farmers, labour, urban and rural districts, and men's and women's associations. In addition, special committees, representing producers, manufacturers handlers, and consumers of food products, will be appointed to investigate and formulate plans for action on individual problems dealt with by the departments. Action has already been taken in this regard by the creation of the Food Consumption Central Committee and the Fish Committee.

ORGANIZATION IN THE OFFICE

The interior organization of the Food Controller's office will include:

Food saving department.
Food industries department.
Food distribution department.
Information and statistics department.
Business and office department.
Education department.

The food saving department will deal with such problems as:

(a) Consumption in public eating places, etc.

(b) Instruction in preservation of perishable products.

(d) Instruction in substitution of foods, to stock the place of those required for export.

(e) Securing the co-operation of national, Provincial, and local organisations.

The food industries department will have charge of:

(a) Matter relating to flour, bread, meat, fish, dairy products, canned and manufactured food.

(b) Preparation of certain foods in order to encourage their use and to insure plentiful supplies.

The food distribution department will be divided into sections:

(a) To deal with purchase, prices, storage, transport, and sale of food for home consumption, and export problems.

(b) To advise with British and foreign buyers.

(c) To advise with handlers and shippers.

SUB-DIVISION OF THEME.

The information and statistics department will have sub-divisions:

(a) To gather statistics from Government departments and international sources, and tabulate them for the use of the other departments.

(b) Ascertain the quantity, location, ownership, and sources of food supplies for home consumption and for export.

The business department, in charge of the assistant chief of staff, will handle general office organisations, accounting, finances, office supplies, and systematic filing of all data and correspondence.

The education department will be responsible for the dissemination of general news for the information and instruction of the public and the publication of all educational and other matters supplied to it by other departments.

The personnel of the national and Provincial Advisory Committees and the heads of the various departments will be announced shortly.

STIRRING APPEAL IS MADE TO CANADIANS

1917, figures about which there could be no doubt, it was found that unless the people of the allied nations in Europe were to go hungry and the soldiers to be without food there would have to be a readjustment all over the world.

WHY FOOD CONTROLLERS?

"Is the position acute? Yes, it is acute. Has it recently been discovered? No, it has been discovered since last summer, when the need in Great Britain and her allies was for everything that the United States and other friendly countries could do to keep them from starvation became plain. Why, then, appoint a Food Controller for Canada? For the same reason," Mr. Hanna went on, "as a Food Controller was appointed in the United States. That was because the President and those behind him knew that if the war was to be prosecuted to a successful issue the men at the front would have to be fed, and they could be fed only if the United States cut down its own normal consumption of wheat and staple things which could be liberated for export. That is why the Food Controller was appointed in the States. For identical reasons the Food Controller was appointed in the Dominion. For the same reason there had to be appointed Food Controllers in England and in France, and in other countries engaged in the war.

LEAN ON U. S. AND CANADA

Mr. Hanna then restated what he had already made public about the available food supply this year. He said that Great Britain and her allies would require this year 1,105,000,000 bushels of wheat to keep them fed. Only 645,000,000 bushels of this could be produced so far this year leaving a shortage of 460,000,000 bushels. That margin was within sight and could be shipped to the European ports if times were normal. But shipping facilities had been so cut down and were being cut down so rapidly that instead of drawing from Argentina, India and Australia, tonnage was only available to carry it from the United States and Canada. On this side of the Atlantic there was only 300,000,000 bushels in sight and there would therefore be a deficiency on the estimate of 160,000,000 bushels.

NO HUNGER AT FRONT

"Now let me state that the allies are dependent for the supply on the United States and Canada if he armies are not to retire before the enemy in defeat because they may not have enough food to maintain them in the battle they have so far fought so well. If we understand the spirit of the people in the United States and Canada it is that they will be ready to spare everything so that the boys at the front shall not go hungry."

HOW TO AVERT SHORTAGE

If the people of the United States and of Canada would cut down their consumption of wheat by one-sixth there would be no question of a shortage.

But it would be necessary to make allowances for carelessness, and those who would be willing to save might have to save more even than their proper share to make up for the indifference of many. That was where the vast importance of women's part in this war-saving came in. "We can with your help," said the Food Controller, "save the situation and help the war and meet our men joyfully when they come back with victory achieved." (Applause).

LLOYD GEORGE SPOKE WITH ASSURANCE.

Mr. Hanna took up the speech reported in yesterday's newspaper of Mr. Lloyd George, in which he stated: "So far from our starving, our food supply for 7-18 has already been secured, subject of course to reasonable economy." "Mr. Lloyd George made that statement with the assurance behind him of the President of the United States and its people sacrifice to enable them to go on with the war, and to release from consumption the storeable and shipable goods.

COMMISSIONERS ON O'CONNOR REPORT.

Mr. Hanna gave the names of the Commissioners: Price and Waterhouse & Company, Clarksons, Gordon & Co., and Mr. F. G. Henderson, K.C., of Ottawa. He asked in view of the appointment of that commission that judgment be suspended "whether it be on bread or bacon or anything else—but we will fix prices where necessary," said the Food Controller with a tone of marked confidence in the ability of his department to do so.

WASTAGE IN GARBAGE CANS

He made an appeal to the assembled women, and Convocation Hall was overflowing, to prevent waste. The head of the big firm of Armour's, packers, had stated that $700,000,000 was wasted into garbage cans in the United States annually. That meant $7 ahead. If the proportion was the same in Canada, it meant that $56,000,000 annually went into the garbage can, of which he believed $50,000,000 could be saved. If only the housewife looked after it before it got there. (Laughter and applause). Mr. Hanna concluded a strikingly powerful address, which left that deep impression likely to translate itself into action, by paying a high compliment to the Resources Committee and the other bodies, which had worked so excellently to bring things to a good state of organization.

WILL CHECK PRICES.

Turning aside, the Food Controller said that the Government would not hesitate to check prices if necessary. They had the power and would check prices in those things they thought right. (Loud applause.) He said there were places in the Dominion where bread was selling for 7 1-2c a loaf; not so bad considering the price of wheat, but there were other places where it was selling at 12 and 14 cents and even higher rates, with no valid excuse for it except that some one had control of the market.

"We have heard a great deal about to relieve the situation in Europe. And he had behind him the assurance of the Government of Canada that they would release the storeable and shipable goods—(applause)—so that our allies in Europe should not go hungry. Without those assurances the statement of Lloyd George could not have been made at all."

PRESIDENT WILSON'S WORD

That the actual supply metioned by the British Premier was not yet on the shores of Britain was explained and the Food Controller added that it was only 'assured' by the word of the President of the United States, "whose word is far more than a scrap of paper, and we know will be fulfilled." (Applause).

The reading of the message from Lord Rhondda was received with applause. The excellent work of the wheat was commented upon favourably by the farmers in preparing ground for ly, and Mr. Hanna added his remark to that of the Premier, that many more workers would be needed to harvest what had been sown. "It would be better not to have so good a crop as we have had than to have it and then to eat it ourselves," he said—a sentiment that won approval.

PEOPLE HAVE LITTLE TO COMPLAIN OF.

"Yet, I ask this audience how many have ever sacrificed since the war began. Not one, I fancy. How many have given up anything that cost them anything. None. Yet ,I ask you whether what the noble men in the trenches are doing is not worth a sacrifice."

The Premier made it plain that the demand for men for the farms is far in excess of the supply. He said that there were at least 2,000 applications in hand and that these only represented a few. Probably three or four times 2,000 men could be usefully employed on farms in the Province. There had been disappointments in one or two places. It was critical that far more men should go out on the land to get the crop of 1917 in. He thought, too, that every dollar saved in not buying things which were mere luxuries would do much to release men for other occupations, and he concluded by giving figures, already published, of the enormous losses in fire in the Province. In the first half of 1917 there had been 4,839 fires doing damage estimated at $6,988,000, in which 75 per cent. had involved foodstuffs and munitions; and two-thirds of which was preventible.

We shall hear a lot more about fish. In the course of two weeks, why everyone in the city will be able to go about with a fish in each pocket." (Laughter).

A Voice—What about bacon?

Mr. Hanna—I have not dodged bacon, either. It was only to-day that the official communication came to me that an official Commission had been appointed on that. They will go into the question of bacon, no matter whose bacon it is. I know that was meant. The man at the head is familiar with that, and he will make a report that will stand fire and criticism, no matter where from. (Applause).

Refuses To Save Child

Special to The Examiner:

CHICAGO, July 24.—Dr. H. J. Haiselden, who let Baby Hollinger die because nature had made a mistake, has again decreed death for the infant daughter of William and Mrs. Eva Meter, of West Pullman. When the child was born, the upper skull cap was missing. A diminutive brain, which seemed to promise imbecility, was covered only by a thin, transparent membrane. The body was deformed.

"The baby could be saved," said Dr. Haiselden. "This could be done by cutting a patch of skin from the back and grafting it over the exposed brain. I will feed it as long as life remains, but I will not operate."

RICHARD HALL & SON LIMITED

THE FOOD CONTROLLER'S DEPARTMENT PROMISES TO BE HUGE MACHINE

Wide Variety of Bodies Have Been United and if Mr. Hanna's Plans Materialize the Department Will Cover Every Branch of Life and Business

OTTAWA, July 23.—The collective food experience of the Dominion is to be employed to solve the food problem and secure essential food supplies for Great Britain and the allied armies and nations, according to official announcement to-day. There is to be the closest possible co-operation between the Food Controller's office, the Federal and Provincial Governments, and national and local organizations of a public character.

The basis of organization of the Food Controller's office provides for the creation of six departments to deal with various phases of the food problem.

ALL SORTS OF BODIES IN IT

There will be a central Advisory Committee, composed of representatives of the Government, the churches, labour organizations, educational departments and institutions, urban interests, farmers, rural municipalities, and men's and women's organizations. This central body will advise the departments through the Food Controller.

Provincial machinery is to be established through the creation of special Provincial committees to advise upon plans proposed by the departments and approved by the Food Controller. Each Provincial committee will include in its personnel representatives of the Government, the churches, schools, farmers, labour, urban and rural districts, and men's and women's associations. In addition, special committees, representing producers, manufacturers handlers, and consumers of food products, will be appointed to investigate and formulate plans for action on individual problems dealt with by the departments. Action has already been taken in this regard by the creation of the Food Consumption Central Committee and the Fish Committee.

ORGANIZATION IN THE OFFICE

The interior organization of the Food Controller's office will include:

Food saving department.
Food industries department.
Food distribution department.
Information and statistics department.
Business and office department.
Education department.

The food saving department will deal with such problems as:

(a) Consumption in public eating places, etc.

(b) Instruction in preservation of perishable products.

(d) Instruction in substitution of foods, to stock the place of those required for export.

(e) Securing the co-operation of national, Provincial, and local organizations.

The food industries department will have charge of:

(a) Matter relating to flour, bread, meat, fish, dairy products, canned and manufactured food.

(b) Preparation of certain foods in order to encourage their use and to insure plentiful supplies.

The food distribution department will be divided into sections:

(a) To deal with purchase, prices, storage, transport, and sale of food for home consumption, and export problems.

(b) To advise with British and foreign buyers.

(c) To advise with handlers and shippers.

SUB-DIVISION OF THESE.

The information and statistics department will have sub-divisions:

(a) To gather statistics from Government departments and international sources, and tabulate them for the use of the other departments.

(b) Ascertain the quantity, location, ownership, and sources of food supplies for home consumption and for export.

The business department, in charge of the assistant chief of staff, will handle general office organizations, accounting, finances, office supplies, and systematic filing of all data and correspondence.

The education department will be responsible for the dissemination of general news for the information and instruction of the public and the publication of all educational and other matters supplied to it by other departments.

The personnel of the national and Provincial Advisory Committees and the heads of the various departments will be announced shortly.

STIRRING APPEAL IS MADE TO CANADIANS

1917, figures about which there could be no doubt, it was found that unless the people of the allied nations in Europe were to go hungry and the soldiers to be without food there would have to be a readjustment all over the world.

WHY FOOD CONTROLLERS?

"Is the position acute? Yes, it is acute. Has it recently been discovered? No, it has been discovered since last summer, when the need in Great Britain and her allies was for everything that the United States and other friendly countries could do to keep them from starvation became plain. Why, then, appoint a Food Controller for Canada? For the same reason," Mr. Hanna went on, "as a Food Controller was appointed in the United States. That was because the President and those behind him knew that if the war was to be prosecuted to a successful issue the men at the front would have to be fed, and they could be fed only if the United States cut down its own normal consumption of wheat and staple things which could be liberated for export. That is why the Food Controller was appointed in the States. For identical reasons the Food Controller was appointed in the Dominion. For the same reason there had to be appointed Food Controllers in England and in France, and in other countries engaged in the war.

LOAN ON U. S. AND CANADA

Mr. Hanna then restated what he had already made public about the available food supply this year. He said that Great Britain and her allies would require this year 1,105,000,000 bushels of wheat to keep them fed. Only [illegible] bushels of this could be produced so far this year leaving a shortage of 460,000,000 bushels. That margin was within sight and could be shipped to the European ports if times were normal. But shipping facilities had been so cut down and were being cut down so rapidly that instead of drawing from Argentina, India and Australia, tonnage was only available to carry it from the United States and Canada. On this side of the Atlantic there was only 300,000,000 bushels in sight and there would therefore be a deficiency on the estimate of 160,000,000 bushels.

NO HUNGER AT FRONT

"Now let me state that the allies are dependent for the supply on the United States and Canada if he armies are not to retire before the enemy in defeat because they may not have enough food to maintain them in the battle they have so far fought so well. If we understand the spirit of the people in the United States and Canada it is that they will be ready to spare everything so that the boys at the front shall not go hungry."

HOW TO AVERT SHORTAGE

If the people of the United States and of Canada would cut down their consumption of wheat by one-sixth there would be no question of a shortage.

But it would be necessary to make allowances for carelessness, and those who would be willing to save might have to save more even than their proper share to make up for the indifference of many. That was where the vast importance of women's part in this war-saving came in. "We can with your help," said the Food Controller, "save the situation and help the war and meet our men joyfully when they come back with victory achieved." (Applause).

LLOYD GEORGE SPOKE WITH ASSURANCE.

Mr. Hanna took up the speech reported in yesterday's newspaper of Mr. Lloyd George, in which he stated: "So far from our starving, our food supply for 7-18 has already been secured, subject of course to reasonable economy." "Mr. Lloyd George made that statement with the assurance behind him of the President of the United States and its people sacrifice to enable them to go on with the war, and to release from consumption the storeable and shipable goods.

COMMISSIONERS ON O'CONNOR REPORT.

Mr. Hanna gave the names of the Commissioners: Price and Waterhouse & Company, Clarkson, Gordon & Co., and Mr. F. G. Henderson, K.C., of Ottawa. He asked in view of the appointment of that commission that judgment be suspended "whether it be on bread or bacon or anything else—but we will fix prices where necessary," said the Food Controller with a tone of marked confidence in the ability of his department to do so.

WASTAGE IN GARBAGE CANS

He made an appeal to the assembled women, and Convocation Hall was overflowing, to prevent waste. The head of the big firm of Armour's, packers, had stated that $700,000,000 was wasted into garbage cans in the United States annually. That meant $7 ahead. If the proportion was the same in Canada, it meant that $56,000,000 annually went into the garbage can, of which he believed $50,000,000 could be saved. If only the housewife looked after it before it got there. (Laughter and applause). Mr. Hanna concluded a strikingly powerful address, which left that deep impression likely to translate itself into action, by paying a high compliment to the Resources Committee and the other bodies, which had worked so excellently to bring things to a good state of organization.

WILL CHECK PRICES.

Turning aside, the Food Control[illegible] said that the Government would not hesitate to check prices if necessary. They had the power and would check prices in those things they thought right. (Loud applause.) He said there were places in the Dominion where bread was selling for 7 1-2c a loaf; not so bad considering the price of wheat, but there were other places where it was selling at 12 and 14 cents and even higher rates, with no valid excuse for it except that some one had control of the market.

And he had behind him the assurance of the Government of Canada that they would release the storeable and shipable goods—(applause)—so that our allies in Europe should not go hungry. Without those assurances the statement of Lloyd George could not have been made at all."

PRESIDENT WILSON'S WORD

That the actual supply metioned by the British Premier was not yet on the shores of Britain was explained and the Food Controller added that it was only 'assured' by the word of the President of the United States, "whose word is far more than a scrap of paper, and we know will be fulfilled." (Applause).

CORP. W. K. McGEE DESCRIBES INCIDENTS OF LIFE ON A TRANSPORT

Cobourg Heavy Battery Draft Were Used as Guards for the Waterproof Doors and Also Had to Look After Lifeboats.

MANY TROOPS ON BOARD

Mrs. Chas. H. McGee has received the following interesting letter from her son, Corp. W. K. McGee, who went overseas with a recent draft from the Cobourg Heavy Battery:

Sunday, June 24, 1917.
3 O'clock.

Dear Mother, Dad, and Ern.—On board ship at last and believe me it is some size, about 600 feet long, with seven decks, I think, above the water line. Her name is Justicia, I guess, so everybody says. We arrived in Halifax Saturday morning, about 7 o'clock, but had to stay on the train till after 10. We then detrained and marched down to the pier, carrying everything we owned. It certainly was some heavy load, but we didn't have far to march, so we got along very well. We immediately went on board ship and were placed in our places. Our bunch were put away down in the bottom, I guess. Anyway we are level with the water. For the senior branch on board ship, for that's what we are, we have received some rotten places. Our Lieutenant is trying to get us into staterooms, but I don't know wwhether he shall succeed or not. Our grub on board train was rotten, getting porridge, dice of bread, sausages and coffee for breakfast; cold meat, bread, jam and tea for dinner skilly, bread and jam and tea, for tea. We are getting better grub on board ship, because this morning we had porridge, bread and eggs and coffee; for dinner we had soup, roast beef with vegetables, pickles, bread, and pudding; for supper, cold meat, bread and jam and tea.

We certainly had a dandy trip through from Montreal. Friday afternoon we ran all afternoon alongside of a river, which had very large hills or mountains on each side of it. As the sun shone the most of the time, pretty nearly all the fellows had their heads out of the windows. We are still in harbour here; we left the pier yesterday afternoon, and anchored about a quarter of a mile out. There are three cruisers and an auxiliary cruiser and a torpedo boat also anchored near us. I saw a hospital ship going out yesterday. They have submarine nets across the harbour to keep enemy subs. out. Halifax seems to be a very dirty place; the smoke from all the ships lies all over the land, making it very hazy. We are able to see the town fine from where we are, as it is on a side of a hill.

Friday, p.m.—As we came to Campbelltown they let us off for a few minutes; that was the first time since we left Cobourg on Wednesday night. When we got into Moncton, N.B., which is a large city, they let us all off and we went for a route march down town. There were six hundred troops in the parade. I did not think much of the place, as it was poorly lit and the street cars are the rummiest looking affairs I ever saw. We left there about 11 o'clock and didn't stop till we came to Truro, N.S.

CORP W. K. McGEE

We have about four or five thousand troops on board and it certainly is some bunch. I haven't been all over it yet; it is so big. I got lost a couple of times last night when I was trying to find our sleeping quarters.

It doesn't seem much like Sunday on board, as everybody is kicking around, and not doing much of anything. Our Battery has all the fatigues to do to-day. I paraded sick this morning, having a sore nose, so I got out of all fatigues. The doctor put some stuff on it, so I guess it will be all right. I understand we have a very large cargo of wheat and sugar, so if a sub. catches us we will be some mark. I forgot to tell you that we sleep in hammocks slung from the ceiling, and say, when everybody gets rolled in they are some fine looking bunch.

Monday, p.m., and just dismissed from parade.—Paraded with lifebelts this p.m. There were several very big freighters and a large passenger liner came in shortly after dinner. They were all from Holland or were Norwegian. The passenger liner had a very large number of people aboard, and as they were all on deck we gave them the cheer as they passed by.

Out on the ocean now, Tuesday p.m., 2.30 o'clock. We sailed out of Halifax harbour last night at eight o'clock, and I think every man was on deck cheering their heads off. The water to-day is very calm and it is warm as the sun is shining very brightly. Our Battery has been put on permanent guard over the boat; eighty-four of them have all watertight doors to shut; that is, if the gong sounds every man pulls a small lever which automatically closes the door. We have three shifts on this, so that every man has four hours on and eight off. The remainder of the boys (12) have been placed on lookouts. I was picked for look-out duty but I like it fine, only it is pretty cold standing in one spot all the time. We have only to put in two hours on and get eight hours off. Our duties are to look out for all ships or subs. coming towards us, and if we see one we immediately notify the bridge. I was on from 8 to 10 last night; 6 to 8 this morning, and go on again this afternoon at 4 o'clock. You certainly have to keep your eyes open when up there, because if you were caught sleeping on duty they would likely shoot you. My post is directly below the Captain's bridge, and on the upper deck, and it seems like looking down from a "sky-scraper" to look down towards the water. Clarence was put on guard over one of the water-tight doors. Everybody has to wear a lifebelt all the time, for, if you don't you are likely to be put into the clink.

Wednesday night, 8.30 p.m., and everything going fine. Sea very calm ever since we started. Had our quarters changed last night, and are now in state rooms with four bunks in each. It certainly is much nicer than sleeping in hammocks, because there are pillows, blankets and springs. We had our duties changed again this p.m. We have been placed on guard over the life-boats, with guns and ammunition, and when an alarm is sounded we immediately rush to our posts and keep the men from overcrowding the boats. We are last off the boatt if she should start to sink. Was called out at one o'clock to take my watch from 2 to 4 on look-out. It certainly is lovely getting up so early, but then you sleep with your clothes all on, so it isn't much trouble getting out. It wasn't very dark, but it was dark enough. The salt water has a phosphorus glare in places at night which makes it very pretty to look at.

Thursday, 6.00 p.m. Sea is rolling a little more to-day than previously. Quite a large number of fellows are seasick, but, thank goodness, none of our bunch are on it yet. We don't have anything to do now that we have to guard the boats. The general danger alarm was sounded this afternoon and if you could have seen the rush for our posts you surely would think we were going down. We were sure there in a hustle. The boat that I am guarding is to take off an American forestry draft. There sure are some big men in it.

Saturday, 2 o'clock.—Very foggy to-day; that is this a.m., but has cleared off fine now. Everybody in our company still O.K. Will soon be on dry land, so will not be sorry when we are.

Monday, 12.00, noon; and as I don't eat till 12.30 I shall pen some more lines. I was promoted to the rank of Corporal this morning, so take my place among the N.C.O.'s. Some class now. It is much colder to-day because we are sailing north. They say, too, that we ought to sight land to-night, as we are in the danger zone now. Well, shall beat it for the mess room and see what's on for dinner.

Five destroyers came out to meet us to-night and they certainly are speedy. They are awfully small-looking like small gasoline launches.

Tuesday, everybody sighted what they thought was a sub. this morning, but I guess it was a whale, because it went away from us. I would like to see one. They tell us that we shall land to-morrow morning, so I shall close now, with love for all.

Your Loving Son.

Otterpool Camp.
July 8th, 1917

We landed in Liverpool Wednesday night, July 4th, at 6 o'clock, and then immediately entrained for camp, wwhere we arrived at 3.30 o'clock. We will only be here a few days, as we expect to move to some other place, Shorncliffe, may be.

You would laugh if you saw their trains over here. Very small, but have lots of speed. We were only nine hours coming from Liverpool. Otterpool is beyond London; so we passed through London. Well, will ring off, so address my mail to my address on other page. Yours,

BILL.

DECOY LETTER FROM PETERBORO' BAGS THIEF

Remittance From Local Resident to Rochester Friend Had Gone Astray

The value of sending remittances by registered letter or by postal or express order was shown by the arrest in Rochester of a young man who has been pilfering the mail boxes in the apartment houses in that city and already some 300 letters have been found in his possession. His arrest was brought about by his stealing a decoy letter sent from a Peterborough lady to her sister, with a postal note for $100 which he attempted to cash. He had previously stolen a letter from the same party, containing a postal note for $15.00 had forged the name and obtained the money. Money sent losely in a letter is not the proper way to remit.

GOLDEN WEDDING WAS CELEBRATED

Mr. and Mrs. Higgins Have Been Married Fifty Years

The friends of Mr. and Mrs. Richard Higgins of 9th line of Smith, will be pleased to know that they have passed their golden wedding anniversary, both enjoying good health.

Invitations had been issued for the celebration of the event on June 29th, but had to be recalled on account of Mr. and Mrs. Higgins being called to Hamilton, Ont., by the death of Mrs. Higgins' only brother. The family, feeling they could not let this event pass by unnoticed, met at the family home on Saturday evening, July 21, spent a quiet evening together, and before separating presented Mrs. Higgins with a beautiful brooch and Mr. Higgins with a gold-headed cane.

Mr. and Mrs. Higgins were married June 29, 1867, at Alton, Hants, Eng., coming to Canada in 1873, and after living about one year in Port Hope, came to North Smith, where they lived for several years, moving to their present home on the 9th line in 1883, where they resided ever since.

Seven children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Higgins, five of whom are living, and with the grandchildren, were present at the gathering on Saturday evening.

The children are: Mrs. J. W. Stuart, 993 Homewood avenue, Peterborough; Mrs. Albert Northey, North Smith; Miss Ella B. Higgins, R.N. Canton Ohio; Mr. Alfred E. and N. Stanley Higgins, both of Smith.

Two grandsons were unable to be present, as they are overseas serving king and country. They are: Lieut. L. J. Stuart, who spent some time in the trenches in 1916 and was invalided to England, where he is at present; and Gunner Claire H. Stuart, with the 29th Battery, C.F.A., "Somewhere in France."

CHEESE SOLD AT 20½ CENTS IN LINDSAY

LINDSAY, July 24.—The Lindsay Cheese Board met yesterday in the Council chamber. Messrs. Gillespie, of Peterborough, and H. S. Johnston, acting for Flavelles Ltd., were the buyers present.

A letter was read by Mr. Gillespie, showing that the recent high prices paid for cheese were declining, and that there would be a congestion on the market in two weeks.

The bidding was opened by Mr. Gillespie at 20c. and quickly was advanced to 20 3-8c. Beyond this price Mr. Gillespie was reluctant to go. Considerable dissatisfaction was expressed by the sellers at the lowness of Lindsay prices in comparison with those paid at Peterborough board.

The final decision was to split the board, Flavelles Ltd. taking N. Ops, N. Harvey and Bobcaygeon at 20 1-2c., and Mr. Gillespie the rest.

The board then adjourned, to meet again in three weeks.

THE POTATO CROP ABOVE AVERAGE

Ontario Reports Encouraging —Heavy Rains Have Reduced Fruit to Large Extent

Present indications for the Ontario potato crops predict a yield per acreage above the average, according to a report issued by the Fruit Commissioner's Branch, of the Department of Agriculture in this month's fruit bulletin. The bulletin reports that in no case has a decrease in the acreage been reported from any commercial district in the province, and it is estimated that the acreage is considerably more than last year, and from five to ten per cent. above the average.

The heavy rains which have occurred throughout Ontario during the past few weeks have caused such fruits as cherries and plums to drop. The fruit crops have fallen off quite seriously on this account.

Weather conditions have also induced a rapid development of apple scab and the difficulty of spraying has allowed the disease to make serious headway. The crop of Fameuse and McIntosh varieties are reported about 50 per cent. or normal, but slightly less than last year.

The acreage of onions in Ontario has increased 25 per cent., and a normal yield per acre is expected. The tomato crop throughout Ontario is expected to be late. The crop of small fruit in Ontario are reported to be not equal to the demand, although prices are good. Prospects for the plum crop in Ontario is reported good.

A WAR STORY

"A khaki-clad warrior with a wounded arm entered the train and sat down opposite an inquisitive old gentleman. "Oh, Tommy, you're wounded!' exclaimed the latter pleasantly. 'How did it happen?' 'Well, it was this way,' began Tommy wearily. 'I was told to get even with a German sniper. He was stuck up a tree, about a mile away. He was a sergeant, as I could see——' 'As you could see?' interposed the old gentleman. 'At that distance?' 'Yes, I could see his stripes. Well, we fired at each other. He got one at me that broke my bayonet and hit me in the arm. But I soon settled him.' 'With a wounded arm?" 'Yes easy. Suddenly I heard a yell, and a wobie lot of them started to climb out of the trenches. I fired as quickly as I could and fifty of them went down.' 'Fifty,' said the old gentleman doubtfully. 'That's a lot, isn't it?' 'Yes, fifty, said Tommy, who was getting annoyed. 'Then I fixed my bayonet——' 'But you said your bayonet was broken.' 'This was the last straw. 'Look here,' said Tommy angrily. 'you don't want a story; you want an argument.''

NEW YORK'S CASUALTY LIST ON THE SABBATH

NEW YORK, July 24.—Eight drowned, two killed in an auto wreck, one injured by jumping from Brooklyn Bridge, 35 hurt by a runaway horse at Coney Island.

This is New York's casualty list the result of Sunday's pleasure seeking. Those drowned were six swimming at beaches, and two sailors from a Dutch steamer, whose sail boat upset in the Hudson.

A doctor may give a patient hope, but he charges for the time it takes to give it.

There may be a time for all things, but the wise man tackles only one thing at a time.

A Big Difference In The Price Of Sewer Tenders

City Can Do the Work at Less Than Half the Cost of a Private Contractor—City Solicitor Gordon Will Be Invited to Express An Opinion.

Tenders for the construction of the sewers on Prince, Princess and Romaine streets were opened last night at a meeting of the Board of Works, and the difference in prices were a big surprise to the committee.

The tender received from J. E. Hayes amounted to a lump sum of $30 each, or a total of $31,005.

$27,225, 126 private connections at The City Engineer tendered for about one-half the estimate of Mr. Hayes, his tender being a lump sum of $12,860, private connections $20.50 each, or a total of $15,443.

Question of Taxation.

The increased price of labour and materials will defer the construction of the sewer until the City Solicitor's opinion as to whether the by-law for the frontage tax on sewers may be revised to charge higher frontage tax.

Under the present method of taxation for sewerage, a frontage tax of 52 cents per foot is charged, while with the increased cost it would be necessary to charge $2.16 per foot.

Whether the taxpayers on the streets specified would be anxious to have the sewer should the taxation fall on them will probably decide the construction of the sewer.

G. T. R. Bridge Over The Canal At Campbellford Will Be Raised By The Company Next Week

The work of elevating the G.T.R. bridge at Campbellford will be commenced next week, according to reliable information received to-day. The gang of men under Mr. Tom Yarrow, who are now engaged in hauling gravel from McBurney's pit near Garden Hill, to the main line, will be brought around to the Campbellford line, probably on Monday.

This may be regarded as a satisfactory result of the agitation. Mayor Duffus persisted in keeping stirred up several months ago, and which resulted in several deputations going to Ottawa. Capt. Burnham assisted the municipal representatives, but it was his opinion that the Minister of Railways and Canals was not sufficiently keen in pressing the demand that the railway remove the Campbellford obstruction.

The road bed will have to raised and strengthened, and it is expected that the work will be pushed forward as fast as possible. By this co-operation on the part of the G. T. R. there is every likelihood that the Canal will be opened between Peterborough and Trenton within a short time, and that trips may be made over the long route this season. It may be, even, that supplies of coal will be brought in by barges from the lake front before the cold weather sets in. The opening of this southern section of the canal at this time is undoubtedly a result of the pressure that was drum-fired upon the authorities at Ottawa, and evidently transmitted to the G. T. R.

Quaker Oats Co. Purchase Sand From the City

City Will Make $600 Out of Deal With Company

Mr. W. H. Denham of the Quaker Oats Company waited on the Board of Works, last night, with a request that the City Trust Commissioner's be given permission to sell to the Quaker Oats from 3,000 to 5,000 yards of sand, to be taken from the Hilliard farm, at 20 cents per yard. After some deliberation as to whether the sand taken away would interfere with the buildings on the property, and as to whether the city, at a future date, might need the sand, and be compelled to buy at an increased price from other sources, permission was given for the sale of 3,000 yards of sand.

City Engineer Parsons, Street Commissioner Evans and the Construction Company will see that the buildings are not interfered with on the property.

Permission Granted.

Other smaller matters dealt with were:

Permission given to Mr. Murray to wire in six feet of the city property in front of his home, corner of Park and Sherbrooke streets, which he will lease from the city at a nominal rent of 25 cents a year.

Will Move Boxes.

The garbage boxes belonging to the Canadian Advertising Company will be removed and placed where the street commissioner sees fit.

Keep Siding Clear.

The C. P. R. will be ordered to keep the siding on Rink and Stewart street clear of box cars which obscure the approach of trains.

A Precaution.

The City Solicitor will be asked to prepare a by-law against allowing large amounts of inflammable material to be kept in the city limits.

Cedar Street.

Ald. Worth reported the condition of Cedar street to be in bad shape from water running from the hydrants. The matter will be looked into.

Left to the Council.

A request from Mr. Mallory for a 12ft foot pavement in from of his store, on Reid street, will be left for the Council to deal with.

Will be Drained.

A hole in front of Mrs. McWilliams' residence on Romaine street, will be filled, and the street, west of Romaine, will be drained.

The matter of the Green Estate was left over. This concerns a street encroachment.

Request Granted.

A request from the Hydro Electric to lay mains on streets, was granted.

Will Erect Poles.

Permission was given to the Bell Telephone Co. to erect poles on streets specified in their request.

Street Names.

A communication from the Trades and Labour Union favoured having the names of streets placed on the corners.

A celebration.

A celebration of the third anniversary of the declaration of war was suggested by Acting Mayor Duncan. This matter will be left in the hands of the Mayor.

Thursday Half Holiday.

The City Offices will be closed on Thursday afternoons during August.

When Drinking Liquor Means Having It And Carries A $200 Fine

Archie McIntyre of Havelock, was fined $200 and costs by Magistrate Langley in the County Police Court this morning in deciding a case Inspector Stewart opened up several weeks ago.

In finding the defendant guilty, Magistrate Langley was guided by a broad amendment as follows: "Subsection one of section forty-nine is amended by adding the clause: Any person who drinks liquor in a place where such liquor cannot lawfully be kept shall be deemed to have liquor in contravention of this act."

McIntyre admitted drinking liquor in a certain yard although he denied that he had had any in his possession. But by this amendment, the mere act of taking a drink in a place where liquor should not be kept, compromises the drinker with what may be termed the possession clause and leaves him liable to a $200 fine.

Inspector Stewart remarked that this clause should be heeded, and especially should it be understood.

Chief Howard Cannot Attend The Convention

Fire, Water and Light Committee Declines to Provide Necessary Expense Money

If Chief Howard cannot attend the Fire Chief's Convention at Port Arthur, this week, he will not attend at all. The members of the Fire, Water and Light committee, sitting as a Board of Works Committee, was divided as to the amount to be allowed for convention expenses and where the money was to come from. It was suggested that by allowing the Chief $50.00 for expenses the city would save that amount in gasoline in the Chief's tours around the city. Ald. Stration suggested sending the Chief and financing the trip from the Children's Aid Fund.

Will Flush Streets.

The firemen have, after diplomatic handling, special and polite invitation, and careful consideration, consented to flush the streets on Wednesday and Saturday mornings.

VOTE IS A VITAL ONE.

Government Whip Urges Members To Be Sure and Attend.

LONDON July 23.—The importance that the Government attaches to the debate on the Corn Production Bill, which proposes to pay fixed prices to farmers for cereal crops for a number of years after the war, is shown in a statement by the Government whip wherein the request of supporters to attend is trebly underlined, and a division on the minimum wage of $6.25 a week it is proposed to pay farm labourers is declared vital.

Modern Sugar Refining

Improved Process By Which Sparkling Lantic Sugar is Made of the Pure Juice of the Tropic Cane

WITH the increasing interest in pure foods everybody wants to know how things to eat are made. Food factories which the average person formerly shunned, now entertain streams of interested visitors to see how the products are made and packed.

Sugar refineries are visited less often than canneries, biscuit bakeries and preserving kitchens because the processes of refining require large and complicated plants so that the number of refineries is relatively small. Economy requires that a sugar refinery shall be located on the seaboard or on the banks of a navigable stream so that the raw sugar may be shipped all the way by water. Sugar factories are less accessible to the general public than food factories or other sorts which are distributed throughout the country.

The Atlantic Refineries at St. John, New Brunswick, are typical of the best modern type of refining plant. Ships of heavy draught bring the raw sugar directly to the refining docks where it is put rapidly through the various processes which convert it into the sparkling white crystals we find in the family sugar bowl.

Before reaching the refinery the sugar has already undergone part of the process of manufacturing. Sugar cane is very bulky to transport so the processes of crushing and extracting are performed on the plantation. Sugar cane is a large tropical plant like an exaggerated corn stalk in appearance. Its average height is from twelve to fifteen feet, but under very favorable conditions it grows as tall as twenty. It flourishes only in warm, moist climates but with suitable soil and temperature it is a very luxuriant and trustworthy product. Cane is planted and harvested entirely by native labor. In large plantations tram cars run directly to the field whence the cars carry the cane to the centrals for the extraction of the juice.

The cane is first thrown upon broad belts which carry it to the top of huge cutting machines composed of two or three giant rollers revolving together. The freshly cut cane is dropped into these merciless jaws and caught by a multitude of tiny teeth covering the surface of the rollers. The juice is so thoroughly expelled that the cane is caught below as dry pulp, so dry that it can be used as fuel to generate the steam which drives the machinery. Further below in the receiving tanks we find the sugar juice freed from the cane by the enormous pressure of the rollers. It is a murky liquid full of tiny particles of fibrous cane very unlike the sparkling white sugar of commerce

The juice is led by pipes to huge vats with bottoms full of tiny holes, through which streams of bubbles are constantly pouring. These little bubbles of sulphur gas perform the first process of purification. As they come to the surface they collect the yellow scum which is carefully skimmed off by watchful attendants. These are the cellulose particles of cane from the original crushing. When all have risen to the top and been removed the liquid is piped to evaporators where it is thickened by steam heat, which boils the water out.

The crystallization takes place in large vacuum pans where the liquid can be boiled at a lower temperature so that the sugar will not burn as it crystallizes. Every housekeeper who knows how quickly white sugar will brown in moderate heat will appreciate the necessity of this precaution. As the liquid approaches crystallization it is dumped into centrifugal machines which whirl the sticky mass about at great speed, allowing the remaining fluid to be driven away from the centre. The result of this process is crude molasses. As further rapid rotation eliminates still more moisture the remainder crystallizes into dark brown crystals.

This is raw sugar. It contains all the sweetness of the sugar cane in its essence, but it also contains considerable foreign matter which can be removed only by the modern process of refining.

Refined sugar is pure, clean and white. It is one of the most attractive of all foods to the eye. These qualities of refined sugar brought it into quick demand over a hundred years ago. To-day the insistence for pure and attractive food products keeps the demand alive and growing. Let us examine this refining process which supplies the people with what they want.

Outside the plantation mill upon the dock bags of raw sugar are waiting shipment to the Atlantic Refineries or to other plants. Following this raw sugar to St. John, New Brunswick, we come to a busy looking place. The great chimneys of the Atlantic Refinery emit quantities of smoke and plumes of hissing steam pour from them. The sugar is taken direct from the hold of the vessel into the warehouse by machinery, thence into the refinery, where the visitor gazes with mute wonder at the maze of pipes, valves and tanks and spinning machinery, all working to satisfy the "sweet tooth" of Canadian children and Canadian grown-ups. The process of sugar refining are many and precise, but they are simple in theory.

The raw sugar is dumped into heated vats and melted. This moulten mass contains both vegetable and mineral impurities that must be separated from the pure sugar, so it is carefully filtered not once but again and again. The improved filtering medium used to-day is boneblack, a cleanly material thoroughly sterilized before it is used. Sugar was formerly filtered with ox blood, clay and alumina but the modern equipment of bag filters and presses have lifted the standards of refinery practice to thoroughly appetising levels. The refining processes at the Atlantic plant would please the most fastidious housewife.

When the many careful processes of filtration and clarifying have been completed the raw sugar emerges in the form of pure syrup, a clear brilliant water white liquid. Again it is led to vacuum pans where it is boiled until crystallised into the familiar forms of ordinary sugar. When the process of crystallisation is completed it is diverted to the granulating machines which turn out the standard coarse, medium and fines of commerce, or the rolling and crushing machines which produce the several grades of powdered and confectioners' sugar.

The final step in the preparation of sugar is packing the product ready for delivery. Automatic machinery measures out the sugar with the regularity and rapidity of a trip hammer and with perfect accuracy. Tons of it are poured into bags and cartons with the Lantic red ball. Fairy fingers of metal snap back and forth and with the effect of magic a thousand packages are filled correct to the tiniest fraction of an ounce and swiftly sealed without a human hand to aid in the process.

Compare this automatic packing with the work of the swiftest clerk you ever saw. In the time that a single package could be wrapped and tied, a whole battery of cartons is filled and sealed, making a strong, convenient, sanitary package easily handled in the store or in the home pantry. Packing by machinery is so much more safe, cleanly and economical than packing by hand that there is no doubt that all sugar will shortly be sold in the package form.

Packing by automatic machinery is one of the latest of a long series of economies in refining and handling sugar. The first white sugar cost the consumer of a hundred years ago about twenty cents a pound. Refineries were then able to get about fifty pounds of white sugar from one hundred pounds of raw sugar. Improvements in refining now enable them to get a much larger per cent. of refined sugar from one hundred pounds of raw, making white cane sugar the cheapest, purest and most delicious of all the energy giving foods.

The Military Service Bill This Afternoon

Will Come Up for Third and Final Reading

Special to The Examiner.

OTTAWA, July 24. — The Military Service Bill will come up for the third and final reading this afternoon. Hugh Guthrie and Fred Pardee are expected to make a statement on the Liberal conference in Toronto. Sir Robert Borden and Sir Wilfrid Laurier are expected to make a pronouncement before the measure passes. They will speak more for the people than for the House.

GOETHAL'S RESIGNATION ACCEPTED

Special to The Examiner:

WASHINGTON, July 24.— Sweeping steps were taken by President Wilson to-day to put an end to delay in building America's great merchant marine.

Two resignations, those of General Goethals, manager of the Emergency Fleet Corporation, and Capt. White, member of the Shipping Board, were accepted. Chairman Denman, of the Shipping Board, was asked to resign.

"We will start a clean sheet," the President explained in his letter to Goethals, accepting the General's resignation offer.

INJURED MAN RESTING EASILY

The condition of John MacKay, who was injured yesterday when he fell two stories at the Quaker Oats, is reported to be satisfactory this afternoon and the patient resting easily. The man not only had a miraculous escape from death, but escaped with no bones broken.

FUNERAL WILL TAKE PLACE TO-MORROW

The funeral of the late Mrs. Angelina Gamon, who died yesterday, at the family residence, 47 Smith Street, will take place to-morrow, at 8.45 to St. Peter's church, thence to St. Peter's cemetery.

Accident At Arsenal Had Fatal Results

One Young Man Was Killed and Another Will Die

LINDSAY, Ont., July 24.—An accident, attendant with fatal results, occurred at the Dominion arsenal here about 6 o'clock last evening, in which one man named Brown was instantly killed and another man, Gordon Stinson, was fatally injured. The latter was removed to the Ross Memorial Hospital. It seems that the two men, who were within the danger zone, either collided or dropped a box containing some explosive, but particulars are not available, pending an investigation. Brown was a young man, unmarried. Stinson is married.

William Brown, who was the victim of last night's accident in Lindsay was nineteen years of age. His widowed mother resides in Keene. The deceased went to Lindsay about three months ago to work on the Grand Trunk Railway, but accepted a position at the Arsenal. He worked in the "danger group."

SEND MEAT BACK HOME.

German Soldiery Let the People of Occupied Poland Starve.

Further confirmation of repeated reports to the effect that while the people of occupied Poland are suffering from food shortage ad real famine the Germans in control there are sending large quanities of foodstuffs to Germany is found in a series of articles describing his experiences on a recent trip through Germany, written for the Zurich newspapers by Theodore Lehmann, a Swiss Engineer. In giving details of general food conditions in Germany, Mr. Lehmann writes:

"But about one point that at present is of the greatest interest we learn a great deal; about the army's food supply. In most cases the good appearance of the men immediately furnishes the answer to this question. Of course there are some pale and sickly looking faces among them—but how could it be otherwise? The lucky one who had returned from the advance through Roumania seemed to have lived very well. In many of the little Roumanian villages the people did not seem to know whether to regard the invading Germans, in their strange uniforms, as friends or foes. At all events the natives did not have much to say in favour of the Russians, who had passed through just before.

"The army in Poland must also enjoy abundant nourishment. A la was able to tell of regular shipments of meat that she received from her father who was in service there. That such shipments from the front to the folks at home were the rule rather than the exception. I was able to verify later. Now it is worth almost as much to have a good friend at the front as to have one in the country."

Some men drink for the shakes and others shake for the drinks.

BIG BICYCLE RACES TO BE HELD IN TORONTO

TORONTO, Ont., July 24.—Preparations for the Patriotic Race-meet to be conducted by the Canadian Wheelmen's Association at the Exhibition track, Toronto, on Saturday, August 11th, point to the greatest bicycle track meet in Canada in years.

One of the big features will be the staging of the "Canadian Professional Championships," in which at least four of the greatest riders in the world will compete. These include Arthur Spencer, the Canadian who now holds the American championship title; Frank Kramer of East Orange, N.J., who was the champion of the United States for sixteen years; William Spencer, brother of the title holder, and Reg. McNamara of Australia. This great four have already entered for the Toronto races.

The provincial amateur championships will also be held by the C. W. A. on the same occasion. This will be the only meet to be held this season under the direct auspices of the Canadian Association, and it is receiving wide attention throughout the Dominion. The entire proceeds are to be turned over to the military hospitals in Toronto.

W. M. Gilmour, 1283 Gerrard street, East, Toronto, who is a member of the C. W. A. executive, is the meet manager. F. A. O. Johnston of Toronto, Racing Board Chairman of the old Association, has gone to Newark, N. J., the home of American cycling, to interview the big professional cracks with regard to their trip to Toronto.

Allies Win Three Games From Grocers

Last night, in their final contest, in the Five Pin League, at the Water Street Alleys, the Grocers went down to defeat before the on-coming forces of the Allies, who took all three games, and are now in the front line trenches. The Allies rolled a record for three games, with a total of 2,095, while the Grocers rolled 1,897. Bigney, for the Allies, was high man for three games, with a 476 count; and with Bock a close second, with a total of 472, who also had high single of 208, in the third game. Fitzpatrick and Ross were high for the Grocers, with totals of 445 and 414.

The Scores.

The scores were as follows:

PIRATES HALT FLYING GIANTS

Schupp, McGraw's Star Pitcher, Loses Brilliant Battle With Cooper.

NEW YORK, July 23.—Pittsburg nosed out the New York Nationals here to-day, 1 to 0. Cooper had the better of Schupp in a pitchers' battle. Cooper also sent in the only run of the game with a two-base hit in the eighth inning, scoring with Wagner, who also had doubled. Score:

	R.	H.	E.
Pittsburg	0	7	0
New York	0	6	2

Cooper and W. Wagner; Schupp and Gibson.

"Cincinnatty" Takes All Four From the Dodgers.

Brooklyn, July 23. — Cincinnati made it four straight from Brooklyn, outplaying the National League champions at every point to-day and winning 5 to 2. Toney kept the Brooklyn hits well scattered except in the fourth, when a pass, steal and two singles prevented a shutout. Score:

	R.	H.	E.
Cincinnati	5	11	1
Brooklyn	2	9	2

Toney and Wingo; Smith and Miller.

Marshville Takes Chance and Beats Mitchell's Cubs.

Boston, July 23.—With two out, and the bases full in the last of the thirteenth to-day, Maranville took a chance on Kelly's flyout to Mann in short field and scored the run that won for Boston over Chicago, 6 to 2. Score:

	R.	H.	E.
Chicago	2	8	1
Boston	3	9	1

Douglas, Carter and Wilson, Dillhoefer; Rudolph, Nehf and Tragesser.

Mayer and Lavender not Able to Hold Cardinals.

Philadelphia, July 23.—St. Louis won to-day's game 5 to 3. Mayer, who was relieved by Lavender in the eighth, also was unable to hold his opponents in check. The score:

	R.	H.	E.
St. Louis	5	12	2
Philadelphia	3	11	3

Goodwin, Ames and Snyder; Gonzales; Mayer, Lavender and Killifer.

SPIRIT OF THE GARDEN.

It Voices the Human Sense of Accumulated Beauty.

When all is said, gardens are but expressions of sentiment, the outward manifestation of human hearts which bloom with perennial love and flower with sympathy and kindly thought Love of gardens is an instinctive sense. lacking it, appreciation cannot be instilled because, as Bovee wrote, the beauty seen is partly in him who sees it. The beautiful meaning of flowers does not have to be told to little children. They are gifted with divine intelligence in knowing that "flowers are God's thoughts of beauty taking form to gladden the mortal gaze; bright gems of earth, in which perchance we see what Eden was, what paradise may be."

"Perhaps no word of six letters concentrates so much human satisfaction as the word 'garden,'" declares a great poet of our own day, Richard Le Gallienne. "Not accidentally, indeed, did the inspired writer make paradise a garden, and still today, when a man has found all the rest of the world vanity, he retires into his garden. When man needs just one word to express in rich and poignant symbol his sense of accumulated beauty and blessedness his first thought is of a garden. The salt speaks of the 'garden of God.' The word 'heaven' is hardly more universally expressive of happiness than the word 'garden.'"

The garden is the voice of nature calling to her children who have strayed far afield. It is not a loud wailing, articulate voice; it is like the still, small voice of conscience.

And as Keats expressed it, "Heard melodies are sweet, but those unheard are sweeter." And there at once is the voice and spirit of the garden.—Noble Foster Hoggson in Philadelphia Ledger.

CAN YOU JUDGE SONGS?

If You Are Able to Pick the "Hits" a $100,000 Job Awaits You.

In the American Magazine we are informed that there's an unfilled job in Songland. "One hundred thousand dollars a year, at least, is waiting for the man or woman who will come forward to fill it," says E. M. Wickes. "It carries with it no orders. It requires no particular training. A person who has finished schooling with the second reader will stand exactly as good a chance of being accepted for the vacancy as a master of seventeen languages or a mathematical marvel.

"Song publishing is one of the greatest gambles in the whole world. Fortunes are won and lost in a change of the moon, and for reasons which no one seems able to forecast—which brings us back to the subject of Songland's vacancy.

"If any one can prove his ability consistently to select songs which will captivate the ears of his 100,000,000 fellows he can become the official picker of hits for any number of big song publishers. As for his salary—well, he can name a figure that will make him considerably better paid than the president of the United States."

But here's the "nigger in the woodpile:"

"Incidentally, if you are thinking of applying for the job 'official hit picker,' be quite sure that you are thoroughly familiar with the evanescent fancies and shifting emotions of young women. For they buy practically all the music, and what they do not buy is usually purchased by some admiring friend or repentant relative."

A Thorough Test.

"Inspector, that woman I said was always listening on my party line must have quit."

"What makes you think so?"

"Why, my wife has been listening for three weeks and hasn't caught her yet."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Americans Are Under British Police Rules

"ALIENS" REQUIRED TO REGISTER AT HEADQUARTERS AND REPORT REGULARLY—BUSINESS MEN HELD UP.

(Correspondence of the Associated Press from London.)—Many Americans in London were surprised and disappointed when they learned that, when the United States entered the war, they were not automatically relieved of the necessity of observing the British police regulations affecting aliens. This is especially true of the Americans who have arrived here since the early part of 1916. These must report their movements to the authorities just as all other aliens, whether allies or neutrals, are required to do.

There is a considerable amount of red tape involved in the police regulations and, no sooner had the United States thrown in its lot on the side of the Entente allies, than many Americans got the impression that they would be relieved of this war-time necessity. When they found out that their status in this respect remained unchanged by the turn of events many of them appealed to the United States embassy and consulate for further information. They were told that there was no indication of any change.

MUST HAVE IDENTITY BOOK

Every American who has arrived here since the early month of 1916 must have an identity book. Besides name, nationality, date and a signed photograph, it must bear the signatures and guarantees of two British subjects, property owners, who have, at the same time, seen the holder of the book sign his name to it. Before the book is received, a signed photograph must be left at the police station. In some instances two months elapse before the applicant is able to obtain his book.

When the American moves from one part of the city to another he must report to the police stations in both districts and have his book stamped by the 'aliens' officer. Much the same procedure is required when he goes on a visit to another city. In every town where he stays over night he must report to the police, giving all particulars as to birth, nationality of self and parents, a description of physical features, etc. At the hotel at which he stays he must repeat all these same details on a large sheet of paper which he is required to sign again before he can leave the hotel.

GET PERMIT OF POLICE.

In certain sections of England a new rule has just been put into effect which requires aliens to first present themselves at police headquarters before they will be given a room in a hotel. The police issue a permit entitling the holder to stay at the hotel.

A party of American business men from London were required to do this recently upon their arrival in Liverpool. Their train brought them into Liverpool around 8 a.m. They were tired and hungry and the trip to the police station consumed another hour. But all went through with the red tape good naturedly, realising that to be allowed to travel at all in any of the belligerent countries at the present time is somewhat a privilege.

HUNS INTERN AUSTRIANS.

Washington Hears Relations Become In Very Strained.

NEW YORK, July 23.—The Herald publishes the following despatch from its Washington bureau:

Relations between Germany and Austria-Hungary, it is reported here, are becoming increasingly strained, and internment camps have been opened in Germany for suspected Austrians.

The Emperor's popularity is steadily diminishing and even the nobility will be glad to be rid of the Hohenzollerns, but there is no chance of an uprising because of military discipline. There is no chance, it is said, of forcing Germany to her knees by starvation, but the want of war materials of all kinds will make it impossible for Germany to last through another winter. Twenty million marks' worth of oysters have been imported from Holland for the use of troops and hospitals, though nurses in many hospitals have been bribed to sell supplies of them to outsiders.

Statements made by persons who have been in Germany recently indicate that a large majority of the crops in that country will be far below the average this year.

Funeral of Late Marion Jean Lewis

The funeral of the late Marion Jean Lewis, eldest daughter of the late David Lewis, Smith Township, who died on Saturday, July 21st, after a long illness, took place on Monday afternoon to the Little Lake Cemetery, and was attended by a large number of friends. Rev. Mr. Thomas, pastor of George Street Methodist Church, of which Miss Lewis was a member, conducted the service, assisted by Rev. S. Cruikshanks and Rev. J. G. Lewis. The pall-bearers were: Messrs. Gordon Adams, George Gilbert, Harry Hearn, Robert Fowler and John and Wilfred Brown. The floral offerings were many and beautiful.

Miss Lewis was the granddaughter of the Rev. E. A. Saunderson, of Madoc, and a niece of Rev. J. G. Lewis, of Omemee.

She leaves to mourn her loss her mother and three sisters, Laura, Helen and Enid, all at home, and one step-brother, John Burkitt, of Madoc. Throughout her lengthy illness, Miss Lewis bore her trials with a great courage and Christian fortitude. Her death comes particularly hard on her sorrowing family, her father having died one year ago.

WEDDING BELLS

GROOMES—MORROW.

At St. Peter's Cathedral, this morning, at 8 o'clock, the Revd. Father Phelan officiating, the wedding was solemnized of Stella, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Bernard Morrow, 489 Water street, and William Stanton Groomes, B.A., Estevan, Sask.

The bride, who looked very beautiful in a lovely gown of white Georgette crepe, with silver and white bead trimming over satin, the customary wedding veil and orange blossoms, and carrying a shower bouquet of white roses, entered the church on the arm of her father, to the strains of Lohengrin's wedding march, played by Miss Lillian Hurley. She was attended by her sister, Miss Mabel Morrow, who was charmingly gowned in pink crepe de chine and carried a shower bouquet of pink roses.

The groom was supported by Dr. Boyle of Toronto, whilst Mr. Louis Potvin and Mr. Joseph Walsh acted as ushers. During the ceremony Mr. Edward Hanrahan sang "O Salutaris" and "Ave Maria" with great feeling. On leaving the church, to the strains of Mendelssohn's wedding march, the bridal party, which consisted only of the immediate family, returned to the bride's home, where an informal reception was held and a buffet wedding breakfast served, after which they drove to the 11.40 G.T.R. train, where a large number of the young people of the city, among whom the bride was very popular, awaited them with showers of confetti.

Mrs. Groomes travelled in an exquisite amethyst silk suit, amethyst tulle hat, and wore grey shoes and gloves.

After a honeymoon spent in Toronto and Niagara Mr. and Mrs. Groomes will leave for Estevan, Sask., where they will reside.

Petrograd Officially Admits Evacuation Of Stanislau By The Russian Troops

Cave-in of the Russian Line May Enable the Enemy to Outflank Russian Forces in the Carpathians—Slavs Are Retreating on a Front of Nearly One Hundred and Forty Miles.

THERE IS A RAY OF HOPE

Special to The Examiner.

LONDON, July 25.—Premier Kerensky must move fast in his campaign of merciless extermination of discordant elements in the army, or the cave-in of the Russian line in the Tarnopol-Stanislau sector may be so enlarged by the enemy as to cut off Russia's forces to the south in the Carpathians. Petrograd dispatches to-day gave a ray of hope that Kerensky would yet succeed in reforming the demoralized regiments. One encouraging factor was the evident loyalty of the Russians on the Carpathian, Roumanian and Vilna Dvinsk battle lines.

HEROISM OF OFFCIERS.

Germany evidently planned her intrigue to centre around Tarnopol, hoping for a complete breakdown there and penetration of the Russian lines for flanking movements in both directions. Best front advices to-day indicate that the Russian armies are retreating along a front of nearly one hundred and forty miles, from the Sereht river to the wooded Carpathians, in some places in utter rout, in others by orderly retreat. The evacuation of Stanislau by the Russians was officially admitted from Petrograd. A defeat at Mikulice ,south of Tarnopol, was reported by the Russian War Office. Semi-official dispatches told of the heroism of many Russian officers, striving to reform their regiments and eject the mutineers.

NO LACK OF MUNITIONS.

Special to The Examiner.

AMSTERDAM, July 25.—According to the Berlin Lokal Anzeiger, some of the Russians violently resisted the Austro-German advance. South of Dvinsk, the enemy is assuming a strong offensive over a wide front, indicating no lack of munitions, the newspaper declared. Fighting is developing in the direction of Vilna.

Save the Food and Serve the Empire!

The Average Canadian Family Wastes Enough to Feed a Soldier

"The Kitchen must help as well as the Workshop and the Trenches"
Lloyd George.

INTELLIGENT economy in the kitchen can do much to prevent the threatened world famine—can counteract the effect of high prices—and can replace growing debt with systematic saving.

Careful investigations show that before the war the average British family wasted 25% of their food—and we Canadians were even more extravagant.

This waste is not in a few big things, but in many little ones, each, we used to think, too small to bother about—such as careless peeling of vegetables and fruit—failure to make good use of dripping and "left-overs"—and such others as will occur to every thrifty housekeeper.

For the Empire's sake as well as your own, hunt up and cut out these leaks! You'll be helping to relieve the food shortage—saving your own money—and putting yourself in a position to buy Canadian War Savings Certificates and help win the war.

War Savings Certificates are issued in denominations of $25, $50 and $100, to be repaid in three years at full face value. They cost $21.50, $43 and $86 respectively, at all Money Order Post-Offices and Banks, thus yielding over 5% Interest. Should you need it, you can get your money back at any time.

Fall Fair Prizes To Boys And Girls For Best Animals

Canadian Bankers' Association Offers Special Prizes to Assist Livestock

Through the action of the Minister of Agriculture, the Hon. Martin Burrell, arrangements have been made to have the Canadian Bankers Assoment of Agriculture in providing a liberal sum of money to be offered in prizes for calves and pigs exhibited by boys or girls under 17 years of age, at the county and township fairs.

These competitions are known as the "Canadian Bankers' Competitions," and are linked up with the activities of the Live Stock Branch of the Dominion Department of Agriculture. They represent an effort to increase interest in live stock, and constitute a part of the active campaign for more and better stock inaugurated and carried on by the Hon. Mr. Burrell through his Department. The generous support accorded to the movement, by the Canadian Bankers' Association, affords a practical demonstration of the attitude of the banks towards the live stock industry, and the active participation of the Association in this campaign is bound to strengthen and create general interest in farm live stock.

Canadian Bankers' Competitions will be held at a large number of shows this year, and boys and girls should lose no time in finding out all about them. The calves and pigs must be fed at least six weeks by the boys and girls who exhibit them, so that it is very important to act promptly in securing a copy of the rules and other information.

Full information regarding the competitions can be obtained from the manager of any branch bank in the locality where a fall fair is held.

Conscription Bill Passed The House On Third Reading

OTTAWA, July 25---Third Reading of the Conscription Bill Passed the House of Commons by a Vote of 102 to 44. The Government Majority Was 58.

TURRIFF FAVOURS THE CONSCRIPTION BILL

Big Crowd Heard the Discussion on the Last Phase of the Military Service Bill—Col. Chambers Was the Man Who Barred the "Fiddlers."

WANTS NATIONAL GOVERNMENT

OTTAWA, July 25.—A temperature ranging round 85 in the shade yesterday afternoon was not sufficient to deter a big crowd from coming to the Commons to hear the discussion on the last stage of the Military Service Bill. The House was also well represented.

Before the orders of the day were called Sir Robert Borden declared that he would make a full and definite statement regarding the banning of "The Fiddlers" Wednesday. He stated than one of the objections against its publication was that it contained statements entirely unwarranted regarding the conduct of men of the Canadian Expeditionary Force. These statements were entirely unreliable. The action was taken on the report of Col. Chambers, Chief Press Censor.

TURRIFF AGAINST REFERENDUM.

J. G. Turriff, of Assiniboia, was the first speaker on the Conscription bill. He declared that he desired to give his reasons for voting for the bill and against the majority of his own side. He voted against a referendum because he was convinced that a referendum would be defeated. There was a large foreign vote in the country. In addition, all the slackers from the Atlantic to the Pacific would vote against it. In hauding the stand he now took he believed he was adhering to the stand taken by the Liberal party at the beginning of the war.

Mr. Turriff declared that members ought to get together and make the Conscription bill a success. Dr. Clark cried "Hear, hear," and Gauvreau, of Temiscouata, leaned back and made an auditable and somewhat emphatic remark.

Mr. Turriff declared that, if he could be convinced that an anti-Conscription Government could get the men he would be the happiest man in the world to vote against conscription. For an old party man such as he was to go against the majority of the party, which he belonged, was very hard. "But," said he, "I am as good a Liberal as I ever was and I hope to remain so forever. I am going to back the party which will get the men and help win the war. After that we can settle our differences. (Applause). Now voluntary enlistment has stopped how are we to get the men excepting by conscription. There comes times when the majority has no right to rule."

WANTS NATIONAL GOVERNMENT.

"I believe," said Mr. Turriff "that we ought to have a national Government until the war is over.. I haven't much sympathy with hon. gentlemen opposed—never had, never expect to have—(laughter and cheers)—but this is a time when we must sink our differences." Mr. Turriff declared that he also favoured conscription of wealth and of natural resources.

Will Try To Solve The Irish Problem

Arrangements Completed for Big Convention in Dublin.

DUBLIN, July 24.—Arrangements for the Irish Convention, which on Wednesday will begin an endeavour to solve the Irish problem, are now complete. To-day Henry E. Duke, Chief Secretary for Ireland, and Sir Francis Hopwood visited Trinity College here and inspected the convention hall and committee rooms. They expressed themselves as much pleased with the arrangements.

Various bodies in Ireland have chosen their delegates to the convention. hey constitute a group which is representative of all elements of Irish life, except the Sinn Feiners and O'Brienites, who refused to take part in the convention. The nominations made by the Government have not yet become known officially, but many of those who accepted the Government's invitation to act as delegates have allowed the fact to become known through the press. They have been drawn from all parties and classes. Some of them were chosen to strengthen the labour representation, in view of the refusal of the Dublin and Cork Trades Councils to send delegates.

The decision to exclude reporters from the sessions of the convention, and to prohibit the publication of anything concerning the proceedings, except the official reports, has gone unchallenged, except by William O'Brien.

Yes, Builds You Up in 5 to 10 Days

Iron For the Blood and Phosphorus For the Nerves

Weak, anaemic, run-down, nervous persons will be glad to know that they can be restored back to their youth vigor by the discovery of this new drug called Bonised Phosphorus with Iron.

It is spring time now and every person needs something to build them up. You you know as well as any doctor will tell you, the cures of spring time is impure blood. It takes many people to their graves, ruins health, makes you weak, runs you down and finally you are a physical wreck.

This new drug is a combination of iron and phosphorus. The iron goes directly on the blood while the phosphorus soothes and strengthens the nerves. You start to-day and take two or three tablets of Bonised Phosphorus with Iron after meals and in 5 to 10 days you will be 100 per cent stronger.

This drug does not act like other iron tonics you have taken, but instead, it does not blacken the teeth, upset the stomach or make you constipated. This new drug is dispensed by one druggist in each city. F. G. Weber dispenses it for Peterborough.

"The Postmaster's Daughter"

By LOUIS TRACY

"Cut the cackle, Isidor. I know you, and it's high time that you knew me. Grant has retained Belcher. Ah, that gets you, does it? You haven't forgotten Belcher. Now, be reasonable! Or, rather, don't run your head into a noose. Grant had no more to do with the murder of your wife than you had. Call off Norris and Grant withdraws Belcher. Twig? It's dead easy, because the Treasury solicitor will simply ask adjournment, as the police are not ready to go on. In the meantime, you pay off Norris, and save your face. Is it a deal?"

"Am I to understand——"

"Don't wiggle! The key of the situation is held by Belcher. Name of a pipe! What prompting does Belcher need from me or anybody else after the Bokfontein Lands case?"

"But——"

"Isidor, this is the last word. I was at the funeral on Saturday, and met your wife's mother and sister. They do love you, don't they?"

Ingerman died game.

"If I have your assurance that Mr. Grant is really innocent of Adelaide's death, that is sufficient," he said slowly.

"Well, if it pleases you to put it that way, I'm agreeable. Which is your road? Back to the hotel? I'm for a short stroll. Mind you, no wobbling! Go straight, and I'll attend to Belcher. But, good Lord! How his eyes will sparkle when they light on you to-morrow!"

Neither the redoubtable Belcher nor the Bokfontein Lands, nor poor Adelaide Melhuish's mother and sister, may figure further in this chronicle. The inquest opened at the appointed hour the next day, and was closed down again for a week with a celerity that was most disappointing both to the jury and the general public. Of the three legal luminaries present, only one, the Treasury man, uttered a few bald words. Belcher and Norris did not even announce the names of their clients. Norris noticed that Belcher surveyed Ingerman with a grim smile but thought nothing of it until he received a check later in the week. Then he made some inquiries and smiled himself.

The foreman of the jury looked a trifle pinched, though his cheeks bore two spots of hectic color. Mr. Franklin, drawn to the court by curiosity happened to glance at him once, and found him gazing at Furneaux in a peculiarly thoughtful manner.

Elkin, thriving on a diet of tea and eggs, was also interested in the representative of Scotland Yard. He seemed to ignore Grant entirely. Doris Martin was not in the court. Superintendent Fowler had called about half past nine to tell her she would not be asked to attend that day.

Near Mr. Franklin sat a few village notabilities, who since they had not the remotest connection with anyone concerned in the tragedy, have been left hitherto in their Olympian solitude.

He listened to their comments.

"As usual, the police are utterly at sea," said one.

"Yes, 'following up important clews, the newspapers say," scoffed another.

"It is a disgraceful thing if a crime like this goes undetected and unpunished."

"Which is the Scotland Yard man?"

"The small chap in the blue suit."

"What? THAT little rat!"

"Oh, he's sharp. I met a man in the train, and he told me——"

Mr. Franklin grinned amiably; Hobbs, the butcher, intercepting his eye, grinned back. It is not difficult to imagine what portion of the foregoing small talk reached Furneaux subsequently.

Oddly enough, both detectives had missed a brief but illuminating incident which took place in the Hare and Hounds the previous night while Winter was finishing a cigar with Peters and Furneaux was bludgeoning Ingerman into compliance with his wishes.

Elkin's remarkable improvement in health was commented on by Hobbs, and Siddle took the credit.

"That last mixture has proved beneficial, then," he said, eying the horse doctor closely.

"Top-hole," smirked Elkin. "But it's only fair to say that I have chucked whiskey, too."

"Did you finish the bottle?"

"Mine, of course."

"Nearly."

"Don't take any more. It was decidedly strong. I'll send a boy early to-morrow morning with a first-rate tonic, and you might give him any old medicine bottles that you possess. I am running short."

Elkin hesitated for a second or two.

"I'll tell my housekeeper to look 'em up," he said.

After the inquest he communicated this episode to Furneaux as a great joke.

"Queer, isn't it?" he guffawed. "A couple of dozen bottles went back as I am always getting stuff for the gees but those two weren't among them. You took care of that, eh? When will you have the analysis?"

"It'll be fully a week yet," said the detective. "Government offices are not run like express trains, and this is a free job, you know. But be advised by me. Stick to plain food, and throw physic to the dogs."

Another singular fact, unobserved by the public at large, was that a policeman, either Robinson, or a stranger, patrolled the high street all day and all night, while no one outside of official circles was aware that other members of the force watched The Hollies, or were secreted among the trees on the cliffside, from dusk to dawn.

Next morning, however, there was real cause for talk. Siddle's shop was closed. Over the letter box neatly printed, was gummed a notice:

"Called away on business. Will open for one hour after arrival of 7 p.m. train. T.S."

Everyone who passed stopped to read. Even Mr. Franklin joined Furneaux and Peters in a stroll across the road to have a look.

"I want you a minute," said the big man suddenly to Furneaux. There was that in his tone which forbade questioning, so Peters sheered off, well content with the share permitted him in the inquiry thus far.

"That fellow, Hart, is no fool," went on Winter rapidly. "He said last night, 'How does one get evidence?' It was not easy to answer. Siddle has gone to his mother's funeral. What do you think?"

"You'd turn me into a housebreaker, would you?" whined Furneaux bitterly. "I must do the job of course, just because I'm a little one. Well, well! After a long and honorable career I have to become a sneak thief. It may cost me my pension."

"There's no real difficulty. An orchard——"

"Bet you a new hat I went over the ground before you did."

"Get over it quickly now, and get something out of it, and I'll give you a new hat. Got any tools?"

"I fetched 'em from town on Tuesday morning," chortled Furneaux. "So now who's the brainy one?"

He skipped into the hotel while Winter went to the station to make sure of Siddle's departure and destination. Yes, the chemist had taken a return ticket to Epsom, where a strip of dank meadow-land on the road to Esher marks the last resting place of many of London's epileptics. On returning to the high street, Winter lighted a cigar, a somewhat common occurrence in his everyday life, whereupon Furneaux walked swiftly up the hill. A farmer, living near the centre of the village, owned a rather showy cob. Winter found the man, and persuaded him to trot the animal to and fro in front of the hotel. There was a good deal of noise and hoof-clattering, and people came to their doors to see what was going on. Obviously if they were watching the antics of a skittish two-year-old in the high street, their eyes were blind to proceedings in the back premises. Even the postmaster and his daughter were interested onlookers, and a policeman who might have put a summary end to the display, vanished as though by magic.

Luckily, Winter was a good judge of a horse. When the cob was stabled, and the farmer came to the inn to have a drink, he was forced to admit a tendency to cow hocks which, it would seem, is held a fatal blemish in the Argentine.

Meanwhile, Furneaux had dodged into a lane and thence to a bridepath which emerged near Bob Smith's forge. When he had traversed, roughly speaking, one half of a rectangle in which the Hare and Hounds occupied the centre of one of the longer sides, he climbed a gate, and followed a hedge. Though not losing a second, he took every precaution to remain unseen, and, to the best of his belief, gained an inclosed yard at the back of Siddle's premises without having attracted attention. He slipped the catch of a kitchen window only to discover that the sash was fastened by screws also. The lock of the kitchen door yielded to persuasion but there were bolts above and below. A wire screen in a larder window was impregnable. Short of cutting out a pane of glass he could not effect an entry on the ground floor.

Nimble as a squirrel, and risking everything, he climbed to the roof of an outhouse, and tried a bedroom window. Here he succeeded. When the catch was forced, there were no further obstacles. In he went, pausing only to look around and see if any curious or alarmed eye was watching him. He wondered why every backyard on that side of the high street was empty, not even a maid-servant or woman washing clothes being in sight, but he understood and grinned when the commotion Winter was creating came in view from a front room.

Then he undertook a methodical search, working with a rapid yet painstaking thoroughness which missed nothing. From a wardrobe he selected an overcoat and a pair of trousers which reeked with turpentine. They were old and soiled garments, very different from the well-cut black coat and waistcoat, with striped cloth trousers, worn daily by the chemist. He drew a blank in the remainder of the upstairs rooms, which included a sitting room, although he devoted fully a quarter of an hour to reading the titles of Siddle's books.

A safe in the little dispensing closet at the back of the shop promised sheer defiance until Furneaux saw a bunch of keys resting beside a methylated spirit lamp.

"'Twas ever thus!" he cackled, lighting the lamp. "Heaven help us poor detectives if it wasn't!"

In a word, since murder will out, Siddle had forgotten his keys! Probably he had gone to the safe for money, and while writing the notice as to his absence, had laid down the keys and omitted to pick them up again.

Furneaux disregarded ledgers and account books. He examined a bank pass book and a check book. In a drawer which contained these and a quantity of gold he found a small leather-bound book, with a lock, but which no key on the bunch was tiny enough to fit. A bit of twisted wire overcame this difficulty, and Furneaux began to read.

There were quaint diagrams, and surveyor's sketches, both in plan and section with curious notes, and occasional records of what appeared to be passages from letters of conversations. The detective read, and read, referring back and forth, absorbed in his task, no doubt, but evidently puzzled.

At last, he stuffed the book into a pocket, completed his scrutiny of the safe, examined the bottles on the shelf labelled "poisons," and took a sample of the colorless contents of one bottle marked "C10H14N2."

Then he went to the kitchen, replaced all catches and the lock of the door, and let himself out by the way he had come.

Winter saw him from afar, and hastened upstairs to the private sitting room. Furneaux appeared there soon.

"Well?" said the Chief Inspector eagerly.

"Got him, I think," said Furneaux.

Not much might be gathered from that monosyllabic question and its answer, but its significance in Siddle's ears, could he have heard, would have been that of the passing bell tolling for the dead.

YOUNG WOMEN MAY AVOID PAIN

Need Only Trust to Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, says Mrs. Kurtzweg.

Buffalo, N.Y.—"My daughter, whose picture is below, was much troubled with pains in her back and sides every month and they would sometimes be so bad that it would seem like acute inflammation of some organ. She read your advertisement in the newspapers and tried Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. She praises it highly as she has been relieved of all these pains by its use. All mothers should know of this remedy, and all young girls who suffer should try it."—Mrs. MATILDA KURTZWEG, 329 High St., Buffalo, N. Y.

Young women who are troubled with painful or irregular periods, backache, headache, dragging-down sensations, fainting spells or indigestion, should take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Thousands have been restored to health by this root and herb remedy.

If you know of any young woman who is sick and needs helpful advice, ask her to write to the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass. Only women will receive her letter, and it will be held in strictest confidence.

CURING TIRED FEET.

A Way to Strengthen the Muscles and Prevent Falling Arches.

This is the age of tired feet. It is also the age of pavements. And tired feet are largely the result of walking on hard pavements. Yet, curiously enough, pavements were invented primarily to enable man to move about on his feet more comfortably.

The outer side of the foot is of stronger construction than the inner and will remain so even with prolonged usage on hard pavements if the foot is kept in a proper position while walking. But the out toeing position takes the strain off the outer portions of the foot, and thus the muscles are weakened eventually through lack of natural exercise. The best way to correct this and at the same time correct the tendency to falling arches is by cultivating the habit of walking and standing with the feet held parallel. This is particularly helpful to persons who are obliged to stand for prolonged periods at their work.

In addition there are two simple exercises which will strengthen the foot muscles and ward off the tendency to fatigue if practiced for a few moments each day. One of these consists in toeing in as much as possible—walking club footed—and walking about the room for one minute several times each day. This position puts the strain on the muscles of the outside of the foot, thus toning them up and strengthening them. The strain will be apparent to any one the first time he tries this exaggerated form of pigeon toed locomotion. But the ultimate result will be a pronounced strengthening and straightening of the feet, with a tendency to assume unconsciously a natural position in walking and standing.

The second exercise consists in throwing the weight of the body on to the outside of the feet by standing with the legs crossed and the feet held parallel. This position should be assumed for several minutes each day and is often found very restful to persons obliged to stand in cramped quarters. By bending the knees and walking about the room with the feet still in this position, alternating with first one foot and then the other in the lead, the outside foot muscles may be strengthened very rapidly.

If either one or both of these exercises are practiced for one minute periods three or four times each day the foot muscles will be toned up to resist fatigue and the tendency to falling arches that follows almost invariably. —Los Angeles Times.

The Public Makes the Market.

The public makes the stock market. The impression that a few operators can advance or lower prices as they please is a sadly mistaken one. If this could be done by a dozen men, or by a hundred, or a thousand, there would be no need of a stock market; for these gentlemen could combine and enrich themselves beyond the dreams of avarice.

No; the stock market is made by the public. When the public is scared and refuses to buy the market languishes, business halts, and uncertainty prevails. When the public is badly scared it becomes panic stricken and unloads by wholesale, and all must take their losses, big and little operators alike.

I do not mean to say that large operators are not able to influence the market to a certain degree and under favorable conditions, but they cannot do this to the extent that most persons imagine. They make their money by operating skillfully on the side that they think will win, whether the bull or the bear side.—Banker in Leslie's.

An Ironing Hint.

When ironing it is a great help to have a common sponge and a dish of water handy to dampen the clothes where they are too dry for ironing. The sponge is much better than a cloth for that purpose, and, if necessary, dry clothes can be ironed at once if a sponge is used for dampening same.

Ideal and Real.

Interviewer—What is your wife's favorite dish? Husband of Famous Movie Actress—In the magazine articles it is a peach bloom fudge cake with orange wisp salad, but at home it is just plain corned beef and cabbage.—Puck.

An Example.

"Pa, what's a cynical smile?"

"Your mother will show you, my son, the next time I tell her I can't spare all the money she wants."

Lucky.

Angry Wife—I cook and cook and cook for you, and what do I get? Nothing! Husband—You're lucky! I always get indigestion.

The false can never grow into truth by growing in power.—Tagore.

HOME DEFENCE

The safeguarding of your home and all it means to you is not a matter of armies and ships alone. The comfort and happiness of your family are exposed to the attacks of enemies much nearer to them than the marauding Huns of Central Europe.

What will become of your home and your wife and your children, if you be suddenly stricken down as thousands of others have been?

Will there be any bulwark of defence to keep the home and the family from destruction?

You can most easily provide such a line of defence by means of a life assurance policy. Home Defence is its purpose and it fulfils that purpose as nothing else can.

VIRGIN PEAKS IN B.C.

"THE beauty of the Upper Columbia Valley," wrote Mr. W. E. Stone, in the "Canadian Alpine Journal" of 1916, "has been described more than once but never to exaggeration. For more than a hundred miles it lies enclosed between guardian mountain ranges, its sheltered, peaceful meadows and placid lakes contrasting with the vast wilderness surrounding them. To dwell in this smiling region and at the same time feel oneself in intimate touch with the splendid mountain ranges on its western border is a lot which every mountaineer might envy and of which our hosts have shown themselves highly appreciative.

"The original possessors of this country were the Kootenai Indians, who now linger a mere remnant within the prosaic boundaries of a government reservation. Some of the earliest explorers visited and even pushed on over the more accessible mountain passes; in recent years settlers have entered the region attracted by its fertility and climate; miners have prospected the foothills; trappers and hunters have plied their vocations; but mountaineers discovered it only a few years since and as yet have scarcely penetrated into the labyrinth of valleys or trod more than a few of its multitude of peaks. Thus a great alpine region remains practically unexplored and unknown. A reconnaissance at the head waters of Bugaboo Creek, expeditions up Toby Creek to Wells Pass, and the partial exploration of the region at the head of Horse Thief Creek and its South Fork constitute all of the recorded efforts to explore this section. Of the vast array of peaks to be seen from any high station, barely half a dozen have been climbed.

"From the neighborhood of Spillimacheen, about fifty miles south of Golden, the traveller may observe from the train a conspicuous snow-crowned peak visibly overstepping its neighbors on the western horizon. Upon it in 1886 was bestowed the name of Ethelbert by Captain Armstrong of the Columbia River steamer "Ptarmigan," in memory of a man who died on his vessel. The mountain is the apex of a ridge extending toward the Columbia Valley at right angles to the main ridge and enclosed on the north and south by forks of the Salmon River. The region at the headwaters of these streams is practically unknown save to occasional trappers who have penetrated the valleys and there is no record of any attempt at its exploration, although there is a fugitive rumour of an unsuccessful expedition to the mountains a few years ago."

In 1915, Mr. Stone with his wife and two other climbers made the first known ascent of Mount Ethelbert, the description of which is contained in the number of the "Canadian Alpine Journal" referred to. The peak itself was too heavily enveloped in clouds to allow of a view, but during the descent, the climbers were rewarded by a wonderful panorama at the headwaters of Horse Thief Creek:—

". . . . But close at hand at our very feet lay a scene of unusual interest and beauty. The snow ridge yesterday we had seen above the terrace at the head of the valley, now resolved itself into a fine cirque of snow peaks clad with glaciers with a charming hanging valley dotted with variecolored lakes nestling at their feet. There were a half dozen of these peaks approximating, we judged, nine to ten thousand feet in altitude, arranged in a semi-circle about the head of the valley, [illegible]

WHEAT PRICES COMING DOWN

Ontario Flour is Quoted Lower —The Cattle Market

Wheat prices are steadily coming down to the minimum and maximum prices fixed upon by the Board of Grain Supervisors. No. 1 Northern cash at lake ports came down another 7c. yesterday, now quoting at $2.53, as against $2.60 Monday. No. 1 Northern cash at Winnipeg was unchanged at $2.40 1-2, and No. 2 at $2.37 1-2c. Manitoba flour is unchanged, but Ontario flour is quoted 25c. lower. The October wheat option at Winnipeg closed 3 1-2c. lower, and July wheat at Chicago 5c. lower than Monday's close. Oats are easier.

Manitoba wheat—No. 1 Northern, lake ports, $2.53, nominal; No. 2 northern, $2.50.

Manitoba oats—No. 2, 66c., track, bay ports.

American corn—Nominal; not quoted.

Ontario oats—No. 2 white, not quoted.

Ontario wheat—No. 2 winter, per car lots, $2.50 to $2.55, No. 2 winter, $2.48 to $2.53, according to freight outside.

Peas—No. 2, nominal.

Buckwheat—Nominal.

Rye—No. 2, nominal.

Manitoba flour—First patents, in jute bags, $12.90; second patents, $12.40; strong bakers, $12.

Ontario flour—Winter, according to sample, $10.75 to $10.85 track, Toronto, prompt shipments.

Mill feed—Car lots, delivered, Montreal; shorts, $40 to $41; bran, $35; feed flour, per bag, $3.25; middlings, $44 to $45.

Hay—Baled track, Toronto, car lots, No. 2, $12 to $12.50; mixed, $9 to $11; straw, $9.

Cattle Markets.

Union Stock Yards— Receipts 35 cars, with 569 cattle, 168 calves, 257 hogs, and 383 sheep and lambs.

There was the usual light run of fresh cattle for Tuesday market, but with about 700 left over from Monday, there was no scarcity. While trade was a little more active than Monday, the market was weak at Monday's decline of about 50c. average, but over that figure on the common stuff. A heavy run of cattle would oprbably depress the market seriously.

Calves weak.

Sheep and lambs weak.

Hogs a little firmer feeling, but market unsettled.

Big Naval Guns.

Firing a big gun on one of our battleships is a costly proposition.

A thirteen inch shell weighs 1,400 pounds and costs $700.

A twelve inch shell, already considered one of our "smaller" shots, costs $600.

Fourteen inch guns throw projectiles fourteen or sixteen miles. They will pierce an eleven inch Krupp steel plate at seven miles.

Twelve inch guns will shoot just as far, but will pierce the eleven inch plate only at five miles.

When big guns are fired every man on the battleship has to stuff his ears with cotton and touch the deck with his toes and finger tips, keeping his mouth open. This is to prevent broken bones and lost teeth.

He Won.

An Insect Gunner.

Many insects have some means of defense from their natural enemies, none of which is more curious than that of a small beetle which, when closely pursued, discharges a puff of poisonous vapor with a distinct detonation. Undoubtedly in many instances this aids the diminutive gunner in his escape, mainly, in all probability, by starting his pursuer and causing him to abandon the chase. From this peculiar acquirement this little fellow is known as the bombardier beetle.

MR. BOWSER IN HASTE

Rushes Home and Hurries Wife to Station For Train.

GOES TO INSPECT COTTAGE.

Finds He Will Have to Ride Three Miles Into Country and Prefers to Take Driver's Word—Speaks of Divorce Proceedings Again.

By M. QUAD.

(Copyright, 1909, by Associated Literary Press.)

IT was 11 o'clock the other forenoon when the telephone rang and Mrs. Bowser bellowed in return, to hear the voice of Mr. Bowser saying:

"That you, Mrs. Bowser? Yes? Well, I want you to have lunch at sharp 12. I shall be home. Have some clothes on and have your hat ready to put on. There's something doing."

"But what's happened?" she asked.

"I can't go into any long explanations over the wire, but we are going out into the country for a few miles as soon as lunch is over."

"To pick flowers?"

"Flowers be hanged! I am offered the greatest bargain of my life if the deal is closed within twenty-four hours. That's enough until I get home. Don't say anything to the cook or the neighbors, but wait for me."

At five minutes to 12 he came dashing up in a hansom, the first ride he had ever taken in one in his life. He had the fare in his hand, and he reached it to the driver and made a rush for the house and was hardly at the top of the steps when he exclaimed:

"If lunch isn't ready we must go without it!"

"But it's all ready. Why, I haven't seen you so excited in years before. Is it a case of life or death?"

"About the same thing. You know it has always been our dream to have a cottage on the water."

"No, I didn't know it. But go on."

"Don't talk that way to me, Mrs. Bowser. You've been pegging at me for years to get a cottage somewhere where we can spend the summer. I have tried and tried and failed. There was always something wrong with all of 'em."

"WE DON'T SELL ANY TO THAT POINT NOW."

"But this time you have found the place?"

"I have or else the owner lies like a son of a gun. It's a man named Bartlett, who has failed in business and is giving all up to his creditors. He surrenders this cottage and has offered it to me at about half its value if I close the deal right away. There are four or five other men after it, you see."

"Is it on the seashore?"

"Not directly. It is back about half a mile and on a river. It commands a splendid view of the ocean, however. Don't sit there with your mouth open, but eat away. I'm already done."

"But I don't think you ought to rush things this way," protested Mrs. Bowser. "We ought to have time to look the house over and know what we are buying."

"And the sooner we are at Violet Hill the sooner we can begin to look. It's twelve miles, and we've got to take a train."

"Has the cottage a name?"

"Yes; it is called Ocean Blue. We can change it to Ocean Red, Green or White if we want to. Now, on with your hat and we'll be off. By John, but you beat the band for dawdling! If your fooling around causes us to lose this sale I'll never forgive you."

Mrs. Bowser was ready while he was talking, and they took a trolley car to the depot. There were two or three delays en route, and Mr. Bowser told the conductor and motorman what he thought of them and carefully took their numbers in his little book, but of course they were at the depot a full half hour before train time. Mrs. Bowser spent this interval sitting on a hard bench and watching the people who waited the water cooler, while Mr. Bowser walked to and fro and made threats of suing the road. When he came to inquire for tickets to Violet Hill the agent smiled and replied:

"We don't sell any to that point now. You'll have to buy to White Rose and walk back, or perhaps you can hire a vehicle there."

"But why in blazes don't you stop at Violet Hill?"

"Because we don't. Don't block the way."

"By thunder, but this thing has got to be and will be looked into!" shouted Mr. Bowser as he was crowded back. "Not stop at Violet Hill! Why, the man doesn't know what he is talking about. I'd like to have him out of that cubby hole for about two minutes!"

"But the conductor will know all about it," consoled Mrs. Bowser.

"If he don't I'll punch his head!"

The official's head was safe. When asked to explain he said:

"The station at Violet Hill was closed for lack of business. A contractor was going to build fifty villas there, but he went broke."

"But there are villas there."

"Perhaps. I never looked out to see. You'll have to get off at White Rose, but there's always a man there with a wagon. You can get a good view of the country as you ride with him."

Mrs. Bowser was not in the least disappointed. She had her mind made up to failure right away after the telephone message. She sat and looked from the car window at the landscape, and Mr. Bowser sat and grumbled and swore. A feeling was coming over him that he was going to be done up.

Offers Some Consolation.

"It may turn out all right," said Mrs. Bowser as he grumbled away. "A man who was surrendering everything to his creditors wouldn't deceive you. Perhaps the railroad people shut up the station to spite him or something of the sort."

Violet Hill was passed without any one seeming to know it. The depot building might have been taken for a fisherman's shanty. White Rose was all right, though. There were seven houses there, and two cows were lying asleep on the track, and the train had to stop whether or no. The Bowsers found a wagon and two mules loafing around, and when a boy had found the owner and driver Mr. Bowser said to him:

"How much will you charge to drive us over to Violet Hill and back?"

"Any waitin' over there?" queried the man.

"Perhaps an hour."

"Let's see. There are two persons of you, a man and a woman. It's three miles there and back, and the roads ain't a bit good. You'll ask questions all the way out and swear all the way back. We'll say $6 for the trip."

"Why, man, you are a robber!" shouted Mr. Bowser.

A Cheaper Arrangement.

"Waal, s'pose you don't go over? S'pose you gimme a dollar to hear all about it instead? Some prefers that way. It saves your being bounced around in a wagon."

"Do you mean that any one has wanted to go over to Violet Hill this summer?"

"'Bout a hundred."

"For why?"

"To see Ocean Blue and then came back."

"Um! Here's your dollar. What sort of a villa or mansion or cottage is Ocean Blue?"

"It's kinder farmhousy."

"And what river is it on?"

"It's on Jim Crow creek when there's any water."

"And what about the grounds around the house?"

"That's where the old owner used to raise frogs."

"Why don't the trains stop there now?"

"No steady man to git on or off. The railroad makes all the suckers come here first."

"And what do the folks say whom you drive over to Violet Hill?"

"They make things look mighty violety coming back, and most of them pick a fight here at White Rose and git licked before they take the train, is that all?"

That was all. There was two hours to wait in the depot, and the Bowsers waited. It was twelve miles back to town, but they spoke no word on the journey. Mrs. Bowser was almost gone in her efforts to prevent her lips from saying, "Sold again," and Mr. Bowser was figuring on the number of murders he would commit on the morrow. He strode into the house ahead of her, but turned in the hall to say in a low, tense voice:

"Madam, you have driven me to the dead line at last. Tomorrow morning you can go to your mother's and wait the divorce proceedings. You have shown your fine Italian hand once too often."

Gray Leaved Plants.

Next to green, gray is the restfulest and most satisfactory color to be had in foliage.

We now have so many hardy plants with gray foliage that we can choose one for each month of bloom and color of flower. Among them are the silvery mullein, gold dust, the white and purple rockcress, the woolly leaved chickweed, many hardy pinks, Siebold's day lily, Fischer's horned poppy, lavender cotton, woundwort and woolly thyme. Some of these are decidedly silvery. Others incline to a blue cast, which is most pronounced in the globe thistles and sea hollies. Such colors are so unusual in nature that it is easy to overdo them in gardens.—Country Life in America.

Largest Zoo in the World.

The New York zoological park, both in point of area covered and the number of living creatures maintained there, is the largest menagerie in the world, and even the old established institutions of the kind in Europe, where there is no free admission, can boast of no better buildings or more splendid grounds.

At the New York zoological park there are more than 5,000 specimens, representing about 1,300 species, and all of these have to be fed and well fed. In fact, some of the specimens, far removed from their native habitat, must be supplied with certain dainties which they would obtain but occasionally in their native wilds, but which help them to thrive here. Nowhere are animals, birds and reptiles more carefully looked after, and the very few deaths at this park long since established it in a class by itself.

Proving Multiplication.

The following method, which is taught in nearly all English elementary schools in India, is the quickest way of proving multiplication, and it will be found that it is absolutely correct in every case.

Example—Multiply 84,689 by 5,214=441,568,446. Add all the digits of the multiplicand till one digit is obtained, thus: 8+4+6+8+9=35=3+5=8. Do likewise with the multiplier, thus: 5+2+1+4=12=1+2=3. Multiply the two results and add the digits till one digit is obtained: 8×3=24=2+4=6. Lastly, add the digits of the product till one digit is obtained, thus: 4+4+1+5+6+8+4+4+6=42=4+2=6, and if the result agrees with the result obtained by adding the digits of the preceding sums the product is correct. We get 6 in both cases. Hence the product is correct.—Machinery.

Using Bits of Embroidery.

Save any embroideries of doilies, cushions, etc., after the material itself, on which the embroidery is done, is so worn out that the piece is of no further use. The initials from handkerchiefs and old lingerie can be put on new lingerie again. They are almost always as good as new. With the rest of the embroideries charming little gifts can be made. The pretty butterflies in colors on a wornout cushion were set in the flaps of a child's white apron. The trailing poppies of a cushion were appliqued on a natural color linen garden apron. Other uses occur from time to time.

Motorcar Suggestions.

Examine your battery every other week; fill it with water if necessary.

Examine the oil level in your crank case before each trip.

Keep out of the car tracks and ruts.

Do not tinker with parts you know nothing about.

Turn up the grease cups and fill the oil holes without waiting for squeaks.

Test the inflation of your tires twice a week and keep them pumped up.

Read the instruction book you received with your car.

Wash your car immediately after every trip.

Denied the Statement.

"Sister is a very good child when she is asleep," said Tom facetiously, having heard some one else say the same thing.

"I ain't dood when I's asleep," declared sister. "I has bad dreams and wake mamma up."

A Lot of Nothing.

An Englishman, leaving a fortune of over $200,000, provided for his wife in the following terms: "I bequeath to my once dear wife nothing. She left me for nothing and wants for nothing, and I have nothing more to say respecting her."—Argonaut.

Do It Skillfully.

"You are lying so clumsily," said the observant judge to a litigant who was making a dubious statement of his case, "that I would advise you to get a lawyer."

Fine Comparison.

"Remember," said Mowis, "that riches have wings."

"Well," replied Glimson, "the fact that a boiled chicken has wings doesn't prevent me from enjoying it!"

Real Hunger.

A baby shouting for his morning meal makes as good an example of what a feed riot really is as anything we know of.—Milwaukee Sentinel.

Nobody is thoroughly accomplished unless he has the ability to mind his own business.

The Magnetic Needle.

There are two places on the earth's surface where the magnetic needle must point due south. They are not easy places to reach. One is in the arctic regions north of the northern magnetic pole on the line between that pole and the geographical north pole. The other is in the antarctic regions, south of the southern magnetic pole, on the line between that spot and the geographical south pole. In the first case the point of the needle is attracted to the northern magnetic pole. In the second case the other end of the needle is attracted to the southern magnetic pole.

Wanted a Studious Air.

A certain widely known character of the Rialto appeared on Broadway the other day bearing a huge pair of tortoise shell glasses athwart his nose. "Didn't know you wore glasses," a friend told him in surprise. "I never have," he answered, "but I think they give me a studious air." "But don't they impair your sight?" persisted the other. "Oh, no," was the response. "I can see as well as ever when I look over the rims."

Doesn't Know How.

Albert, aged three and a half, had failed to respond to verbal reprimand, and at last his mother said: "If you don't behave you will have to be spanked. You would not like that, would you?"

"I wouldn't like daddy to spank me," was the quick response.

"Why not?"

"He doesn't know how. He hurts."—Life.

Restraint of Trade.

The Dentist—I'll have to charge you $2.50 for pulling that tooth. The Patient—I thought you charged 50 cents. The Dentist—Yes; but you yelled so loud you scared four other patients out of the place.

Tenacity.

"I see Brown riding on the street cars. I thought he owned an auto."

"He does, but he made the mistake of teaching his wife to drive it."

Don't Spoil Your Hair By Washing It

When you wash your hair, be careful what you use. Don't use prepared shampoos or anything else, that contains too much alkali, for this is very injurious, as it dries the scalp and makes the hair brittle.

The best thing to use is just plain mulsified cocoanut oil, for this is pure and entirely greaseless. It's very cheap, and beats anything else all to pieces. You can get this at any drug store, and a few ounces will last the whole family for months.

Simply moisten the hair with water and rub it in, about a teaspoonful is all that is required. It makes an abundance of rich, creamy lather, cleanses thoroughly, and rinses out easily. The hair dries quickly and evenly, and is soft, fresh looking, bright, fluffy, wavy and easy to handle. Besides, it loosens and takes out every particle of dust, dirt and dandruff.

FRENCH AGAIN STOP GERMAN ATTACKS

CONSCRIPTION BILL PASSED BY HOUSE

The French Again Fling Back Heavy Assaults By The Enemy

Crown Prince's Attacks Have Been Continuous and Furious, His Troops Suffering Enormous Casualties as the Price of Foot By Foot Gains---French Counter Attack Wins Back All Germans Had Gained By Six Days' Sacrifices---British Take 116 Prisoners in Raids.

A SUMMARY OF TO-DAY'S WAR CABLES

Special to The Examiner:

PARIS (French Official), July 25. — Once again French troops flung back powerful German assaults last night against the Californie Plateau—the sixth successive night in which the Germans have vainly tried to batter through the Chemin Des Dames line.

"The Germans bombarded it violently and launched an attack at five o'clock against the French gains of yesterday," the War Office said to-day. "They were completely thrown back."

"The French lines did not cede any ground," the statement continued. "We strengthened our gains.

"Around Hurtebise and Cornillet, and in the region of Alsace, north of Aspach, German raids were fruitless. The enemy abandoned prisoners to our forces.

"On the left bank of the Meuse there were artillery actions."

(By Henry Wood, United Press Correspondent.)

WITH THE FRENCH ARMIES IN THE FIELD, July 25. — In one short stroke, French forces early to-day completely wiped out all Germany had gained by six days of prodigal sacrifices in blood and steel and powder, along the Chemin Des Dames. The defense of this highway parallels in heroic brilliance the throwing back of the German waves at Verdun. Since Thursday morning the Crown Prince's attacks had been continuous and furious. His troops suffered enormous casualties as the price of foot by foot gains. Then these same French troops who have endured the continuous bombardment and attack, suddenly leaped forward and swept the Germans out of their costly gains.

The reason for the German attacks and the massacres of her troops apparently lies in the belief of the German staff that serious Austrian peace tendencies must be overcome, the Teutonic population must be cheered up by action on land in view of the submarine failure, and enthusiasm raised for fresh war loans by some stroke of the army. In addition, the observatories on Chemin Des Dames are dominant in this theatre of the war, and so long as the French hold them, the German lines are menaced.

LONDON, July 25.—One hundred and fourteen prisoners, including two officers, was the British haul from a successful raid yesterday east of Monchy Le Preux, Field Marshal Haig reported to-day. In the neighbourhood of Lombartsyde, he said, the enemy artillery was active during the night.

WASHINGTON, July 25.—Greece has agreed to Serbia's request for the establishment of a temporary Serbian capital at Salonika, it was officially announced to-day. The Allies have abandoned their blockade against Greece. It frees a considerable British force for action elsewhere.

COPENHAGEN, July 25.—A remarkable frank statement by the Berlin correspondent of the National Tidenan passed by the Forsign Office Censor, says the effect of the submarine campaign has been miscalculated, not regarding the amount of tonnage destroyed, but as to the time required to make its effects felt in England. The German people are still convinced it will succeed ultimately if given time, and they themselves are able to hold out. The arrival of Emperor William at the Galician front yesterday was reported in a Berlin despatch. The Emperor destributed orders and medals.

PETROGRAD, July 25.—The Russian Women's Battalion was in action on the Krevo front yesterday. They are reported to have been successful, although the battalion suffered some losses.

COPENHAGEN, July 25.—Lloyd George's skepticism regarding Michaelis' reply to the Reichstag received unexpected justification and corroboration from German sources. It was declared, the Chancellor's speech was open to two interpretations which Lloyd George mentioned. It was added that the policy of silence of political aims inaugurated by Hollweg and continued by Michaelis had laid the German policy open to the dubious repute which Lloyd George criticized. The Berlin Tageblatt reports the full text of the Premier's reply.

(By William G. Shepherd, United Press Staff Correspondent.)

PETROGRAD, July 25.—All Russia joined to-day to back up the "unlimited power" granted to its government in searching out the traitor, the malcontent, the spy, and the coward, from its population. The nation apparently approves every measure of stern repression which Russia's Lloyd George, Premier Kerensky, is invoking. The whole nation is engaged in a gigantic man hunt—the man being Nicholai Lenine, the Pacifist agitator, now condemned by the Government as a paid German agent. Lenine's closest associate was taken into custody in a Finnish town.

PETROGRAD, July 25.—Admiral Razvozoff was to-day appointed in command of the whole Russian Baltic fleet.

NEW YORK, July 25.—Russia's armies around Tarnopol and Stanislau were still in retreat to-day with Teutonic forces installed at both these cities and about to capture intermediate town of Buczacz, according to official war statements.

Further to the north, however, Russian forces were exhibiting none of the wavering of the Tarnopol sector. Berlin reported an attack strong enough to penetrate the German line in the Sasita Valley and that the Russians held firm south of Tartar Pass, indicating Kerensky's soldiers in these parts of the line were not only loyal, but capable of strong opposition.

FIVE KILLED IN AN EXPLOSION ON SUB.

WASHINGTON, July 25.—Five men were killed and three injured in an explosion aboard the United States submarine A-7 at Gaxite, P.I.

The A7, one of the oldest type submarine, was build in 1902, and had a displacement of only 120 tons.

A statement issued by Secretary Daniels said: "The cause of the explosion from the preliminary examination, appeared to be due to a collection of gasoline fumes.

The explosion happened at 4:40 p.m. yesterday.

RUSSIAN TROOPS ARE IN RETREAT ALMOST EVERYWHERE

Already the Losses of Russians in Casualties and in Guns and Stores Captured Are Extremely Heavy

EVACUATING STANISLAU

LONDON, July 24. — Despite the threat of Premier Kerenesky that a policy of "blood and iron" is to be applied without restraint against the seditious Russian troops in East Galicia whose disaffection has made null almost all the brilliant gains they had achieved under his personal leadership early in the month, the Russians continue their retirement, virtually pell-mell, before the German and Austro-Hungarian armies. From the wooded Carpathians to the region of Tarnopol the forces of General Korniloff almost everywhere are in disorderly retreat, hardly anywhere making an attempt to hold back the oncoming enemy.

Already the losses of the Russians in men killed, wounded or made prisoner and in guns and stores captured are extremely heavy, and these undoubtedly will become greater unless the hope for stiffening in the morale of the Russians is realized soon.

Stanislau, the principal junction for commercial activities in the Crown land of Galicia and an important grain and manufacturing centre, is being evacuated by the Russians, while Podhaytse, Halicz and other towns have been taken by the Teutons. Tarnopol, one of the chief towns in the Crownland, is more seriously menaced than ever, if it has not already been retaken, by the enemy crossing the river to the south.

Including the hostilities in Galicia the entire eastern front from the Baltic virtually to the Black Sea is the scene of big operations, but with the Russians standing firmly against the enemy only in the Roumanian theatre.

As in Galicia the Russians to the north, around the region of Dvinsk and Vilna, continue to show signs of disaffection. Although they had attacked and captured German positions along the Dvinsk-Vilna railway, the Russians could not be induced to press their advantage and retired, unhindered by the Germans to their old positions. In the repulse of attacks with large forces near Krevo, which was recaptured, and south of Smorgon, the Germans cut entire regiments to pieces with their galling fire of the infantry and machine guns.

The Official Statement.

The Petrograd War Office statement says:

"Stanislau is being evacuated by the Russians. The Germans have crossed the Bereth River in the region of Mikulice (south of Tarnopol), defeating Russians detachments. South of the Dniester, the Russians are retiring eastward.

"After the Russians had occupied the German positions on both sides of Dvinsk-Vilna railroad, entire units returned to their original trenches without German pressure. A number of units refused to obey commands during battle.

"The enemy occupied a height to the north of Bogush, which the Russians captured on July 22. Heroic exertions on the part of the Russian officers were heeded to restrain great numbers of the men from retreating.

"On the Roumanian front a "Battalion of Death" captured 50 prisoners and three machine guns near Domuk. An artillery battle developed on the remainder of the front."

600,000 "Sammies" In France By September 1918

WASHINGTON, July 25. —Six hundred thousand Sammies is the largest number the United States can send abroad by September, 1918. This was stated semi-officially to-day, along with the declaration that more than one hundred thousand men can be in Europe by next January. Lack of shipping facilities with which to move the troops across the Atlantic is the reason for the pessimistic outlook.

BRITISH LINES BOMBARDED

German Artillery Poured Great Quantities of Gas and High Explosive Shells on Positions in the Sea Sector Last Night

BRITISH GUNS REPLY

(By William Philip Simms, U. P. Staff Correspondent.)

With the British Armies in the Field, July 25. — German artillery poured great quantities of gas and high explosive shells on British positions in the sea sector last night. British batteries roared back a stout reply. The inter-change continued until dawn.

As this is cabled the fire has quieted down.

Early to-day airplanes were exceedingly active on both sides, despite heavy thunder storms and rain.

CHILD IS KILLED

Little Daughter of Mr. F. E. Ellis Editor of Farm and Dairy Meets Death When Motor Car Turns Turtle

A TERRIBLE TRAGEDY

A terribly sad accident occurred this morning at Campbellville, which resulted in the death of the little daughter of Mr. and Mrs. F. E. Ellis, of this city.

Mr. Ellis is editor of Farm and Dairy, and for a while back his wife and child have been visiting with Mrs. Ellis' parents in Western Ontario. Mrs. Ellis was driving a motor car this morning, when in some manner it became unmanageable and turned turtle in a river that runs close to where Mrs. Ellis had been.

Mrs. Ellis herself got out the little girl from the upturned car, but life was extinct, and to what extent, either from shock or injury, Mrs. Ellis is suffering, is not known yet.

Mr. Ellis, who was going to Campbellville on other business, just arrived shortly after the accident took place.

The little girl was about three years of age, a very bright and attractive little one, and the parents will have the heartfelt sympathy of their friends in their loss.

Many Recruits For U.S. Army

NEW YORK, July 25.— America's men of fighting age are flocking into war service. An unprecedented wave of enlistments in the army, navy and marine corps is sweeping the country. Men of conscription age, whose numbers were drawn far down in the list, and who fear they may not be called for army duty, are crowding the recruiting stations throughout the nation. The first rush came immediately after draft day, recruiting officers declare. Reports gathered by the United Press to-day show the rush to the colours is country wide.

For anyone to select glasses by "trying on," that will overcome actual defects in vision. Such glasses will often seem to improve your eyesight temporarily, because they magnify, but the ultimate result is eye strain or other serious difficulty. Don't take chances. THE MILITARY SERVICE ACT IS PASSED BY HOUSE OF COMMONS

Local Committee To Be Formed Here By Aero Club Of Canada

Will Act as a Board to Assist the Commanding Officers of the Royal Flying Corps in Securing Flying Officers--An Interesting Letter From Overseas--To-day's General Military News.

The Aero Club of Canada, which has headquarters in the Sun Life Building, Toronto, is busy in Peterborough. Several Peterborough men will be appointed by the Commanding Officer of the Royal Flying Corps in Canada to act as a board to assist in selecting young men between the ages of 18 and 26, who desire to take out commissions as flying officers. The Royal Flying Corps is now the senior branch of the military service, and the education and training young men receive without expense is most valuable now, and will also be of great value after the war. The young men who are acceptable ket good pay which starts at once, and promotion for those of ability is usually rapid. The Imperial Government is spending millions in Canada in the care and education of cadets, as flying officers. The Aero Club of Canada will be glad to give further information to any of our readers who will write to the club promptly.

Col. Wm. Hamilton Merritt, President of the Aero Club of Canada, remarked: "How will Canadian lads feel if the R.F.C. are obliged to turn to the young men of the United States or to other parts of the British Empire for cadets This will come to pass soon if more Canadians do not come forward and take advantage of the splendid opportunity to learn to fly without expense, and to be an officer in the senior and best paid branch of the service."

Mrs. Jas. Gray, Wolsley street, has received the following letter from Major J. C. Davidson:

On Board Train York to London,
July 2nd, 1917.

Mrs. James Gray, Box 801,
Peterborough.

Dear Mrs. Gray.—Though I have not the pleasure of knowing you, personally, yet I feel a real connection with you as the mother of two of our Peterborough soldiers, and offer you my warm greetings.

I am at present sitting in a train beside your son, Corp. Geo. Gray, whom I was delighted to meet at York station, and we have come down together and have had a long chat about the old town and men we both know, and by a co-incidence, we have just passed Peterboro', England, and have no further stop before London. The journey is a ride over four hours by fast train, which is half full of soldiers. George seems to be in splendid health and good spirits, and you need have no anxiety about him. He evidently had a bad wound, but has quite recovered. He has had a good time and plenty of kindness showed to him, as we all have in this country. Everyone treats us Canadians especially well, and they highly appreciate what our country has done in the war. Your son tells me he is on his way to report for light duty at Shorncliffe. He will not probably be sent to France for a while, but of course, can't tell. I have been on sick leave myself, suffering from over-work, but am better now and expect to return to France very soon. Am to report to my superior officers to-day in London.

I am greatly interested in my work but never forget Peterborough and its people who have always been so kind to me. We shall all be more than glad when the time comes to go home.

Faithfully Yours,
J. C. DAVIDSON.

Chaplain No. 3 Canadian Stationary Hospital, B.E.F.

Miss G. Jones, Apsley, Ont., received the following letter from her brother, Sergt. J. W. Jones, of the 235th Battalion, now with the 208th Batt., Witley, Surrey, England:

July 6th, 1917.
Witley,
Surrey Co.,
Eng.

My Dear Sister,—I guess you will be thinking that I have nothing to to do but write letters. I have written several times since I've heard from home. Your letter and mother's of May 28th were the last mail to reach me. You mentioned some letter written previous to those I've referred to. Well I guess they have been lost somewhere. I don't know of anything more welcome to a soldier than mail; "it comes ahead of our meals."

It is interesting yet sad to watch the master parade for mail, all lined up in alphabetical order, eagerly awaiting their turn although our former battalion has had hard luck with their mail. Some of the boys have not heard from anyone since leaving Canada. They consider me lucky. I have received eight letters in all since April 25th. As I am marching off through the dense fog, and awful chilling dampness here, so near the ocean, in the early morning, I think of home and mother and you so far away about your daily work. And then on Sundays, which are like week days here, I think of those still, quiet summer evenings at home, my mind will wander away across the ocean and I, like Burns, will shut my eyes and fancy I hear the church bells ringing and see the familiar faces of those that assemble to hear the word of God.

We had a most beautiful open-air service here on Dominion Day. The chaplain spoke from the fifteenth chapter John, I Book, 10th to 14th verse. I am real well and as happy as possible. It is sad about our poor Hugh but it is a consolation to know he faced death smiling. Yes, God's messengers spoke to him and told him his time had come to go on a still greater mission. Poor Hugh, rich in honour and devotion, laid down his life in a good cause and with perfect willingness.

I have met many wounded Tommies here from the 4th Batt., who knew Hugh well, especially a corporal, who remembered his coming to their battalion early last autumn. They all say they never knew a more kind, generous and thoughtful boy, always willing to help his comrades, in fact, says Corp. Cox, he would share his last crust or go cold in the trenches that his comrades might be comfortable. "A good fellow among the boys," and had many friends, friendship that awful nights in the lonely trenches make. They marvelled at his humorous good nature and cheerful expression. I hope to see some of the Apsley boys, who are in hospitals here, as I go on pass soon.

Well, Sis, our old unit has been broken up and I am down here on instructional duty and attending class. Our training is very stiff yet interesting. But I long to get to France. Oh! my loyal blood and brotherly spirit longs for vengeance on those cursed Huns.

I have got along splendidly here. I got a great surprise when I completed my musketry course and got a marksmanship. Really with those new rifles, "Lee Enfields," and firing with fixed bayonets, gas masks and sometimes 86 pounds upon my back, steel helmets, etc., shooting from 100 to 1,000 yards maybe I didn't feel big when the Colonel came up and offers his hand to me and two other chaps who made good.

I was amused to-day when we were passing a battalion of Imperials. One of our boys passed some remarks about their untidyness and they called us "blooming Canadians." Then the fun started. They were called comical names, believe me! There seems to be some rivalry between them and the Canucks, jealousy I presume. You know they look for all the praise and it's not coming to them alone by any means.

Following is an extract I copied from a local paper here:

The heroes of Vimy Ridge—London longs for a sight of them. Vimy saved human civilization from wreck and disaster. Vimy in the centuries yet unborn will be a shrine at which all men will worship, but what of the men who consecrated Vimy with their blood. Our country here knows noth-

Vote Was 101 to 44 With No Surprises or Switches From Vote on Second Reading of the Bill—Sir Wilfrid Laurier Again Urges a Referendum.

NOW GOES TO SENATE

OTTAWA, July 24.—The Conscription Bill is through the Commons. At 5.32 this afternoon, after a final three hours of debate, the third reading was carried by a vote of 101 to 44, a majority of 57. It was carried with the help of twenty-two Liberals, eight of them from Ontario, two from the Maritime Provinces, and twelve from Western Canada.

Ten absentees, five Liberals and five Conservatives, who voted for the second reading of the bill, and who were not paired this afternoon, would have brought the majority up to sixty-eight.

Of the Ontario members, all but two, Hon. Chas. Murphy and Mr. Proulx of Prescott, are recorded in favour of the bill. This fact alone corrects a misinterpretation which seems to have been placed in some quarters upon the conclusions reached at the Liberal conference of members and candidates in Toronto last Friday.

Reference was made to this briefly at the opening of the House this afternoon by Messrs. Pardee and Guthrie, both taking occasion to reaffirm their attitude taken on the second reading of the bill in favour of the principle of conscription to be applied under a Union of National Government. While intimating that they did not agree with all the conclusions reported to have been reached at the Toronto conference, they did not specify wherein they differed.

Mr. Turriff, Assiniboia, who also spoke briefly at the opening of the debate, aligned himself unequivocally with the Liberals supporting the principle of conscription, explaining that this was his first opportunity to indicate his attitude. Mr. Turiff was absent at the time of the debate on the second reading.

Sir Wilfrid's Vigorous Speech.

Then came Sir Wilfrid Laurier Despite the intense heat of the Chamber, the veteran Opposition leader spoke with all his old vigour, aptness of phrasing, and cogency of argument. For nearly an hour he reviewed the salient points at issue in regard to the bill. On the second reading of the bill Sir Wilfrid devoted the main portion of his argument to the constitutional principles at stake, leading up to his conclusion that the wisest solution lay through the medium of a referendum. To-day he emphasized more the dangers of general disunion and general discord threatened and already apparent from a policy of coercion without a mandate from the people, with out whose mandate the enforcement of the measure was both dangerous and impracticable.

"It is," declared Sir Wilfrid in his peroration, "a denial of those principles of democracy which we hold dear and sacred. I oppose this bill because it has in it the seeds of discord and disunion; because it is an obstacle and a bar to that union of heart and soul without which it is impossible to hope that this Confederation will attain the aims and ends which were had in view when Confederation was effected. All my life I have fought coercion, and all my life I have promoted union, and the inspiration which led me to that course shall be my guide at all times so long as there is a breath left in my body."

Sir Wilfrid eloquently declared

WEDNESDAY, JULY 25, 1917

LORD RHONDDA'S MESSAGE.

The stirring message from Lord Rhondda, British Food Controller to the Canadian people as read by Hon. W. J. Hanna is worth repeating:

"We look to the reso rces of Canada, and to the indomitable energy of Canadians, for an answer that will shatter Germany's threat of starvation. In normal times the Mother Country is dependent on your Dominion for a large part of its food supplies. War has increased that dependence to such an extent that it is now vital for the United Kingdom and the allies in Europe to obtain from Canada foodstuffs in far larger quantities than under peace conditions. That must necessarily entail effort and far-reaching economy, with their attendant sacrifices on the part of Canadians.

"I know that, like ourselves at home, the pick of your manhood have gone, and are going to take their splendid share in the front line of battle, and that, therefore, you are faced with the difficulty of a supply of labour .I also realise that an increased export of food supplies must entail diversion of effort from other enterprise, yet I am convinced that the people of Canada will surmount all obstacles, and that the harvest, as far as human labour can achieve, will be a striking demonstration of Canada's efficiency and determination. The willingness of the Canadian people to permit control of their products for purposes of winning the war is naturally welcomed by all the allies, as tending to increase the supply and to regulate prices. The certainty that we can rely on your whole hearted co-operation, not only in utilising every ounce of national energy to increase production, but in equitable adjustment of prices, gives me the greatest encouragement. I most heartily wish you every success in your all-important work."

VOLUNTARY THRIFT.

We are fortunate, perhaps, that the thrift campaign, as it affects the individual, is not compulsory, but unless we recognise its dangers this freedom from constraint may prove the ultimate obstacle to success. Food Controller Hanna has appealed for the voluntary co-operation of the people; hence the fruits of this movement depend upon individual effort. And it must be said for the Hon. Mr. Hanna that he is not lacking in courage and hope when he undertakes to array the Canadian people against a vague and formless enemy when so many have failed to react to more obvious alarms. It is an invincible spirit that pleads for the conservation of food in the face of seeming indifference to the harvesting of its raw material. And the underlying cause of that indifference is the inherent weakness that threatens the new campaign and must be effectually forestalled.

The individual has first to overcome a feeling of the futility of his lone effort and a suspicion that it is unsupported. He lacks the evidence of action and tangible results from which the soldier gains his fortitude and inspiration. The citizen who enlists with the Food Controller needs the touch of association or at least the assurance of the co-operation of his neighbours to sustain him when his confidence falters. To provide that esprit de corps the thrift campaign should be made popular. Its objects are worthy of closely united endeavour, and the experience of self-sacrifice will be a lasting and beneficoal influence upon character and citizenship.

Hence the campaign should be considered as in motion now, and delayed action will but militate against its success. If the citizen misdoubts the corporations outside of this movement he should be strengthened in his resolve by the knowledge that his saving of food and of money is not only a patriotic act but is indirectly a thrust at the middlemen. Moreover it may work to his personal advantage. For example, if the consumption of butter in each of one thousand households is decreased one pound a week the effect is actually one thousand pounds of butter thrown back on the market in that week. Similarly with other commodities and especially luxuries which should be the first salient for assault. Multiply the aggregate for one thousand homes by the total number in Canada and it is surely evident that the new campaign moving in all its force should influence downward the cost of living.

To popularize and spread the Food Controller's voluntary organization presents a difficulty in spite of the possibilities. Workmen in shops might be interested, business and professional men, children and of course women urging them to begin now, to enlist others in the drive and especially to sustain one another by recounting, like notches on a gun barrel or German souvenirs, their intangible but all important sacrificial victories over themselves and their habits of thoughtless extravagance and waste.

WHAT BULGARIA WANTS

According to reports from Switzerland, that canny Czar, Ferdinand of Bulgaria, has emissaries at work, trying to find out what advantageous terms, if any, the Entente Powers would offer him for a separate peace. The proceeding is thoroughly in line with Ferdinand's character, whether the reports are true or not; and such subterranean inquiries could be virtuously denied if they came to the Kaiser's ears and he should thunder against his vassal.

It is most unlikely that any terms not unjust to the Balkan allies will yet satisfy the ruling classes of Bulgaria. There are survivors of the Bulgarophil school in England, and Mr. Noel Buxton has lately, in The Nineteenth Century, proposed a separate peace with Bulgaria, the imaginary, the sentimental Bulgaria, that appealed to liberal sentiment forty years ago.

The present Bulgaria is not sentimental. Substantially old parties are devoted to the Central Europe theory. Bulgaria, by means of the alliance with Germany and Austria, hopes, or has hoped, to be the chief Power, economically and politically, in the Balkans. At present she holds Greek Macedonia to the Struma, three-fourths of Serbia, all Dodrudja. According to the Swiss story, she "has no interest in continuing the "war if the territory in Macedonia "is ceded to her."

This moderation in new and incredible at present. The Bulgarian Premier, M. Radoslavov, said, a few weeks ago in Vienna and to the organ of the Ballplats not only wanted the part of Macedonia occupied by her troops, and Dodrudja in addition, but "security for all time. "We want "to keep in touch with Austria-"Hungary through the Morava Valley."

There is the milk of the Bulgaria cocoanut. The Morava Valley, the northeastern angle of Serbia, is not only the road from Berlin through Central Europe, but it is opulent in coal, copper, and gold, a rich mining region awaiting development. "We "are neighbors of Austria-Hungary, "and we desire to remain and must "remain so for all future time," said Premier Radoslavov in May. The reasons are clear, and Bulgarian propagandists have long been at work in the Morava Valley.

It is amusing to find the Bulgarian Socialist delegation to the Stockholm Conference aspiring "to an immediate peace without annexations," and in the same breath declaring, through one of their numbers, M. Janulov, that Bulgarian Socvialists cannot "give up Macedonia and a great part "of Old Serbia as far as the Austrian "frontier." One can imagine the cynical grin of Ferdinand as he dispatched these non-annexation annexationists to the German play at Stockholm. The German no-annexation Socialists are delightful, but their even more delightful Bulgarian brethren should not go unhonoured.

WHAT MR. OLIVER SAID.

The Honourable Frank Oliver, as appears by the report in Hansard, on the 17th instant, said:

For what is the soldier fighting? For the good of the country, for its safety, for its honour, for its welfare now and in the future. And yet we are to sit here and are not to criticize the Government; we are not to question anything the Government does; we are to permit the food of the people to be stolen by the profiteers to the amount of millions upon millions of dollars, and are we to say nothing. We are not to criticize—we are to take no action.

If we do our duty here, we shall ensure to our men at the front that there is good and efficient government in this country, and when those who are fortunate enough to come back, do return, there will be a country for them to come back to. Heaven knows whether they will really have a country to come back to when the war is over, if matters continue on the same course as at present; and if the policy of this Government since they took office—and no man knows it better than my hon. friend (Mr. Michael Clark)—has been to make the rich richer and the poor poorer, and at no time, and on no occasion was that more tr) than it is at this moment, and it is becoming increasingly true every day.

When this Government itself brings down a report to say that the men who handle a large part of the food of the people have made profits of untold millions, and when the reports of the milling companies which handle another large part of the food of the people show the profits that they show, are we justified in sitting here and failing to take such action as will protect those for whom our men are fighting and protect the rights and interests for which they are fighting?

We have a duty to perform as well as they. It is our business to see that this country is governed honestly and efficiently. It is the business of us who are in Opposition to hold a check upon the operation of the Government. No condition could be more dangerous to the welfare of the State than a combination between both sides of the House that would prevent effective criticism of the actions of the Government.

"THE LADIES FROM HELL."

"Pibroch of Doniul Dhu,
Pibroch of Doniul,
Wake thy wild voice anew,
Summon Clan-Coniul!"

Up Broadway they marched, the Canadian Highlanders who had come to New York to help on the British recruiting there and along the crowded sidewalks there were cheers and cheers. Of all the thrilling episodes of the war, none was more thrilling than this. There is something in the pipes to stir the most sluggish heart. Under that inspiration men went gladly to death for Bounie Prince Charlie. They are going to death now for a greater cause. The kilties sweep down on the Germans as they once swept down on the Sassenach. "The ladies from hell," the enemy in the trenches calls them. The laddies from Canada in their kilts, their plaids, their brooches, their sporrans, their bonnets, rouse the fighting blood in all who see them. Two hundred of them came to New York, and who can say how many recruits will follow in their train? They are asking for men to enlist under the British colours, but may there not be hitherto reluctant patriots who because of them will enlist under the American colours as well? No man of Scottish birth or ancestry, at least, could be deaf to such an appeal.

"From the lone shieling on the misty island
Mountains divide them, and a world of seas;
But still their hearts are true, their hearts are Highland,
And they in dreams behold the Hebrides."

Too much has been said of British "slackers." Until America went into the war there could be no recruiting in this country for the British army, nor could many of those who wished to join find a chance. There are a million Britons who ought to in the trenches is the emanation of the disordered pro-German brain— a subtle argument to discourage American recruiting. It may be doubted if there are a tenth of that number. Even without the inspiration of the kilties they have been coming foward bravely of late. Instead of criticizing them, it would be better to follow their example. Let the pibroch sound all over the land if that will help. Bring the Highlanders to Philadelphia. Chestnut street will respond to the call as enthusiastically as Broadway. Nothing is more needed just now than a revival of the fighting spirit. An abstraction is not inspiring. War may be a science, but the scientific spirit does not win battles. We need the tumult and the shouting too. The Campbells and all the rest of the clans are coming. On to Berlin!— Philadelphia Ledger.

This White Lead has been making good for nearly 200 years.

Not only is it absolutely pure, but it is whiter, of greater covering capacity and of longer life than any similar product. The paint in which it is used works easily and produces a tough, elastic film that is very durable.

Brandram's Genuine B.B. White Lead

Brandram Bros. & Co. of London, England, invented their process for corroding white lead in the reign of George II. Although almost 200 years have since passed and many other white leads have appeared on the market Brandram's Genuine B.B. White Lead has maintained its preferential price and position wherever it is sold throughout the world.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

OVER THE WIRE

A Telegraph Operator's Story

By WARREN MILLER

There is no more favorable opportunity for young people of opposite sex to poke fun at each other than over a telephone or telegraph wire. There is a fascination in operating from behind a shield rendering one invisible. A girl will delight to say things to a man who can't see her and doesn't know who she is. I was a telegraph operator when a young man, and I noticed this disposition in many a girl operator with whom I talked over the wire. I am a matter of fact sort of a fellow myself and doubt if it would ever have occurred to me to bamboozle a girl in this fashion had not the girl shown a disposition to bamboozle me.

She who first tried it was an operator at a station about twenty miles away from me. I was in the town of M., while the girl was out at G., a way station some twenty miles distant in the country. She had more time on her hands than I, and I suppose this is what set her on to quizzing me. She started in one night about 9 o'clock after having taken a message from me, beginning by asking me what was going on in town; how I liked M.; if there was any fun going on there and expressing her dislike at being compelled to live in a little way station like G. From this we fell to talking about ourselves and naturally, as persons of opposite sex at that age invariably do, finally drifted on to love and marriage. From love and marriage in general we dropped into specialties, at last narrowing the topic down to ourselves.

The girl led me along in the channel she laid out herself till I admitted that, marriage being a lottery, I would about as lief marry a girl I had no knowledge of as one I had met and loved. All I required was to know that the girl I was to marry possessed a fair amount of good looks. One thing led to another till it was arranged that she should mail me her photograph and I should send her mine. Then if we were mutually pleased we might proceed further toward forming an acquaintance with a view to matrimony.

The next day I looked over my stock of photographs—not of myself, but of my friends—and, selecting one of Sam Atkins, the best looking fellow in the lot, I sent it to the girl. Sam was off at the Spanish-American war at the time, and I trusted to his getting shot or dying of disease so that I might not get into trouble by passing him off for myself. In return I received a picture of a rather pretty girl, who I judged from her features was full of mischief, the very one to get up just such a complication as we were entering upon. Upon her lips was an engaging smile and in her eyes a very saucy look.

After that the wires began to warm up with our conversations, till at last they came to a white heat with love passages. When we had fired a lot of such missiles at each other we began to talk about meeting. At my proposal to go to see her she cooled down a bit, and it was easy to see that her exuberance was the result of fighting behind a masked battery. I made several propositions to go to see her on a certain day and hour, but for every time I set she gave some reason why it would be inconvenient or impossible for her to receive me. At last it occurred to me to go up and look her over without an appointment. Never having seen me, she wouldn't know me.

So one day, having secured a leave, I started to see my charmer. On arrival I walked up into the village and on the street met my girl, whom I recognized at once by her photograph. I followed her into several shops and finally to a yellow house that stood back from the street. She went into the house, and, having waited half an hour for her to come out, I concluded she lived there.

I knew a man in the place, Tom Foster, and, hunting him up, told him that there was a girl in the town I wished to know. He said there was going to be a dance that evening and all the girls in the place would be there. He would take me with him, and if he knew the girl I wished to meet he would introduce me. I thought that an excellent plan since it would give me the advantage of keeping my affairs to myself. I could obtain an introduction to different girls without my introducer knowing the one I was especially interested in.

That evening I went with Foster to the hall where the dance was to take place. He asked about the girl I wished to know and why I wished to know her and all that, but I evaded his questions. I didn't propose to let the girl herself know that I was the fellow she had been making love to over the wire—at least till I had learned all about her.

She was there sure enough, looking as pretty as a picture—a brunette with a profusion of jet black hair, a stately figure and as mischievous an eye as ever I saw in a woman. When I first saw her she was talking with another girl about her own age, and that I might not give myself away to Foster I asked him to introduce me to the other girl.

She proved to be Miss Ellen Ormsby, a staid young woman whom I found rather hard to talk to. I asked her who was the girl she was with when I was introduced to her, and she said she was Agnes Miller and, taking the hint, offered to introduce me. I accepted and was introduced.

I don't think I ever chuckled so in my life as when I found myself incognito chatting with the girl whom I had been saying soft things to over the wire. I made up my mind to stave off the denouement as long as possible. Not for the world would I give her any clew to my identity by the slightest reference to what had passed between us. And as to letting her know even that I was a telegraph operator, nothing would tempt me to risk giving away the whole thing by doing so.

I danced several times with Agnes Miller and once with her friend Ellen Ormsby. I concluded to go slow with Miss Miller, but I got in a number of compliments and several looks indicating my admiration for her. When I left her to catch my train, which I did before the dance had ended, I pressed her hand and received a slight pressure in return.

Very soon after this I received a shock at the return of Sam Atkins. The Spanish war was over, and Sam had come home in excellent health and handsome as ever. What disconcerted me was that in some way—I having sent my girl his photograph—he might spoil my fun. But on second thought it occurred to me that there was no likelihood of this since she was so far from both of us.

He did give a scare one evening when he came to my room and seeing a new and pretty face among the photographs on my table began to quiz me. He declared he would scour the country round till he discovered the original of the picture.

On my return from G. I resumed my telegraphic chat with her, enjoying it far more than before from having made her acquaintance. It was very amusing to talk with her, having seen her, while I was still unknown to her except through Sam Atkins' photograph. She continued to complain of the dullness of G., so I concluded to ask her to come to town and go with me to the theater. This would let her into the secret of my having sent her another man's photograph, but I must let that out some time, and there was no especial reason for delay.

She accepted the invitation with alacrity and appointed a night. I procured a couple of seats and wrote her that I would meet her at the station and take her from there to the theater; she would know me by a bit of orange ribbon worn in my buttonhole. To keep up the fraud till her arrival I asked her to carry a few violets in her left hand.

When Miss Miller alighted from the train and saw me, whom she had met before, with the orange ribbon in my buttonhole she stood still for a moment; then, simply remarking that we had met before and I had deceived her about the photograph, we left the station, and, since it was a summer evening and an hour must elapse before the play would begin, we walked to a park or central square and sat down on one of the benches. She then reproved me mildly for sending her the wrong photograph, but said she didn't mind that since she had made my acquaintance at G.

When we entered the theater and took our seats but few people had arrived. We enjoyed ourselves chatting about our telegraphic correspondence and watching the audience come in. Suddenly my heart stood still.

Who should enter and take the two seat in the next row in front of us but Sam Atkins and Miss Miller's friend, whom I had met at G., Ellen Ormsby.

The expression on their faces was, to say the least, peculiar. Smiles were struggling to assert themselves which the three were endeavoring to suppress. I cast a hasty glance at my companion and saw her eyes fairly dance with a mingled delight, mischief and triumph.

I knew at once that the game I had been playing had not only been discovered, but had been turned against me.

"Sam, you rascal!" I exclaimed. "You're a traitor to your own sex!"

My remark occasioned a burst of laughter from the whole party except myself.

"Come," I said, "explain the matter."

At this moment the orchestra struck up the overture, and in ten minutes more the curtain rose. My tormentors forced me to wait till the end of the first act before giving me an explanation; then my companion said:

"Nellie Ormsby is a telegraph operator at the G. station and has been your correspondent. She sent you my photograph with my consent instead of her own and, having no more confidence in you in such a matter than herself, did not believe the likeness you sent her was your own. She went to M., taking the photograph with her, and a mutual friend of hers and Mr. Atkins there told her that it was his picture. Before leaving town she saw you at work at your instrument and knew that you were her correspondent. Then Mr. Atkins returned from the war. She went again to M., made his acquaintance and told him the secret.

"Meanwhile you had gone to G., and the moment you entered the ballroom Nellie recognized you. She saw your attention fixed on me and introduced you. Your enjoyment in the part you were playing gave us double what was evident in you. When your invitation came we decided to spring the joke on you here at the theater. We wrote Mr. Atkins to find out if possible where our seats were and get two more near them. This he learned through you.

"So you see that when a man sets himself up to outwit a girl he must sharpen his own wits on a whetstone."

It was all plain enough now. I acknowledged myself beaten and after the play invited the party to the best supper that could be obtained.

There is a sequel to this story, but not to be given here. The gist of it is that I paired off with Miss Miller and Sam with Miss Ormsby.

Menace of City Sportsmen.

"The quail, or bobwhite," says a writer in Farm and Fireside, "is one of our prettiest as well as one of our most useful birds. He deserves to be called a national bird just as much as the American eagle. Why should the farmers and land owners allow his destruction and what seems to be his eventual extermination?

"Hunting is a pleasure and recreation a farmer could have right at home on his own farm if he could save the game from the city sportsman. Why could not the farmer, when he has permitted the quail to multiply and to become a benefit and a blessing to the community, have the much needed recreation in shooting the surplus game? I think the farmers could be so organized that they could control the wandering and the wantonness of the city sportsman and preserve bobwhite and other game."

RESPECT YOUR PROMISES.

Therefore Do Not Make Any Unless You Can Keep Them.

Keep your promises, so don't make any you can't fill.

Don't make any in conflict with agreements.

Neglecting the exact terms of a definite promise is often a very serious thing.

The keeping of promises in business transactions is the "sheet anchor" in the establishing of credit among one's business associates.

The world of business places great value on promises.

Not only in all business transactions, but in everyday life, the keeping of promises should be looked after with care.

Whatever you do, keep your word, for the man who breaks his promises even in little things is sure to break them in the more important ones.

It is a good plan when making a promise as to appointments to jot down in a memorandum book the man's name, so that no mistakes can be made.

It is a question of obligation that is not canceled until it is paid.

The man whose promise or word can be relied upon is the one whose influence is farreaching in any community or in any business.

Keep your promises, so don't make any you can't fill.—New York Mail.

Counting the Salmon.

The Wood river in Alaska has been closed to fishing for many years and is resorted to for breeding purposes by red salmon escaping the nets in Nushagak bay. The counting of the salmon was first undertaken in 1908 and has been continued annually since that time except in 1914.

The counting is made possible by throwing a rack across the stream and compelling the fish to pass through a narrow gate, where they are easily visible to persons immediately above. Agents of the fisheries bureau in relays are kept on duty day and night for the entire period of the run, and the tally is kept by an automatic counting device manipulated by hand.

The highest count for any one day in recent years was 25,554.—New York Sun.

Voice of The People

Correspondences under this heading, containing or involving attacks on individuals or violent or extreme statements, must to secure insertion, be signed with writer's real name, the owner of which thus assumes the responsibility.

Editor of The Examiner:

Dear Sir,—I just wish to explain an incident that happened on a certain street the other day. Two ladies planted a garden of potatoes. Now that they have undertaken to do men's work they should try and do as men do; pick the bugs and burn them and not take them out on the street and try to kill them with their feet and have half of them go into other people's garden. One lady took her hat and slapped them off on the ground. There are a number of people who have gardens planted beside this one, who look after their gardens and put on paris green and have tilled and hoed and picked the bugs and looked after the work. Most of them are men who are used to work and have to do so after their day's hard work. With women trying to do men's work there is not much use planting gardens and leaving them to be eat up by bugs.

A WOMAN OBSERVER.

Editor of The Examiner:

Dear Sir,—A very interesting article, which appeared in your columns a short time ago explained the various precautions adopted by the Medical Health Officer of Toronto, to insure a pure and wholesome milk supply for the city. Particular stress was laid upon the work of the inspectors whose duties consist in making periodical inspections of all farms from which milk is shipped to Toronto.

In the event of any farm being found below a certain required standard, whether due to disease among the cows, lack of ventilation, uncleanness or undrained stables, carelessness or want of cleanliness in handling the milk, it is the duty of the inspector to make an unfavourable report to the Medical Health Officer who forthwith issues an order to every milk dealer in the city, forbidding the purchase of milk or dairy produce of any kind from the blacklisted farm. We see while this action most effectually protects milk users in Toronto, it does not protect users in other cities. In view of the fact that Toronto inspectors make regular visits to this district, would it not be well to have the Medical Health Officer of Peterborough with Dr. Hasting's department in Toronto to learn if any of Toronto's rejects are sending milk to Peterborough.

Every decent man in the milk business, and the vast majority are decent, will honestly support every effort to have milk sold as it really is, and ought to be, in the cheapest and best of all foods.

Yours truly,

G. T. G.

erican Ambulance Passes From French Control After Three Years Of Great Work

after To Be Continued Under American Army and Red ross—Affecting Scenes Marked Ceremonies Attending Change in Large Ward Where French Officials Handed Over Duties to Their Successors

PARIS, July 25.—The work of the American Ambulance at Neuilly was ially terminated this week by Laurance Benet, president of the committ Mr. Justin Godart simultaneously relinquished the claim on the am ce in behalf of the French government and offered thanks for the fficent monument of American love and sympathy.

There were few dry eyes in the gathering when Mr. Godart, declaring the ambulance no longer existed, kissed Mr. Benet on both cheeks. Mr. Benet said they met, profoundly moved by a conflict of emotions. y were filled with sadness over the disappearanle of a name beloved by nd filled with pride at the accomplishment of the task of the American bulance, born on the morrow of the declaration of war in sympathy with ce and out of admiration for the French, whose ancestors assured Am n liberty and independence.

For a few days less than three years the ambulance had tended valiantly French wounded. Now its task was ended. The work henceforth would ontinued under the American army and the Red Cross.

"When the victorious allied armies pass beneath the Arc de Triomphe," aid, "perhaps the world will recall that the ambulance during long, dark ths flew the French and American flags, thus proclaiming the union of reat and free peoples."

Mr. Godart, deeply moved, replied saying that on the occasion of ter ting such excellent work he had one request to make of the ambulance brought the first relief of suffering in France. He requested that the and Stripes which flew over the door of the ambulance on August 4, the date of the commencement of the work, be presented to the French ter of War as a souvenir of glorious work that never will be forgot for veterans will tell their grandchildren how the ambulance tended in the great war.

The farewell ceremony was held in the large ward. The American Am dor, General Polin and Colonel Bradley were among those present, Major George P. Peed, new chief administrator under the American y; C. W. Dubouchet, retiring chief surgeon; Dr. Hutchinson, who be s chief surgeon, and 170 ambulance drivers, who cheered Mr. Benet Dr. Debouchet. The nurses wept as they said goodby to Dr. Debouch nd the staff presented to him a silver loving cup.

RS. MORRIS PROMINENT IN THE DISCUSSION

TORONTO, July 24.—That the leak the breadpan of both Canada and ain be stopped by the Govern t was the demand which gave an pected turn to the discussion by the Women's Convention for prevention of food wastage, in esters' Hall this morning.

Following an intensely interesting er on food values and the sub tion of foods for the well being the growing child as well as the at the front, by Miss Margaret ridson, and a valuable paper by Ethel Chapman on the preser ion of our perishable foodstuffs, meeting, under the leadership of Torrington, was thrown open discussion. Speakers bobbed up over the crowded hall, two and e at a time, and the maintaining order required muct tact and honour on the part of all pre nt.

"Is it reasonable to ask the women Canada to practise any more omy in their homes, where the rage woman has always practised economy?" asked Mrs. Chas. Crowe, of Guelph, "until this other terrible waste is stopped, the waste of the millions of bushels of grain being used in the breweries and distilleries.

"We are told that spirits are needed in the manufacture of alcohol. We have 20 million gallons of spirits in bond that can be used for this purpose and release hot hthe grain and the men employed in making the liquor. This is the leakage in the breadpan, and it is for the Government to deal with this side of the food question fearlessly and quickly at home while we do our share of food conservation."

"I wish to support very strongly what Mrs. Crowe has said," declared Mrs. Reid, of Tillsonburg, coming to the platform. "We heard grand messages last night from Mr. Hanna and from the Mother Country. We are not supposed to oritioize our mothers, but this matter has been mentioned so frequently that we may be permitted to send a message to our mother. The waste in Canada is nothing in comparison. Almost the entire Dominion is now white, the whole of Russia is white, France is streaked with white—and the British Isles are black.

GIVE THEM BREAD — DENY BEER.

"There are over there 156,000,000 gallons of spirits, and that should suffice for their munitions. They are using 180 tons of grain and 100 tons of sugar a day for the making of liquor. The total destruction equals six quarter loaves of bread a day. They say they must have beer. We say they must not have beer—they must have bread."

Mrs. Morris, of Peterborough, supported both speakers and suggested that a message of protest be forwarded from the convention to the Government, and then that the matter be considered closed while the women further discussed immediate action on their own part in the conservation of food.

"This will not be the first nor the last protest to be sent," she said, "but it will be a long time before action is taken. But we must act immediately in our own sphere. We must take back messages to the people at home."

Mrs. Malcolmson, of St. Catharines brought a strong message from the women of that city asking that the Government supplement the voluntary sacrifices being made by the women of their husbands', sons, time, and comfort by enforcing compulsory sacrifice on the part of those who have as yet suffered nothing.

"We are prepared to follow Mr. Hanna to the last ditch," said Mrs. Crowe, "if we are assured that the Government he represents will do the right thing for us."

C. A. LUBIN WAS AT KINGSTON

G. A. Lubin did not head for his native province when he left Peterborough on Sunday, July 15th. According to a cheque which has been received at the Standard Bank, Lindsay, the much-wanted young man drifted towards Kingston and plied his cheque scheme with some success. He took the name of "J. A. Webber," and passed a cheque on Willie Lee, of the New England Restaurant, (formerly of Lindsay) for the sum of $5.00. This was in payment for meals. The cheque is under date of July 20th, and account number is 224, the same account number given Lubin in Lindsay.

Lubin is evidently carrying on a systematic campaign throughout the country, but the authorities expect he will strike a snag ere long.

PETERBORO' MAN WAS INJURED

Elmer Herron, of Peterborough was slightly injured on the leg as a result of the explosion that occurred at the Lindsay arsenal on Monday evening and which resulted in the death of William Brown of Keene.

QUEEN'S PARK STAFF TO HELP THE FARMERS

Premier Hearst Issues Instructions That Men Will Get Extra Holidays

Premier Hearst has issued instructions to all Deputy Ministers of departments that they may allow members of their departmental staffs who can be spared and desire to go on Ontario farms to assist in the harvesting of this year's crop, five weeks' holidays, instead of the customary three weeks which civil servants receive. Of these five weeks, three must be spent employed on a farm.

In the case of civil servants having had their holiday they may be allowed two weeks additional absence from their departments providing during these two weeks they work on a farm. Civil servants will receive pay for their service from the farmer in addition to the Government pay during the time they are employed on agricultural work. It is thought that about 200 male members of civil service will take advantage of the offer.

Registration of civil servants began yesterday afternoon at offices of Dr. Riddell, Trades and Labour Branch. The first civil servant to register to go on a farm was Arthur Sedgwick of the Highways Department. He is married, with three dependents.

Hon. W. G. Hanna, Food Controller, attended for an hour a meeting of the Ontario Cabinet yesterday and afterwards lunched with the Minister. It is understood plans for co-operation of the Ontario Government with food control campaigns were under discussion, but no statement was given out.

At four o'clock yesterday Albert Greig, Deputy Minister of Lands, Forests and Mines, called his staff into conference and appealed to them to go on the farms during a part of their vacation. A liberal response was made. In other departments the same example will be followed.

A Fair Method Of Testing Cows

Recently three cows that stood side by side were tested for nine consecutive milkings. The first cow had an average test of 3.7 per cent. of fat, the maximum and minimum tests being 2.9 and 5.5.

The second cow had an average for the nine tests of 4.2, with maximum and minimum tests of 2.4 and 5.4. The average test for the third cow was 2.6, with extremes of 2.0 and 4.0.

Hence it is evident that the laudable desire to know what a certain cow's milk tests for fat may be defeated entirely if only one sample is run through the machine.

In the light of the examples given above, as well as of hundreds of other instances on record, it is safe to conclude that a fair method is to test a composite sample of five or six milkings taken at intervals when the cow is in normal condition. This plan has given good results in the cow-testing work of the dairy division, Ottawa.

SIR CLIFFORD SIFTON'S APPEAL FOR WIN-THE-WAR GOVERNMENT

Ottawa. — Sir Clifford Sifton, who has for a considerable time past been quietly working behind the scenes at Ottawa, to bring about some form of union or coalition government on a "win-the-war" platform, is out with an open letter to Senator Bostock, Liberal leader in the Senate. Sir Clifford apparently thinks it is not yet too late to effect a union government administered on non-party lines, which could at once appeal to the people for a mandate, and which he thinks should be supported "by every element in the population that is loyal to the cause."

The ex-Minister of the Interior does not deal with the practical difficulties in the way of carrying out his proposal, nor does he deal at all with the problem of endeavoring to prevent the serious conditions which would arise from ignoring Quebec entirely in his union government proposals, or from attempting to carry on without representation from that province, and to enforce measures to which the province will not consent. His letter is in essence a call to English speaking Liberals to divorce themselves from Sir Wilfrid Laurier, who, he intimates, is dominated by the anti-war party of Quebec.

The letter to Senator Bostock is as follows:

Ottawa, Ont., July 23, 1917.

Hon. Hewitt Bostock, the Senate, Ottawa, Ont.:

My Dear Bostock,—Will you permit an onlooker to respectfully express his views upon the present grave crisis in the affairs of Canada? As the leader of the Liberal party in the Senate you will shortly be called upon to deal with the military service bill. You and your colleagues will be faced with a grave responsibility.

The world is in the final stages of a death-grapple. No such dire and fearful tragedy has ever before occurred in the known history of mankind. The forces of tyranny and reaction throughout the world have rallied for a last desperate struggle. The fate of liberty, human rights and free modern civilisation are at stake.

The issue is still undecided, and hangs in the balance. We have eighty thousand men in the fighting line. It is not more than our share. Their numbers are being daily diminished by death and the casualties of war. They are driven to the utmost of their physical powers by lack of reserves. Our reinforcements are almost exhausted.

I am confident that I voice the sentiments of many thousands of Canadians when I say that at this supreme moment we care nothing for Borden or Laurier, Conservatism or Liberalism. The overwhelming importance of the crisis absolutely obliterates all considerations of persons or parties. The only thing that matters is:

(1) To put every possible ounce of force into our striking power with men, guns and munitions, in order to help the allies to win the victory for liberty.

(2) To stand by our men at the front, and give them abundant reinforcements and reserves to admit of rest and recuperation.

(3) To maintain the honor of Canada and redeem our pledge to see the war through to the limit of our capacity.

In common with many others, I had hoped that Sir Wilfrid Laurier, if he could not join a union government, would agree to an extension of the life of Parliament so as to permit the Borden government to get on with its war policy. To the profound regret of many thousands of his best friends he has decided upon another course. I have no criticism to offer upon his course, nor anything except respectful sympathy for the difficulties of his position. The facts, however, must be squarely faced.

The meaning of Sir Wilfrid's attitude and that of his principal supporters in Quebec, is that they have determined to force an election on the single issue of conscription. Read the speeches which are daily being delivered and you find that their policy in effect is:

(1) No conscription.

(2) No more men. No more money.

If Sir Wilfrid is returned to power in the approaching election, two-thirds of his followers in Parliament will be pledged to the hilt against conscription, and pledged to the hilt against any but a perfunctory and ineffective participation in the war. Then:

1—There will be no conscription in Quebec.

2—There will be no recruiting in Quebec.

3—Under the circumstances it will be obviously impossible to raise troops in the other portions of Canada.

Imagine a Laurier government trying to raise troops in the other provinces, while Quebec scornfully refuses either to submit to conscription or to recruit.

4—Our regiments at the front will be left stranded, and will dwindle and disappear as an effective fighting force.

The predominating and controlling element behind Sir Wilfrid Laurier will not allow him to prosecute the war. No one who has the slightest experience of parliamentary government in Canada can honestly gainsay this conclusion.

It is said that a great effort is to be made to unite behind a solid Quebec all the elements in the population who are hostile or lukewarm in regard to the war, together with certain of the larger business interests, who feel that conscription will interfere with their operations. Thus a determined effort is to be made to return Sir Wilfrid to power.

What will be the result of this effort if it succeeds? How is the war to be carried on with vigor by a parliamentary party which is controlled by a hostile majority?

To ask these questions is to answer them. With Sir Wilfrid in power the anti-war party of Quebec will dictate his policy. It is dictating his policy now.

It is said that the government has made many mistakes. Probably it has. All the other war governments made mistakes. To err is human. It is said that more skilful piloting would have avoided this crisis. Perhaps it would. It is hard to say. On the other hand it is alleged that Sir Wilfrid Laurier, had he chosen to do so, when applied to, could have found a way out of the difficulty. It may be so. It is easy to criticize.

What is certain is that none of these things matter now. We have to face facts, not theories. The issue is simple. Either:

(1) We put our whole strength into the war, or,

(2) We abandon our men at the front and dishonor our solemn obligation.

I will go further. The decision of this issue will determine, once for all, whether Canada is a nation, dominated and held together by a national will, and a national sense of honor, or is a helpless aggregation of sectional communities, held together only by time-serving consideration of sectional interest.

If anything in this troubled world can be absolutely clear it is clear today that we can grapple with this situation in one way, and in one way only, by the formation of a Union War Government, administered on non-partisan lines which will straightway appeal for a mandate to the people of Canada, and can consistently be supported by every element in the population that is loyal to the cause.

Germany is fighting desperately to wear out the fortitude of her opponents. If she succeeds the peace will be inconclusive. It will be no peace for us, but the beginning of an intolerable strain of constant preparedness for war.

We are not fighting for sentiment, for England, for Imperialism; we are fighting for the rights of ourselves, and our children to live as a free community.

Shall Canada be the first of all the allied nations to slink from the field? Let us realise the position now. It will be no use to wake up when it is too late.

Believe me,

Yours faithfully,

(Signed) Clifford Sifton.

MINISTERS OF GOSPEL PUT TANLAC TO TEST

Well Known Ministers of the United States Come Out Openly and Fearlessly and Tell What They Know to Be the Truth About the Medicine That Has Helped Them.

RARELY will a minister of the Gospel endorse a proprietary medicine. The preacher's high calling, the influence he commands puts a grave responsibility on his every word. He will not jeopardize his reputation by commending a thing without first assuring himself it is all right. His word carries as much weight in the home, on the street, or in the public prints as in the pulpit.

When ministers of some of the greatest communions in the land endorse Tanlac their words carry conviction. They have put Tanlac to the test of personal service and have not found it wanting.

The proprietors of Tanlac have received countless testimonials from people in every walk of life, earnestly commending it. Among them are a number from prominent ministers of various churches. A few of these are printed below.

Rev. W. C. Norton is pastor of the Wesley Memorial church of Jacksonville, Fla. He says: "I suffered from chronic indigestion for years. I seldom slept well and had severe headaches. Since taking Tanlac I feel as well as ever I did—sleep splendidly and eat anything I want. Tanlac has restored my health and I feel it my duty to recommend it."

Rev. A. H. Sykes, pastor of Watkins Park Presbyterian church, Nashville, Tenn., says: "Mrs. Sykes suffered from stomach and kidney troubles and a nervous breakdown. Tanlac restored her health—she is gaining strength and flesh rapidly—her full restoration is but a question of time."

Rev. E. G. Butler, pastor of Central Baptist Church, Muskogee, Okla., says: "I had attacks of acute indigestion. Results from taking Tanlac have been most satisfactory — am glad to recommend it as the best medicine I have ever tried."

Rev. F. M. Winburn, Methodist, San Antonio, Tex., says: "I had no appetite — suffered from weakness, and general debility—could not work without quickly tiring. Found Tanlac just what my system needed. I consider Tanlac a good medicine to build up run-down systems."

Rev. R. J. Taylor, pastor St. Pleasant Baptist Church, Franklin, Tex., says: "Grippe left me in very bad shape—bad indigestion, nervous headaches—could not sleep well. Tanlac gave me a good appetite, strengthened my nerves, I sleep well as ever—have gained five pounds."

Rev. A. L. Tull, Methodist, Atlanta, Ga., says: "My granddaughter was a nervous wreck from indigestion. Tanlac gave her an appetite—she can eat anything. She is on the road to recovery."

Rev. Jas. H. New, Baptist, Clarkston, Ga., says: My wife had severe cramps, headaches, was very nervous, badly run down, weak and thin. Tanlac caused her troubles to disappear—she never complains now."

Rev. A. J. Vallery, former superintendent Bethany Home, Monroe, La., now of Memphis, Tenn., says: "Three years ago I had a general breakdown with indigestion—had rheumatic pains in legs. Since taking Tanlac am relieved of indigestion—rheumatic pains have stopped—feel like a new man. I give Tanlac my unqualified endorsement."

Rev. John M. Sims, Baptist, Atlanta, Ga., says: "I suffered from nervous indigestion and inactive liver --- digestion badly impaired—Tanlac corrected these troubles entirely—gained ten pounds taking two bottles."

Rev. W. T. Roby, Pastor West Lonsdale Methodist church, Knoxville, Tenn., testifies from personal experience as to the great benefit he derived from taking Tanlac for disordered stomach.

No greater praise can be given a remedy than the unsolicited testimony of men whose lives are devoted to the betterment of their fellow men. Their integrity cannot be doubted. They serve their calling often at great personal sacrifice. Tanlac has helped them—they say so because they want to do you good.

Tanlac is sold in Peterborough by the Warne Drug Co.

DRIED FRUIT CARGO ORDERED RELEASED

LONDON, July 25. — Sir Samuel Evans, president of the British Prize Court, yesterday decided that the 1,800 tons of dried fruits from New York and San Francisco seized on the steamships San Francisco and Pacific should be released to the Swedish Commission to which the cargoes were consigned. The cargoes were consigned to the Swedish Victualling Commission a Government department, but it was alleged by the British Attorney-General, who asked for the condemnation of the cargoes, that they were intended for export to Germany.

PETERBOROUGH MEN SIGN CALL FOR BIG WIN-THE-WAR CONVENTION

A call for the Win-the-war Convention, issued last night, bears the signatures of over 125 of Ontario's most prominent citizens. In a footnote the Executive explains that owing to the need for haste, many persons could not be reached, especially in the more distant parts of the Province. "We can count on their help and support," adds the note.

OBJECT OF CONVENTION

The objects of the organization, as will be laid before the convention when it meets August 2nd and 3rd, are fourfold:

(1) That Canada shall dedicate all her resources of men and means to the winning of the war.

(2) That if we are to justify our national existence, to succor our living and be worthy of our dead, conscriptive measures be immediately adopted and enforced to maintain the strength of our forces at the front and to discharge our full duty in the existing emergency.

(3) That a national non-partisan Government be established for the vigorous prosecution of the war.

(4) That all patriotic elements in the country which place winning of the war above all other considerations be united, to the end that their strength may be made effective to overcome selfishness and indifference, and that the people of Canada may be dedicated anew to their high destiny of service in the war.

"Deeming it essential for the welfare of Canada," the call concludes, "that all citizens of Ontario who share these beliefs shall have an opportunity of expressing their adherence of these principles and of insuring their enforcement, we, therefore, invite all public-spirited citizens of whatever political faith to attend an Ontario convention in Toronto.

Mr. John M. Godfrey is the Chairman of the Win-the-war Convention, and Mr. Henry W. King Recording Secretary. Citizens desiring to be enrolled for this convention should send in their names.

Peterborough names signed to the call include J. A. Aylmer, W. H. Dunsford, R. B. Rogers, Ryerson Ritchie, J. C. Shook and Jos. Wearing.

NO LOCAL NAMES

Mentioned for Senator Vacancies to Be Filled in the Senate Likely to Go to Setting Members Elsewhere.

OTTAWA, July 24.—It is expected that the Senatorial vacancies will be filled almost immediately in order to insure a sufficient Government majority in the Senate so that there will be no doubt as to the safe passage of the military service bill through the upper House. It is reported to-night in Conservative circles that five Ontario Conservative M.P.'s may be given the coveted positions for safety and honour free from the risk and labour of the coming election campaign. They are: Messrs. Blain of Peel, Bennett of East Simcoe, Fisher of Brant, Claude Macdonell of South Toronto, and Carrick of Rainy River. The Manitoba vacancy is likely to go to Mr. L. McMeans, K.C., of Winnipeg.

Milk and eggs are both muscle builders.

The Lindsay Town Wharf Is A Danger Trap

Attention is again directed to the dangerous condition of the town wharf. Monday night hundreds of visitors from Peterborough in leaving the Stoney Lake had to pick their way over broken planks, and many were the unfavourable comments.

Later in the evening when the wharf was crowded with the townspeople taking in the moonlight many narrow escapes resulted, and it is remarkable that someone was not seriously injured.

The wharf is government property and it is up to the Department of Railways and Canals to repair the structure. It is not ignorant of the existing conditions and the delay in undertaking the work is inexcusable.—Lindsay Post.

Germany To Lose Source Of Supply

Civilians Depended on Americans Exports.

LONDON, July 25. — That high German command has based its calculations on food supplies which America has been sending to neutrals because known according to the Daily Mail, through the famous speech of Herr Erzberger, head of the Catholic party in the Reichstag, made before a secret session of that body. The newspapers referred to this address as a "bomb shell." Herr Erzberger remarked that although America's entry into the war was of little military value it was important owing to the extent to which Germany was dependent on the neutrals for food and other supplies.

He said that America had decreed that she would not permit exports to neutrals as long as these neutrals exported to Germany. Consequently Herr Erzberger said, Germany would very shortly lose its source of supply. The terrible fact he said, had to be faced that the military authorities had entirely figured on these supplies and that nobody in authority could find an answer or give any idea from where their supplies were to come.

FIVE-MILE DRY ZONE AT MILITARY CAMPS

WASHINGTON, July 25. — Establishment of a five-mile "dry zone" around all military camps has been ordered by President Wilson.

At the same time the president, under authority granted by Congress in the army bill, prohibited the keeping of "houses of ill fame, brothels, or bawdry houses," within five miles of any military camp, station, fort, post, cantonment training or mobilization place.

How The Y.M.C.A. Sustains The High Resolve Of The Boys Who Undertook To Work On Farms

Visiting Supervisers Who Appoint Local Directors to Keep in Touch With the Boys—They Have Filled a Great Need and Are Making Good.

The boys engaged in farm work are making good and rendering a valuable service to the country at a time of extreme labour scarcity, according to Mr. H. W. Kingerley, Boys' Work Secretary of the National Council of the Y.M.C.A. who has been appointed visiting supervisor of all the Ontario counties east of Northumberland.

Five Divisions of Province.

The Province has been divided into five districts, in each of which a prominent Y.M.C.A. worker is keeping in touch with the boys and providing a service by which the boys are encouraged and helped in their work by the provision of social facilities that would be otherwise overlooked. It is recognised that these "'teen age" boys, leaving their city homes and spending three or four months on remote farms, are likely to become discouraged at times in spite of the high resolve with which the accepted challenge of this year's greater production campaign.

There are hundreds of these boys on Ontario farms who are actuated solely by patriotic motives. When the first call was made to them they were told that the task would not be a light one, but that the greatest reward was the knowledge that they had helped in the production of food at a time of the Empire's greatest need. And having enlisted in this enterprise, the Y.M.C.A. has followed the boys to the country for the purpose of maintaining their morale, to use a military term, and at the same time reminding them that their work is appreciated.

About a month ago, at the Nicholls val the boys of the Peterborough district assembled to receive the bronze medals that were offered in recognition of their co-operation, and in the fall it is expected that they will receive certificates personally signed by Premier Hearst. It is generally known that this movement among the boys was suggested by the Organization of Resources Committee, who transferred the details to the Y.M.C.A.

The Directors' Opportunity.

Mr. Kingerley meets prominent church workers in each district, each of whom is delegates as a "soldier of the soil" director. They are given identification cards and the names of boys working, for instance, in the Peterborough district, and the directors assume the maintenance of contact with a certain number of the boys. It is their duty to visit these young soldiers of the soil, to encourage them, to provide social intercourse for them where possible, and to help them in every manner possible. The scope of the director's work largely depends upon his personality, and it is Mr. Kingerley's aim to secure men who have retained the boy's outlook, and who will immediately help them.

Sterling Meeting Aug. 3rd.

The boys in the Sterling and Peterborough districts are reminded of a conference that has been arranged for them during the camp meetings of the Bay of Quinte Methodist conference on August 3rd. All the boys who can get away for that occasion are invited to attend and to bring their own luncheons.

Work a Success.

Mr. Kingerley unhesitatingly asserts that the boys have been a great aid, and are supplying a dire need. He accounts for this in the fact that the boys went out determined to persevere in their work from the high motive of patriotic duty, and not a few of them were accustomed to horses and hence had that previous preparation. He had covered a large section of Eastern Ontario, where he has found the scarcity of labour a big problem of the harvest, and in many cases farmers may not be able to harvest all their crops. It must be remembered that the boys who engaged with farmers are from fourteen to eighteen years old.

INDIANS ARE GOOD SCOUTS.

Those Serving With Canadians Have Rendered Valuable Service.

LONDON, July 24.—Canadian officers on leave here from the French front have informally recommended to American officials that American Indians be employed or enlisted for service with the expeditionary forces. Manitoba Indians with the Canadians have done excellent work at scouting in No Man's Land.

"These Indians with us," said a captain with the Canadian forces, "have performed services that never could have been performed by a white man. The Indian of North America has it in his bones to be a good fighter and a crafty one. We have them in nearly every regiment.

"Again and again during the past two years, I have seen them go out at night between the trenches and, without firing a shot, without making the slightest noise, or creating the slightest disturbance, come back leading half a dozen or so Germans, from whom much valuable information has been obtained."

THE MILITARY SERVICE ACT IS PASSED BY HOUSE OF COMMONS

that his sole motive was to do what he thought would be best towards helping Canada to give her best services to the allied cause, and any difference he had with his friends on his own side of the House or with those on the Government side was as to the wisest methods to be pursued to attain that end.

"I am in this war to the finish," he declared. "I am in this war as Australia is in it to-day. Australia voted against conscription, but she still is in the war. I respect the convictions of all men, and I hope my own convictions will be respected. From the beginning of the war up to the 18th of May last no man in any of the allied nations occupying a position similar to that which I occupy in the constitution of the Government, whether in England, France, New Zealand or South Africa, gave to the Government a more consistent support than I had given them up to that date. But when the conscripion measure was proposed I had to oppose it, because presented as it had been presented, and under the conditions which it had been placed before the country, it had been made an instrument of coercion."

Sir Wilfrid maintained that, all being considered, his policy of a referendum was the wisest and most constructive one. When the majority of the people had spoken, the country would again become unanimous. If conscription should be defeated, there would be a new duty cast upon the people. A new appeal would have to be made to the whole people of Canada to come forward with their best endeavours in the defence of a noble cause. But of one thing he was convinced, the majority must rule. His policy, he declared, he would be prepared to defend in Ontario as well as in Quebec.

Hon Arthur Meighen, the only speaker on the Government side, took up, somewhat briefly, the arguments advanced by Sir Wilfrid. On the question of disunion, feared by Sir Wilfrid as a result of the conscription measure, the Solicitor-General declared that were Sir Wilfrid himself to give the proper lead in his Province and explain the needs and meaning of the measure clearly to the people of Quebec there would be no real cleavage of opinion among the people of Canada and no resistance to the enforcement of the act. The blame for the present situation he placed on the shoulders of Sir Wilfrid himself. "For harmony in Canada," declared Mr. Meighen, "the price we must never pay is national dishonour."

Vote Same as on Second Reading.

The division bells ceased ringing at 5.20, and the vote was recorded at 5.32. There were no surprises, and no "switches" from the division on the second reading. The absentees were all conscriptionists, five Liberals and five Conservatives. The Liberals were: Messrs. Garman, Sinclair, Truax, Loggie and H. H. McLean. The Conservatives were: Messrs. Blondin, Osler, McLeod, Hepburn and Cockshutt.

The actual vote cast was as follows:

For the bill — Liberals — Messrs. Buchanan, Carvell, Champagne, Charlton, Clark (Red Deer), Cruise, Douglass, Graham, Guthrie, Knowles MacNutt, McCoig, Maclean (Halifax), McCraney, McMillan, Neabitt, Neely, Pardee, Ross, Thompson, Turriff, White (Victoria, Alta)—22.

Conservatives — Messrs. Ames, Armstrong (East Lambton), Armstrong, (North York), Arthurs, Ball, Bennett, (Calgary), Bennett (Simcoe) Best, Blain, Borden, Bowman, Boys, Brabason, Bradbury, Burnham, Burrell, Carrick, Clark (Bruce), Clarke (Wellington), Clements, Cochrane, Cromwell, Crothers, Currie, Doherty, Donaldson, Edwards, Elliott, Fisher, Foster, Fripp, Glass, Green, Hanna, Henderson, Hughes, Lalor, Lewis, Macdonell, Maclean, (East York), McCurdy, Maclean, (P.E.I.), Marshall, Meighen, Merner, Middlebro, Morphy, Morris, Morrison, Munson, Nicholson, Northrup, Paul, Rainville, Reid, Roche, Rogers, Schaffner Scott, Sevigny, Sexsmith, Shepherd, Smith, Stanfield, Steele, Stevens, Stewart (Hamilton), Stewart, (Lunenburg), Sutherland, Taylor, Thoburn, Thompson, Tremaine, Walker, Wallace, Webster, Weichel, White (Leeds) Wright—79.

Against the bill—Liberals—Messrs. Achim, Boivin, Bourassa, Boyer, Brouillard, Bureau, Cardin, Chisholm, Delisle, Demers, Devlin, Ethier, Fortier Gauthier, Gauvreau, Kyte, Lachance, Lanctot, Lapointe, (Kamouraska, Lapointe, of Montreal), Laurier, Lemieux, Macdonald, McCrae, McKenzie, Marcil, Marcile, Martin, Michaud, Molloy, Murphy, Oliver, Pacaud, Papineau, Power, Proulx, Seguin, Tobin, Turgeon, Verville—40.

Conservatives — Messrs. Barrette, Bellemare, Girard, Petanaude—4.

House Was Crowded.

There were practically no preliminaries, and the third reading of the military service bill was moved by the Premier shortly after prayers. There was another large attendance of members, and the galleries were again crwoded.

Farmer To Pay Hired Man's $200 Fine He Needs Him So Badly

A County Police Court case at Keene yesterday served to emphasize the shortage of farm labour, as it also disclosed some of the conditions upon which the harvesting of this year's crop precariously depends. Matthew Edwards, who was working for a farmer named Henderson, was fined $200 and costs by Magistrate Langley for having liquor in his possession in a place other than his dwelling, as set out in Clause 41 of the Act. He pleaded guilty, and unable to pay the fine was brought to the jail in Peterborough. But Henderson is too ill to carry on the farm work, and is prepared to pay Edwards' fine that he may be freed to carry on.

License Inspector Stewart stated that Henderson promised to forward the money during the week. In Edwards' case he had brought in liquor which he had consumed in neighbours' barns, and on two occasions was found intoxicated in stables.

MUST EXERCISE COAL ECONOMY

OTTAWA, July 5.—That Canadians must exercise all possible economy in use of coal is the word brought back from New York by C. A. Magrath, Dominion Food Controller, after a conference with Mr. McCue, of Pittsburg, in charge of coal shipments to Canada. On Friday Mr. Magrath will meet representatives of manufacturers in Toronto. He will subsequently visit other cities.

CAR CAUGHT FIRE YESTERDAY

Yesterday afternoon a car with a party from Buffalo which had motored from Port Hope to see the Lift Lock, caught fire about four o'clock opposite All Saints' Church on Rubidge Street. The party was stranded until eight o'clock. Considerable damage was done to the car, and a woman in the party lost a sum of paper money, destroyed by the fire.

TURBULENT SCENES.

In the United States Senate over the Food Control Bill.

Consumption as well as manufacture of spirits may be prohibited in the United States. There has been turbulent fighting in the United States Senate over the food control bill. Prohibition is steadily gaining ground all over the North American continent. Much of its progress is due to the war spirit of the people. That spirit in Canada has sent hundreds of thousands overseas and given the Dominion a high place amongst the nations of the world. If that place is to be maintained, there must be no relaxation of war temper. The National Service Board is urging national thrift and economy. They are essential if the men at the front are to be properly supported by the men and the women at home. Every dollar that can be spared in the Dominion is needed for war purposes. Invest your savings in War Saving Certificates and strengthen the financial line.

ALIEN WITH NO. 258 IS EAGER TO FIGHT

WASHINGTON, D.C., July 24.—A Spaniard of New Orleans, Samuel Sanjines, one of the thousands whose number (258) was the first to come out of the bowl in the army draft lottery, telegraphed to the Secretary of War:

"You drew my number first, and although I am not an American citizen, but a Spaniard, and have never applied for naturalization papers, to be the first one drawn I consider such an honour that I beg to offer you my services to fight the war for freedom and democracy thrust on this great nation."

Aliens who have not applied for first naturalisation papers are exempt from draft.

MARKET CLERK FISHER IS BRINGING IN THE HAY

Joined the Harvest Movement and is Working in Monaghan.

Mr. Walter Fisher, market clerk, has turned over the weigh scales to Mr. Robert Howden to become a harvester. He has gone out to the farm of his nephew, Chas. Fisher, of South Monaghan, and those who know Mr. Fisher realize that he is likely to deliver the work of two ordinary men. But in joining the thin ranks of the harvest helpers he has selected the first broiling weather of the year.

Hetty Green's Son Dodged Proposals

More than nine thousand women from all parts of the world had expressed a desire to become the wife of Edward Howland Robinson Green, who will be forty-nine years old in August, has a cork leg and a large part of the late Hetty Green's pot of gold. Then Mr. Green made a proposal and the other day, as reported in The Herald, Miss Mabel E. Harlow of Highland Park, Ill., forty-seven years old, became Mrs. Green.

Edward Howland Robinson Green, formerly America's most proposed-to bachelor, is a "regular fellow," despite his riches and the reputation his mother bore for stringiness. Six feet four, 250 pounds heavy, he is good natured and brimming with boundless enthusiasm. He is one of the favourite sons of Texas. He has a merry smile and a wholesome, roaring Texas laugh. And he's always in for fun.

BEGAN AS SECTION FOREMAN

Mr. Green began the career which made him one of America's most astute financiers with a bump. He had just finished college and had been admitted to the bar. When his mother, the late Hetty Green, inquired as to his plans the son announced he would like first to have a three months' vacation. Hetty Green placed $12,000 to her son's credit and for the next twelve weeks saw nothing of him. At the end of the twelve weeks Mr. Green returned broke.

Hetty Green didn't ask him what he wished to do this time. She handed him a commission as foreman of a section gang on a railroad up in Vermont. Edward Howland Robinson Green dropped from $4,000 a month spending money to $45 a month hard earned cash.

At the end of the first month he was $40 in debt. He wrote his mother for a remittance. She didn't remit. The youthful Green hitched his belt a notch tighter and buckled down to the $45. In three months he had paid off the $40 debt.

Step by Step he worked himself up in the railroad world. Finally he went out where the prairie dogs were thick and took charge of the down-at-the-heel Texas Midland. At that time the Texas Midland consisted of a couple of streaks of rust, a few baggage cars, a smoker and an engine. The crew had the habit of stopping the train between stations and letting the passengers inspect the scenery while the engineer and conductor rounded up a couple of rabbits for their suppers.

Green cut the weeds from between the ties and in a few years the Texas Midland was one of the model railroads of the country. He put Paris, Tex., on the baseball map by building up a baseball team and following it about in his private car, rooting for it in the bleachers. He became interested in real estate, cattle lands, wheat fields, a string of banks and cultivation of flowers from the financial side, livery stables and even ice cream parlors.

ALSO RAN FOR OFFICE.

He made money. Yet he had time for fishing and yachting and motoring. He took the first motor car into Texas. He became boss of the Republican party in Texas and ran for governor on that ticket. Texans liked Mr. Green enough to dub his "Colonel."

Mr. Green is interested in art, literature, music and the drama; he has a dinky wireless outfit he operates and has patented features of wireless telegraphy. He is much interested in aviation.

"Aviation is the most exciting and invigorating sport ever invented," he says. "The only danger is in falling, in which case it would be the same as any other long or hard fall."

Having proved his mettle, Hettie Green called him back to New York and gradually turned over her immense business to him. At her death he became practically her sole heir. In 1911 he announced that he would be married within a year. He had no bride in mind, but was going to find one.

THOSE VIOLET SCENTED NOTES

That's six years ago, and Mr. Green has just found the girl. But he has trunkfuls of violet scented notes from women of all ages who believed they could cheer his lonely life. They all declared they could love him. One from a young lady in England, who said she was no merry widow, but was unkissed at 22, is typical of the nine thousand proposals. It reads:

"I am a very clever pianist and can also sing very well, and by gentlemen admirers am considered extremely good looking. I am of a very affectionate nature and I can love very quickly. I am a shorthand typist."

At one time Mr. Green said the reason he had never married was because he had found it impossible to disguise himself and live incognito in order to win a bride for himself and not for his millions. He had a warm time in New York dodging ambitious mothers until he gave out this statement:

"Children are the last thing New York women want. None of them knows how to cook or sew. And, holy horrors! They would deny that their good old homely grandmothers knew how to wash clothes. If a fashionable New York woman went up Fifth avenue with a ring in her nose, the jewellers could not make nose rings fast enough to supply the demand. They want to peacock around to the theatres and restaurants so as to be seen by men not their husbands."

The indignant mothers tiltal their noses and left him alone. The lucky woman who should become Mrs. Edward Howland Robinson Green, he said at that time, would have to be "a woman and not a clothes horse."

Wins Victoria Cross For Daring, Kept Secret In Britain

Lieutenant Commander W. E. Sanders Honoured Just as Was Commander Campbell.

LONDON, July 25.—For the second time during the war the Victoria Cross has been awarded without any detailed account of the reason being published. The first instance was that of Commander Gordon Campbell, of the navy; the second instance is Lieutenan Commander W. E. Sanders, of the ant Commander W. E. Sanders, of the the honour to Lieutenant Comman er Sanders says merely: "In recognition of conspicuous gallantry, consummate coolness and skill in command of one of His Majesty's ships in action."

Commander Campbell actually was decorated by the King before the award of the Victoria Cross was published in the Official Gazette, and he also received the Distinguished Service Order in similar circumstances a short time earlier, and was specially promoted over the heads of about seven hundred officers. Current rumour ascribes his remarkable preferments to work against submarines.

The advancement of Lieutenant Commander Sanders has been even more remarkable. He was commissioned in the Naval Reserve as a sublieutenant a year ago. The rule is that an officer shall serve eight years as a lieutenant before further advancement, but he has risen by special dispensation from sub-lieutenant to lieutenant commander in less than a year.

Lieut. Commander Sanders is a native of New Zealand and is thirty years old. He was an officer of sailing ships from the age of nineteen and came to England early in 1916 with the idea of entering the navy. He obtained a commission after a slight delay.

"He is one of the most capable youngsters we have picked since the war began," said an officer at a naval base the other day. "Of course, we all know what he got the V.C. for, but it is of such a peculiar nature that nothing could possibly be published. You may properly say, however, that it was one of the most brilliant minor engagements of the war."

SWISS LABOURER'S EXPENSES

Minimum Cost of Living as Basis for Pension and Relief.

One of the largest ribbon manufacturers in Basle, employing about 1,000 men, women, and children, has worked out a table of minimum cost of living of labourer's families. This table, reports Consul Philip Holland, was made up for the purpose of knowing what pensions would have to be given the labourers if, in case of a shortage of raw materials, the factories were compelled to close.

The basis of cost arrived at has been accepted by the municipal authorities for use in the case of labourers compelled to seek governmental aid under a long suspension of work. It is generally understood that the funds to meet the actual needs of the labourers will be furnished by the employers and the Swiss Government. The total yearly outlay for a female worker is put down at $179.87, for a married couple $320.57, a couple with one child $357.63, a couple with two children of 6 and 8 years, $427.09, with three children 6, 8, and 10 years, $469.37, and four children 8, 12, 14 and 16 years $532.10. The largest item is that of food, with five meatless days weekly, $92.25 in the case of a woman, and $301.47 in the case of the family of six.

Osteopaths Are Given A Chance To Serve

Have Been Placed on Same Footing as Allopaths in United States Army Medical Work

The Osteopaths of the United States have been placed on the same footing as the Allopaths, in regard to military service, according to a message received yesterday in Toronto. In this connection the following editorial from the Philadelphia North American will be of interest:

"It is worth noting that the army and navy could not avail themselves of dental surgery, now considered of vital importance, until special legislation had been passed to make dentists eligible to enter the service. A similar bill, to make duly licensed osteopathic physicians eligible for examination is now before the House Committee on Military Affairs. In our judgment, it should be passed at the earliest possible moment.

"The first reason, and one which ought to disarm the opposition that may be expected from some of the leaders of the medical profession in their behalf of the tests to which applications now must submit. • • •

"And in seeking admission to the army and navy medical service they would stand or fall by their ability to pass the examinations set by the authorities for all applicants. This proposition seems unanswerable save by acceptance. But there are special reasons which give it force.

"To the popular view, perhaps, the work of the doctor in war suggests merely surgery—amputation, the treatment of wounds, the intricate and desperate operations, indicated by shattered bones and mangled tissues. But experience—in this war especially—shows that these constitute merely a part of the saving science. Experts in all branches of the art of healing are employed; specialists in treatment of the eye, the ear, the throat, the respiratory and digestive organs, nervous and mental ailments.

"Surgery is but the beginning of the work. From the abnormal life of the trenches, from the battlefields where men are subjected to assaults and torments of unimaginable fury, there is brought back human wreckage which can be restored to usefulness only by new devices of treatment applied for a prolonged period. Exposure, shell hock and the unendurable tension of facing appalling engines of death disable more men than do wounds; tens of thousands have come through such ordeals with hardly a visible injury, yet reduced to utter helplessness by the dislocation of their nervous systems and partial parlysis of some of the vital functions of the body.

"For such victims surgical and medical science confess they can do little, and they have been forced to devise various manipulative and mechanical methods of treatment to restore the disordered organisms to normality. • • •

"But a legal technicality prevents those who risk their lives in the country's defense from having ministratons which in many cases are urgently needed.

"The osteopathic profession asks nothing more than to be made eligible for the service upon the same terms, and under the same rigid tests, as are applied to the medical profession. It suggests no change of existing rules, no interference with established procedure. The proposal seems to us to be supported not only by consideration of justice, but by the imperative needs of the situation."

Has Made Many Sacrifices For Sake of Empire

July 25, 1917.

The Editor, Examiner:

Dear Sir,—Dr. Temperley Staton, the manager of the Whizz-Bang Troupe, which perform at the Grand Opera House on Friday next, is a very interesting character and worthy of note. When the war broke out the doctor with his four sons all joined up. During the year of 1916, Dr. Staton lost his two youngest sons at the Somme. The same year his three brothers were killed, one at Ypres and two at the Somme. His two eldest sons are now in France with a field ambulance. He now devotes his time and money to work with the soldiers, and is a great favourite as well as the most popular man at the Whitby Hospital. He has been asked to accept a commission, which will necessitate his return to France. A great loss will be felt if he leaves Whitby, as his place could not be filled.

Yours truly,
T. S. RUSSELL.

MILLIONS FOR AIRPLANES.

Uncle Sam No Piker When it Comes to Voting Money.

WASHINGTON, July 24.—The $640,000,000 airplane bill became a law to-day with President Wilson's signature. This immense appropriation is only the beginning of preparations for the campaign intended to overwhelm Germany from the air. More than 20,000 planes are to be built as a first increment, and there will be many thousands of aviators. The first task will be the instruction of the vast army of American fliers.

ing of them personally, although the fame of their deeds is world wide and imperishable. We suggest that the government do something to show those wonderful fellows how greatly we admire them, how dearly we love them—for their stoutness, resolution, and self sacrifice can we not do something to show how we admire those gallant heroes who came from over the sea, with their own free will, and gave up their all for king and country. They suggest a monument in Westminster Abbey in honour of those who fell in that awful charge.

Well I must ring off for this time, hoping all at home are well and happy, as this leaves me feeling fine. Kindest regards to all inquiring friends.

Care Army Post Office,

TORONTO, July 24.—Those of Canada's First Contingent men who are still fighting in France are not to receive a furlough. This is the information from Sir Edward Kemp received by Sergeant William Turley of the Great War Veteran's Association this morning.

The message states that after serious consideration was given, both at Ottawa and overseas to the proposal to grant a three months' furlough to Canadian soldiers, who have been in action continuously since the beginning of the struggle, it was decided that for the present at least, it would be impossible to spare from service any man who is in a fit condition physically to bear any part of the fighting.

Sergt. H. Ernie Saxby, son of Mr. Wm. Saxby, Smith street, has arrived home on a short leave after being overseas for a long period. Sergt. Saxby, whose brother, Pte. W. Saxby, arrived home from the front several weeks ago, enlisted in Toronto with the Canadian Mounted Rifles, and was afterwards attached to the General Headquarters in France.

Mrs. J. Jordan has received a message from Halifax stating that her husband, Pte. Jas. Jordan, has arrived in Canada and should be home in a few days.

WAR WILL END BEFORE LONG.

Such is the Opinion of Brig.-Gen. Seely, Former War Minister.

LONDON, July 24.—Brigadier-Gen. Seely, commanding the Canadian cavalry, is convalescing at his estate in the Isle of Wight after an accident at the front. Speaking at a local gathering, Gen. Seely disagreed with those who thought the war would last long and thought the cause of justice would soon be vindicated.

R. C. BRAUND'S FAMILY ARE MUSICIANS ALL

The published results of the mid-summer music examination directed attention to a family of exceptional talent in the honours won by the children of Mr. R. C. Braund. The following achievements are all sufficient testimony of the ability thus revealed by the Braund family. Miss Aileen Braund tried two examinations, one in harmony and the other, third piano, Toronto College of Music. In both she won first class honours, and when she has passed the orchestra accompaniment test, which she was yet to try, she will receive her A.T.C.M.

Miss Nelda Braund won first class honours in primary piano, and Master Grant, first class honours in senior first year piano. These children, for they are exceedingly youthful for John Allan, was successful in her jun- of Mrs. Greenslade.

Miss Lois Braund, a pupil of Mr. John Allan, was successfu lin her junior vocal examinations. Other members of the family reflect the musical tastes of their parents. Music is their common inheritance, and it occupies a first place in the family life and interests. There are two pianos in the Braund home, and the studies of the other children includes cornet and violin training, in which the same high standard of progress is shown, and also the same strain of natural ability.

A NEW POTATO PEST.
MARMORA, July 25.— Is there a new potato pest? Producers in the potato-growing section of Huntingdon township report that a new enemy to the potato has appeared which threatens the crop. The pest is described as a large black beetle, which delights to feed upon the new potatoes just formed at the root of the growing plants. The beetle, it is said, burrows into the potato hill until it reaches the root centre, and in that spot lays its eggs. Later the larvae feed upon the young potatoes, leaving nothing but an outer shell. It is stated that potato-growers have already met with considerable loss by the depredation of this pest.

Fifty Miners Meet Death

Explosion in No. 12 Colliery of Dominion Coal Company Causes Terrible Loss of Life

MANY OTHERS HURT

SYDNEY, N.S., July 25.—Fifty miners are dead and upwards of one hundred injured as a result of an explosion that occurred in No. 12 colliery of the Dominion Coal Co. at New Waterford this morning. The disaster is undoubtedly the worst in the history of mining in Cape Breton.

A miss shot is said to have been the cause of the explosion. Two hundred and sixty miners went into the pit this morning and at time of writing only one hundred have been rescued.

MRS. MORRIS IS APPOINTED

Will Represent Peterboro' in Food Conservation Effort

Mrs. W. R. Morris was chosen to represent Peterborough as one of the seven women from each of the three military districts of Ontario who were chosen to form an executive, and are to-day in consultation to work with the Government Conservation Committee. At this consultation the details of the work to be undertaken by this important movement will be settled.

Serious Campaign.

This convention is the beginning of a serious campaign in dealing with the food question. The gist of it is elementarily to get the country and city women better acquainted that they may combat and deal with the food problem together, and by doing so much profit will be gained by the movement.

Miss Davidson's Address.

An excellent address on the relative values of cereals was given before the convention by Miss Margaret Davidson, daughter of Mr. J. I. Davidson, George Street. Miss Davidson's connection with the Technical School, Toronto, where she is head of the domestic science department, puts her in a familiar footing with food values, and her speech proved most interesting and instructive.

Petition from Peterborough.

The petition from the Local Council of Women through the National Council was the first suggestion by which Food Controller Hanna was appointed. Mr. Hanna was present yesterday, and had a few pertinent questions about oleo margarine, which resulted in a lively discussion.

Save on Bacon and Wheat.

Too much cannot be said of the necessity for saving on bacon, wheat and beef, the waste of which will bring about a serious national crisis. This was impressed upon the convention in every speech, all of which were made by people who spoke with authority and foresight. Bacon has been used up to now as a general food and must now be used most judiciously, and practically reserved for invalids.

WEDDING BELLS

DAVIDSON—McWILLIAMS.
At St. Paul's church this afternoon at 3 o'clock a quiet but pretty wedding was solemnized, the Rev. Robert Pogue officiating, when Mary E., daughter of the late John A. McWilliams, 270 Rogers street, was united in matrimony to Mr. E. D. Davidson, of Alameda, Sask. The wedding service was largely attended by the friends of the bride, who was extremely popular in Ashburnham.

The bride, who was given away by her cousin, Mr. H. W. Morgan, was beautifully gowned in her travelling suit of blue silk poplin and wore a fawn tailored sailor hat. Immediately after the ceremony the happy couple drove to the 3.45 C.P.R. train and left for their new home in Alameda, Sask.

OBITUARY

The infant child of Mr. and Mrs. Henry, High street died last night. The funeral took place this afternoon to the Little Lake cemetery.

MRS. SAMUEL WHITE
Mrs. Samuel White, formerly of this city and who for the past two years has resided at the home of her daughter, Mrs. John Morrow, Boissedain, Man., died yesterday.

Mrs. White, whose maiden name was Harriet Melville is the mother of Mrs. E. B. Clegg of this city. She has been ill for some time, but on account of her advanced years, she being 79, small hope had been held out for her recovery and her death was not unexpected. The body is expected to arrive in the city on Friday evening and the funeral, the date of which will be announced later, will be held from Mrs. Clegg's home, 273 Charlotte street to the Little Lake cemetery.

The Storm Did Considerable Damage Near Millbrook

One Barn Destroyed and Several Hit—Five Sheep Killed—Hotel Damaged

MILLBROOK, July 25.—Mr. J. L. Fair's house was struck by lightning on Saturday. The lightning went in by the telephone wire and set fire to the curtains, door, lounge and carpet. It was noticed in time to save the other contents of the room and with great effort the house was saved from total destruction.

TOWN HALL STRUCK.
The Town Hall, Centreville was also struck but did not catch fire.

BARN DAMAGED.
A barn belonging to Delbert Sanderson was struck but not much damage was done.

HOTEL STRUCK.
Mr. Jas. Kinsman's hotel at Centreville was struck, but not much harm done.

BARN DESTROYED.
Mr. Jas. Campbell's barn was burned with its contents of oats, hay, etc.

CAR COLLIDED WITH A HORSE

MILLBROOK, July 25.—Mr. J. L. Byam, of Millbrook, had the misfortune to run into a horse and vehicle, driven by Rev. W. Higgs, on Monday night. The horse reared and fell on its side, but aside from a pair of broken shafts no other damage was done. Had the car been going fast a serious accident might have happened. The horse was slightly cut, but no serious results are expected. Mr. Byam brought the car to a stop as soon as possible.

SUB. LOSSES EXAGGERATED.

Bremen Paper Says They Exceed 700,000 tons per Month.

AMSTERDAM, July 24.—The Sunday edition of the Weser Zeitung of Bremen, under the captain "Only Patience," places the net monthly loss through the submarine operations, after deducting new construction, at 700,000 to 750,000 gross tons. It adds that England is already obliged to withdraw tonnage from the navy for mercantile purposes.

The "Londoner's Diary" in the London Standard says the June British losses by submarine fell below the record for April, which was something about 500,000 tons, and the first three weks of July suggest that sinkings for the whole month may be less than half the April total.

The Crops Are Late But Will Be Large

Bad Weather During Spring Kept Back Growth in Fields —Plenty of Vegetables, Say Reports Sent to the Molson's Bank.

CONDITIONS IMPROVED

The crop reports received at the head office of the Molsons Bank from branches west of New Brunswick, and dated July 14-16, are on the whole encouraging, though the Prairie Provinces seem a little behind in acreage of wheat this year, some sections having also suffered from frost, hail and drought. Oats and barley in the west have been largely sown, however, and promise well.

Ontario's grains, especially those Spring sown, are good in every section, but a decrease in acreage of Fall wheat in the province is due largely to the dry Fall of last year with resulting difficulty in preparing the land. Pastures have stood well up to date of the report, and not one case of any trouble in finding outside feeding for live stock is mentioned, though a slightly wet Spring in some sections kept cattle off the fields until late in the season, with good results.

Vegetable crops are good everywhere, as are roots for feed, though continued wet weather in Ontario and parts of Quebec have made planting of the latter crop somewhat late. The same trouble has been the cause of a want of promise in the corn crop, though warm weather such as now exists, is expected to do wonders toward filling the silos and corn cribs.

Small fruits are plentiful at all points reported, and British Columbia is given credit for a fruit crop that will be 25 per cent. in excess of last year's. In Eastern Canada, no more than a one-third crop of apples is looked for. The hay crop is late in all parts, but is more than usually heavy: from two to two and a half tons being estimated as the average for most districts.

Reports from most points in Ontario and Quebec make special mention of the fine appearance of the potato fields and there are many cases of greatly increased acreage of this crop. The acreage in beans is double that of last year, and though wet weather has interfered with their cultivation, hope is entertained that the crop will be greatly in excess of former years.

THE CANNNIG PROSPECTS.

In the Belleville district there is a splendid showing of vegetables for canning purposes, and in sections where tomatoes are grown largely for factory purposes, the quantity and quality of the crop are well up to the average. Only one report is made of flax, and that from Forest, Ont., where the plants are looking good. Field peas are mentioned in only a few cases, and it would seem that this crop is receiving but little attention this year, though where grown the crop is doing well.

THE LABOUR PROBLEM.

The labour question is not touched on except in a synopsis of reports from the western provinces, which says that there is a difference of opinion among the farmers as to the sufficiency of the supply of men for carrying on the work of harvesting. Farmers in most sections of the country are reported to be prosperous owing to good prices obtaining for all farm products, and though buying necessaries freely are practicing no extravagance.

Added to the farm crop report from Vancouver, B.C., is the information that the salmon run, which has just started on the Fraser River, and is in full progress on the Sweena River, is very satisfactory, the number of fish appearing in the Fraser being greater than at the same time four years ago when the big run occurred.

Do You Put Winning The War Ahead of Everything Else?

Are you willing to have party politics dropped until after the war has been won?

Do you believe that Canada must "carry on" to the end, and support civilization with men, money, munitions and food?

Ought every ability and activity of Canada to be devoted to winning the war?

Are you determined that honor, duty and patriotism shall prevail over selfishness and indifference?

Shall we support those sons, those brothers, those husbands, those fathers who are fighting for us at the front, and shall we send them the aid needed to save them from being killed alone and unaided?

Of course you answer YES. Then fill out and mail this coupon and get your friends to do the same.

Say Germans Feel The War Is Lost

Polish Refugees Predict Upheaval When Kaiser's Soldiers Go Hungry—Germany Lost More Than She Could Gain, People Believe, When America Was Forced to Fight.

U-BOAT CAMPAIGN BLAMED

NEW YORK, July 26.—Refugees from Poland who have first reached this city declare that underneath the surface in Germany there is a deep political unrest and a growing belief that the country lost more than she could gain by the unrestricted use of the submarine when she forced America into the war on the side of the Allies. Unlike those who preceded them, these refugees passed through Germany less than three weeks ago and seemed to agree that Germany believes the war is going against her, while some predict the real political unheaval will come when the soldiers are released from the rigid discipline of military duty and come to a gradual realization of what has been going on in internal affairs.

The refugees, 500 in number, were released from Ellis Island in groups as they passed the necessary inspection and from there were taken to the headquarters of the Hebrew Sheltering and Immigrant Aid Society, 229 East Broadway. The society is forwarding some to relatives in other parts of the country and will provide homes for those whose relatives cannot be found. Mendel Serottsky was a successful merchant until the Germans entered Wilna.

"From what I have seen of the Germans," he said through an interpreter, "they agree that the war is lost and their only hope is to save something out of the wreck. They fight on because the soldiers are held under strict discipline and because they are urged on by their patriotism. The food situation is troubling Germany more than anything else. German hopes were centred on Russia, believing they could conclude a separate peace with the Russians, obtain from them a food supply and then turn on the remaining enemies.

"The German soldiers are sorry that America is in the war, not because they fear the military power of America, but because America is in a position to shut off their supplies. The Germans do not hate America, and they did not want to fight her. There can't be a revolution when only the women and children and the men necessary for civil positions are at home. The soldiers have plenty to occupy them and besides the soldiers are well fed. There may be trouble when the soldiers go hungry."

LOOKING FOR HIS WIFE.

Chaim Berman, merchant and teacher of Grodno, Poland, has come to America in hope of finding his wife and children, from whom he became separated when the Germans entered his native place.

"The Germans left us only our clothes," he said. "They drove off the livestock and took possession of all the goods in the place. It is impossible to describe conditions in Grodno, where the people are starving and every bit of food is under Government control. For trivial violations of the military order Jews are beaten daily. Food prices are very high, and those who have money can eat; the rest must starve. For six months we could get no meat. Sugar, for example, is 70 cents a pound, and other things correspondingly as high."

Some refugees brought their food cards, and in some cases their allotment was an egg a month and a lump of sugar a day. Berman said that not so long ago he went through Bialastok and saw children on the streets crying and begging for food. When he returned those children were dead of hunger, and he saw some of their bodies. Mrs. Esther Eisenberg, who left Warsaw three weeks ago to join her husband in Chicago, said:

"The people in Warsaw are dying of hunger. The death rate is 500 a day there, and those who do not actually die of starvation are so weakened by lack of food that they fall victims to disease. Six months ago bread was 17 cents a pound. Now it is 35 cents. The fortunate get about four and a half pounds of bread every two weeks.

"The Germans are sick of war. It was bad news to the soldiers when they learned that American had gone to war. They did not think she would. Though there was strict censorship, the people learned that American troops had arrived in France. They do not know how many are there, and believe the number is insignificant. The soldiers are willing to lose if only they can have peace again."

Those who have just passed through Germany had no chance to see anything of that country. They were in closed cars for three days, with little to eat. When the train passed through Berlin the guards were doubled and an inspection made to make sure that communication with the outside was impossible. Soldiers were stationed inside the trains and there was a guard posted on the outside.

INCOME TAX BY FEDERAL GOVT. STARTS WITH 4 P.C. ON $2,000 SUPER-TAX FROM $6,000 UP

Sir Thomas White Introduces His Proposals—Married Men Are Exempt Up to $3,000 Income Per Year

OTTAWA, July 25.—The House went into committee of ways and means and Sir Thomas White made his statement on the income tax proposals.

He said the enactment of the Military Service Act would result in an increase in war expenditure. Provision was made in that act for the calling out of 100,000 more men. In view of this expenditure, and to maintain the credit of the Dominion it was necessary to adopt further taxation measures.

Apart from this necessity there had arisen in connection with the Military Service Act as a natural and just sentiment in the House and the country that those enjoying substantial incomes should substantially and directly contribute to the great war expenditures of the Dominion. In view of these considerations, he felt justified in laying before the House a proposal for a national measure of income taxation.

AN INNOVATION.

He said that the adoption of such a measure was a distinct innovation in federal fiscal legislation, as hitherto the Dominion revenues had been derive from customs, excise, postal dues and so on. The business profits war tax imposed since the outbreak of the war was direct taxation, but it was much narrower in its application than an income tax.

Direct taxation had been left to the provinces and municipalities, but the need had not come for the Dominion to adopt it.

Canada was a sparsely-settled country, and so the cost of administering an income tax would be very great. This was always a factor to be reckoned with in imposing a tax.

GRAVE CONDITIONS.

"Canada has been, and will continue to be, a country inviting immigration," he proceeded. "I have thought it desirable that Canada be not known outside as a country of heavy individual taxation. Another factor is that the people have been most generous in their patriotic contributions. However, we are faced with grave conditions, and an accelerated expenditure will be due to the measure of conscription we

CHAPTER XVIII.
THE TRUTH AT LAST.

Not often did Furneaux qualify an opinion by that dubious phrase, "I think," which, in its colloquial sense, implies that the thought contains a reservation as to possible error.

Winter looked anxious. Both he and his colleague knew well when to drop the good-natured banter they delighted in. They were face to face now with the issues of life and death, dark and sinister conditions, which had already destroyed one life, threatened another, and might envisage further horrors. Small wonder, then, if the Chief Inspector's usually cheerful face was clouded or that his hopes should be somewhat dashed when Furneaux seemed to lack the abounding confidence which was his most marked characteristic.

"You've got something, I see," he said, trying to speak encouragingly, and glancing at the bundle of clothing which Furneaux had wrapped in a newspaper before dropping from the bedroom window of Siddle's house.

"Yes, a lot. What to make of it is the puzzle. We either go ahead on the flimsiest of evidence or I carry out another housebreaking job this afternoon and restore things in statu quo. First, the bundle—an old overt-coating overcoat and a pair of frayed trousers which probably draped Owd Ben's ghost. They have been soaked in turpentine, which chemist, or no chemist, is still the best agent for removing stains. We'll put them under the glass after we have examined the book. Siddle keeps a sort of diary, a series of jumbled memoranda. If we can extract nutriment out of that we may have something tangible to go upon. Let's begin at the end.

Opening the leather-bound notebook, Furneaux stood with his back to the window. Winter, owing to his superior height, could look over the lesser man's shoulder. Many an occult document affecting the famous crimes and social or dynastic intrigues of the previous decade had these two examined in that way, the main advantage of scrutiny in common being that they could compare readings or suggested readings without loss of time, and with the original manuscripts before both pairs of eyes.

In the first instance, there were no dates—only scraps of sentences, or comments.

The concluding entry in the book was:

"A tactical error? Perhaps. Immovable."

Then, taking the order backward:

"Scout the very notion of such an infamy. You and every scandal-monger in C. may do your worst."

"Free to confess that events have opened my eyes to the truth, so not for the first time, out of evil comes good."

"A prig."

"Visit for such a purpose a piece of unheard of impudence."

These were all on one page.

"Quite clearly a précis of Grant's remarks, when Siddle called on Monday," said Winter.

At any other time, Furneaux would have waxed sarcastic. Now he merely nodded.

"Stops in a queer way," he muttered. "Not a word about the inquest or the missing bottles."

The preceding page held even more disjointed entries, which nevertheless, provided a fair synopsis of Doris's spirited words on the Sunday afternoon.

"Malice and ignorance."

"Patience because of years."

"Loyal comrade. Shall remain."

"Code."

"No difference in friendship."

"E. hopeless. Contempt."

"Skipping—good."

On the next page:

"Isidor G. Ingerman. Useful. Inquire."

"E.' boasts? Nonsensical, surely."

"Why has D. gone?"

Both men paused at that line.

"Detective?" suggested Winter.

"That's how I take it," agreed Furneaux.

Then came a sign: "Plus 10 per cent."

"Elkin's mixture was not 'as before.' It was fortified," grinned Furneaux. "That's the exact increase of nicotine. By the way, I have a sample. We can take care of him on that charge, without a shadow of a doubt."

Winter blew softly on the back of his friend's head.

"You're thorough, Charles, thorough!" he murmured. "It's a treat to work with you when you really get busy."

Furneaux ran his thumb across the end of several leaves.

"I can tell you now," he said, "that there is nothing of real value in the earlier notes. So far as I can judge they refer either to a sort of settlement with his wife or chance phrases used by Doris Martin which might imply that she was heart whole and fancy free. There is not a bally word dealing with the murder, or that can be twisted into the vaguest allusion to it. But here's a plan and section which have a sort of significance. I've seen the place, so recognised it, or thought that I did. We must check it, of course. Here you are! You know the footbridge across the river from Bush Walk?"

"Yes."

"The eastern end is supported on a hollow pier of masonry in which one might tog up unseen. These drawings would be useful as an Aide Memoire on a drak night. A flase step with the river in flood might be awkward."

"What's that on the opposite page?"

"I give it up—at present."

This somewhat rare display of modesty on Furneaux's part was readily understandable. A series of straight lines and angles conveyed very little hint of their purport; but Winter smiled behind his friend's back.

"I've been prowling about this wretched inn longer than you," he said. "Look outside, to the left."

"Don't need to now," cackled Furneaux. "It's the profile of a wall, gate and outhouse along which one could reach the window of the club-room. Would you mind stopping grinning like a Cheshire cat?"

"Anything else?"

"Yes, this one: 'S.M.? 1820.' That beats you, eh?"

"Dished completely."

"Doris Martin, as usual, supplies the answer. An old volume of the Sussex Miscellany, probably that for 1820, contains the full story of Owd Ben. I might have mentioned it to you, but focussed on current events. Siddle has it among his books, which by the way are made up largely of scientific and popular criminal records."

"Is that the lot?"

"I'm afraid so. Have a look."

"Just a minute. I want to think."

Winter turned and gazed through the open window. Seldom had a more gracious June decked England with garlands. The hour was then high noon, and a pastoral landscape was drowned in sunshine. The Chief Inspector cut the end off a cigar dreamily but with care.

"Breathore—perhaps," he muttered. "But we can't hang him yet, Charles. A couple of knots and a theory won't do for the Assizes. We haven't a solitary witness. Hardly a night but he goes home at 9.30. If only he had killed Grant! But — Adelaide Melhuish!"

In sheer despair he struck a match.

"Well, let's overhaul these duds," said Furneaux savagely. "I'll chance the dinner hour for the return visit. Steynholme folk eat at half past twelve to the tick, and you can hardly get up another horse show."

There was a knock at the door.

"Let me in, quick!" came Peters's voice, and the handle was tried forcibly.

"Go away! I'm busy!" cried Winter.

"This is urgent, devilish urgent!" said Peters.

Furneaux snatched up his notebook, and Winter tore off his coat, throwing it over the package which reposed in an arm-chair. Then the Chief Inspector unlocked the door, blocking the way aggressively.

"Now, I must say——" he began.

But Peters clutched his shoulder with a nervous hand.

"Siddle has just hurried up the street, and entered his shop," he hissed.

The journalist had not only kept his eyes open, but excelled in the art of putting two and two together, an arithmetical calculation which as applied to the affairs of life, is not so readily arrived at as many people imagine.

"Bunnoed! He's missed his keys!" shrilled Furneaux.

"Confound the man! He might at least have attended his mother's funeral!" stormed Winter, retrieving his coat.

Thus it happened that Furneaux was the first down the stairs though the three emerged from the door of the inn on each other's heels. A stout man, in all likelihood a farmer with horses for sale, was mounting the two steps which led to the entrance. His head was down, and his weight forward, so he successfully resisted Furneaux's impact, but Peters and Winter were irresistible, and he tumbled over with a muffled yell.

At that instant Siddle quitted his shop and headed straight for the post office. In his right hand he carried an automatic pistol. The street was wide. Furneaux absolutely fearless in the performance of his duty, ran in a curve so as to bar the chemist's path, and it was then that Siddle saw him. The man's face was terrible to behold. His eyes were rolling—his teeth gnashing; he had bitten his tongue and his cheeks, and his stertorous breathing ejected from his mouth foam tinged with blood.

"Ha!" he screamed in a falsetto of fury, "not yet, little man, not yet!"

With that he raised the pistol and fired pointblank at the detective. Furneaux ducked and seized a small stone, being otherwise quite unarmed. He threw it with unerring aim, and, as was determined subsequently, struck the hand holding the weapon. Possibly, almost by a miracle, the blow caused a faulty pressure, because the action jammed, though the pistol itself was most accurate, and deadly in its properties.

THE REPUTATION of Dr. Chase's Ointment as a cure for piles, or hemorrhoids, has been built up by one person telling another about the results obtained. In the club-room, at the business office, in factory, store or field the good word is passed along, until nearly everybody knows about Dr. Chase's Ointment as the standard treatment for itching, bleeding and protruding piles.

We are so certain that Dr. Chase's Ointment will prove effective in every case of piles that we shall gladly send you a sample box, free of charge, if you will enclose a two-cent stamp to pay postage and mention this paper. It will afford relief promptly, and just as certainly effect complete cure if used persistently.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

Two Scamps

How They Invaded a Woman's College.

By PAULINE D. EDWARDS

"I say, Tom," said Jim Ruggles, "what do you say to a visit to the C. A. C. W.?"

"What's the C. A. C. W.?"

"The College For the Amelioration of the Condition of Women."

"What kind of college do you call that?"

"The intention is to educate young women on such lines that they may take the places of men in the higher departments of life—that is, legislators, judges, governors and, possibly, president of the United States."

"You excite my curiosity. I would like to see what kind of material they are molding for the purpose."

"Oh, that isn't what I wish to go there for. I want to see a girl I am sweet on. She has turned me down since she got the feminine craze, and there's nothing for me to do except to beard the lioness in her den."

"But do they allow men visitors at the college?"

"Oh, I understand that the college doors haven't any more objection to men than to women; but, of course, no college for women permits the undergraduates to receive young men whenever they like. We had better go as inspectors of the institution with a view to writing it up, thus advertising it and inducing others to found colleges for a similar purpose. I will palm myself off as a magazine writer. You might tell them that you are principal of a young ladies' seminary and desire to educate your pupils to fill the most exalted positions."

"That's all very well. But do you suppose they're going to be fooled into thinking that a man of my age would be trusted with the education of young girls?"

"You can make up for any age you like. Forty will do. Your premature baldness will help, and you can paint a few crow's feet at the corners of your eyes."

"Won't they spot the paint?"

"Not if it is carefully done, and I propose to make the visit after dark."

A few days later William Hargrave Spencer, the magazine writer, received in reply to a note he had written to the president of the C. A. C. W. an invitation to visit that institution and to bring with him Bryant Wotherspoon for an inspection of the institution.

On a certain evening the two gentlemen, apparently between forty and fifty years of age, appeared at the house of the president of the college and were received by her with consideration, she being greatly interested in getting free advertising for the institution. They had prepared a number of questions, which they asked, and made notes of the replies. After exhausting the subject Tom said:

"As principal of a young ladies' seminary I have found it possible to put my school in a favorable light to visitors. On one occasion I turned a visitor over to a committee of the girls, and the visitor afterward told me of certain irregularities that needed to be corrected. Since then I have always turned visitors over to others. May I suggest, without my motive being misconstrued, that Mr. Spencer and I be permitted to be shown over your institution by one or two of your undergraduates?"

The president acquiesced, though not with a good grace in this, and two young ladies were assigned to the duty. One of them assumed the lead, acting as spokesman and giving a lecture as she passed along with the inspectors. She was not a beauty, but was admirably fitted for what she was doing. The other girl had evidently been selected at haphazard. Jim was busy concocting questions that she could not answer—nor could any one else, for that matter—with a view to getting rid of her. This put her in a bad humor, when Tom said to her:

"Have you an undergraduate of the name of Bertha Griswold in your institution?"

"We have."

"She is a graduate of my seminary."

"Would you like to see her?"

"I would."

The young lady went away to call Miss Griswold, and while she was gone there was an animated and hurried dialogue between Tom and the remaining girl. He explained the situation to her and told her that Miss Griswold and Jim had been spoons. Miss Wharton, the girl to whom Tom confessed, declared that she would not be a party to the deception, and the boys were fearful that they were on the eve of exposure, but when the girl who had left them returned with Miss Griswold Miss Wharton held her tongue. Miss Griswold recognized Jim the moment she saw him, but there was no disposition on her part to give him away.

"Laura," said the girl who had brought her, "I will turn these gentlemen over to you to be informed of anything they desire to know."

"I'll do what I can for them," was the demure reply.

The four who remained moved on for the inspection, Jim with Laura Griswold, Tom with Luella Wharton. Professors and undergraduates were there, and there was no opportunity for anything except the parts they were playing. Miss Wharton at first looked disgruntled at the part she was constrained to play, but a humorous remark on the part of Tom brought a smile to her face, and after that she came to enjoy the prank. As for Laura Griswold, she was disposed to be angry with her lover, but neither wished nor dared to expose him.

But there is nothing like daring to please a woman, and while Laura was explaining what the magazine writer and the principal of a young ladies' seminary came to see both girls were falling in with the spirit of the escapade.

"This room," said Miss Griswold, "is intended for the especial use of those undergraduates who are ambitious to sit on the bench."

"How about a sofa or easy chair?" asked Jim in a low voice.

"Wait. We'll come to that by and by," replied Laura under her breath.

"This room," continued Laura, "is occupied by a class that is studying the constitutional history of England."

She opened the door, and the young men were permitted to look in the room, where they saw a woman professor on a dais lecturing to a number of young women. Between the opening and the shutting of the door these words were heard:

"Up to the time of the accession of George IV. England had been a constitutional monarchy, the sovereign being usually a crackbrained man. Under the contemptible Georges it gradually changed into a virtual republic. But its most glorious half century was under the rule of that greatest of all its sovereigns, a woman, Victoria."

When the door was closed Tom suggested that "now England had got another George it had fallen into a relapse."

"Not a bit of it," retorted Laura Griswold. "Since Victoria there has been no need of a sovereign. Victoria taught the English people to govern themselves. That's something no man could do."

"Women are our natural governors," remarked Jim.

The party emerging on to the campus, Jim asked:

"What's that building with a dome on it?"

"That's the astronomical observatory."

"We must see that, of course," said Tom.

"The night being cloudy, no observations can be made. There's no one there to receive us," said Laura.

"Well, now," said Jim, "that's just the reason for our going there. I must have a look at Venus."

"Shut up, Jim," said Tom. "If any of the dons heard that remark the result would be serious."

The party were some time passing over the campus, for they were comparatively free from observation, but the boys hoped for greater privacy in the observatory, so they ascended to the dome. Laura turned on a light, thus giving a view of the telescope. There Jim and Laura went out on to the roof for a conference, leaving the other two where they were.

While the couples were separated Miss Euphemia Marston, the astronomer, seeing a light in the dome of the observatory, mounted the staircase leading to it, and, since a woman's shoes are not usually noisy, she was not heard by the inmates until she had entered the room. Tom and Luella fortunately were sitting in close communion behind the stone pier on which the telescope rested, and the lady did not see them. Going to a box of eyepieces, she was bending over it, unmindful of their presence. Tom gave a cough, and the professor, straightening up, looked around. Luella advanced and, somewhat ill at ease, told Miss Marston that she was showing the telescope to a visitor.

The lady received Tom with courtesy and entered into a long explanation of the different parts of the instrument.

Meanwhile Jim and Laura had heard the conversation in the dome and learned of the approach of the astronomer. The professor's presence, with Jim and Laura being out on the roof, was not without danger, and Laura did not know whether to put on a bold front and enter the dome or wait for the astronomer's withdrawal. Thinking that Miss Marston would not remain long, she adopted the latter course.

But the astronomer found Tom so appreciative of her explanation of the parts of the telescope and its general uses that she showed no disposition to leave. Then Laura and Tom were horrified to see a rift in the clouds and the moon appear. If the astronomer saw the moonlight she would lift the shutter of the dome and make observations.

"I have it," said Jim, and, taking off his coat, he held it against the only window in the dome that the moonlight would shine through.

But his game did not work. Suddenly the shutter was lifted and the dome began to turn.

"I'll have to go down from the outside," said Jim, and, finding a corner, by the help of a water spout and some intervening window ledges he reached the ground. Then Laura went into the dome.

When the party descended and had separated from the astronomer Jim joined them, and since it was getting late they felt constrained to return to the president's quarters. Jim, after thanking the head of the college for the attention he and his friend had been shown, wound up with a flourish in this statement:

"I am glad to say that the young ladies who have shown us over your institution have assured us that there is nothing in its appointments or management that can be improved upon. They are simply perfect."

The article Jim was to write never appeared. Both the men found wives in the girls who had been their guides.

Precedent Nobly Ignored.

Had no important step been taken by the leaders of the Revolution for which a precedent could not be discovered—no government established of which an exact model did not present itself—the people of the United States might at this moment have been numbered among the melancholy victims of misguided counsels, must at best have been laboring under the weight of some of those forms which have crushed the liberties of the rest of mankind. Happily for America—happily we trust for the whole human race—they pursued a new and more noble course.—James Madison.

When Seed Germinate.

The average time, under normal conditions, for seed to germinate is bean, five to ten days; beet, seven to ten; cabbage, five to ten; carrot, twelve to eighteen; cauliflower, five to ten; celery, ten to twenty; corn, five to eight; cucumber, five to ten; endive, five to ten; lettuce, six to eight; onion, seven to ten; pea, six to ten; parsnip, ten to twenty; pepper, nine to fourteen; radish, three to six; salsify, seven to twelve; tomato, six to twelve, and turnip, four to eight.

Enlist Your Kitchen in the War!

"The kitchen must help as well as the workshop and the trenches"
Mr. Lloyd George has said it!

What does he mean?

He means you must know and practice real thrift—make every dollar you spend on food serve your family and your country. Banish those things which are wasteful and substitute real foods.

Lovers of tea and coffee must realize that these beverages are in no sense of the word food, but merely pleasant, slightly stimulating drinks, which, by the way, are soaring in price!

Thrift Suggests Serving Cocoa

It is a scientific fact that a cup of Cowan's Perfection Brand Cocoa contains more actual food value than a cup of beef extract, bouillon, or chicken soup.

The death occurred in Toronto at the General Hospital on Monday last, of Mr. Everett Holcombe of town, age 22 years. He had been confined to his home for the past year suffering from rheumatism, it was thought but not improving but gradually becoming worse, they decided to go to Toronto and consult physician, Dr. Russell, who proposed having the X-ray put on to determine his trouble. An operation was performed on the bowels and he came through all right but afterward he was taken with typhoid fever and succumbed to that disease on Monday last. The remains were brought to Havelock by C.P.R. local Tuesday night and taken to his residence on Mathison street, where the funeral took place Thursday at 2 p.m., service being conducted by Rev. Chas. Adams of the Methodist church. From thence the remains were laid to rest at Maple Grove cemetery.

He leaves to mourn his loss his parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Holcombe, one sister, Mrs. (Dr.) McArthur of Markdale, and two brothers, Pte. Standley Holcombe, of Toronto, and Carman of town to whom the sincere sympathy of a host of friends is extended.

The many floral tributes received testify to the high esteem in which he was held. He was of a bright disposition and during all his illness he was always cheerful and greeted all with a smile. He tried so hard to live but when he found that God thought best to take him he was perfectly satisfied and died smiling at those near his bedside.

The death occurred on Thursday of Mrs. Wm. McMillan after only a few days' illness. She was in her 39th year and leaves her husband and one little girl to mourn her untimely loss. The funeral took place on Saturday, service being held at her late residence, Cordova Road, conducted by Rev. Chas. Adams of Methodist church of which deceased has been a staunch member and a great worker in all kinds of church work. The remains were laid to rest in the Maple Grove cemetery.

The sympathy of the whole community is extended to the husband and little daughter also to her mother, Mrs. James Henry who resides with her.

The marriage took place on Thursday at 6 o'clock at the home of the bride, Mr. and Mrs. John White, when their second daughter Jean was united in marriage to Mr. Russell Green also of town. The young couple were unattended, the ceremony being performed by the Rev. Jas. Skene, of the Presbyterian church. After a short wedding tour the young couple will reside in Havelock, on George street with the groom's mother. Mr. and Mrs. Green are popular young people of town and a host of friends join in wishing them much joy and happiness.

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Hogg, of Trenton are visiting friends in town and vicinity.

Miss Mable Beatty, of Toronto, is the guest of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. A. Beatty.

Mr. Firman Haig, of Toronto, is enjoying a holiday camping at Round Lake.

Miss Alice Bennington spent Saturday in Peterborough.

Mr. Darling of Peterborough spent Sunday with friends in town.

DYSENTERY —IS— DANGEROUS

Dysentry is one of the worst forms of bowel complaint. It comes on so suddenly, the pains in the bowels become intense, the discharges occur with great rapidity, and are very often accompanied by blood, and the action on the system so weakening that its termination often proves fatal.

When the bowels get loosened up in this way, and you wish to check the unnatural discharge without bringing on constipation, there is only one remedy to use, and that is Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry.

This remedy is not an experiment as it has been used in thousands of Canadian homes during the past 72 years.

Mrs. Albert Fearon, Bryant's Corner, N. B., writes: "I have used Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry for the past ten years, and I would not be without it in the house.

Last fall my little boy, three years old, took very bad with dysentery. After taking 3 or 4 doses of "Dr. Fowler's" he began to improve, and before he had used all the bottle he was entirely cured. I sincerely recommend it to all."

There are many cheap imitations of this sterling remedy on the market. Ask for Dr. Fowler's and see that you get the genuine when you ask for it. Price 35c. Put up only by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

Income Tax By Federal Govt.

have just passed. I believe it the will of the people that we continue to exert to the utmost our power to the end of attaining final and decisive victory. No other end will satisfy the high spirit and aspirations of the people of the Empire. No matter what the cost in manpower and treasure, I believe it is the public desire for us to persevere to the end. In view of these considerations the time has arrived when we must resort to this measure of direct taxation. I am sure the people will cheerfully accept the increased burden and sacrifice."

DEFINITION OF INCOME.

In reply to a question by Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux, Sir Thomas said the act would define income as the net profit of gain arising from any business in which any person was engaged, salary, or income from investments. The bill would apply to the incomes of the present calendar year, and provision would be made for a return by all subjects to the tax by February 28, 1918. There were a number of exemptions, mostly of those institutions which do not operate for gain.

EXEMPTIONS FOR FIRMS.

With regard to those firms and individuals paying the business profits war tax, they would not be called upon to pay income tax for an accounting period falling in the present year, unless the tax happened to be heavier that the business profits tax paid by them. Taxpayers would be entitled to deduct from the amounts payable as income tax the sums paid in 1917 and afterwards under the Special War Revenue Act of 1917.

In reply to a question by A. K. Maclean, Sir Thomas said that foreign corporations would be liable to pay in respect of their earnings upon their business in Canada. This referred to foreign corporations domiciled in foreign countries and doing business in Canada. It was not proposed to tax anyone except residents.

DOUBLE TAXATION.

E. M. Macdonald—"What about a British subject who lives outside Canada and derives an income from Canada?"

Sir Thomas replied that this raised the important point of double taxation, which had been much under discussion. "In my view," said Sir Thomas, "there should not be double taxation within the Empire."

Referring to the Dominion war loans having been issued free of any prospective income tax. Sir Thomas contended that had this not been done, the bonds could not have been disposed of with such success.

"There will be provision for assessment, appeal and collection," Sir Thomas proceeded, "I have placed no time limit upon this taxation measure, but I do suggest that after the war is over this taxation measure should be deliberately reviewed. I do not mean to say that it should be repeated, but I do believe that it should be deliberately reviewed."

The House then adjourned.

Russians Lose Great Stores Of Supplies

ONLY RAIDS REPORTED ON THE BRITISH FRONT

THE DEFEAT OF RUSSIANS IN GALICIA MEANS LOSS OF MUCH WAR MATERIAL

All the Wealth of Artillery and Military Supplies Concentrated By Allies For General Brusiloff's Great Offensive May Have Fallen Into Enemy Hands---Russian Women Give Up Their Lives on Battlefield.

A SUMMARY OF TO-DAY'S WAR CABLES

Special to The Examiner:

LONDON, July 26.—Russia's routed army in Galicia may have lost to the Germans all the wealth of artilery and military supplies which the Allies concentrated for General Brusiloff's great offensive. Even if Premier Kerensky and his Ministry, armed with unlimited powers, succeeds in stemming the rout, supplies of incalculable value have been lost.

Great fear was felt here to-day for the supplies of the Seventh and Eighth Russian armies, also on the Galician front.

One encouraging feature was the loyalty of Russian and Roumanian troops in the Southern Carpathians, where they have vigorously attacked the Teutonic forces. The fighting on the far northern front, around Vilna, however, has practically ceased.

(By William G. Shepherd, United Press Staff Correspondent.)

PETROGRAD, July 26.—Russian women have laid down their lives on the battlefield of democracy. Against the reports of the traitorous retreat of some of the Russian male divisions before the Austro-Germans, came the word to-day of how the women's "Legion of Death," on the Vilna front, fought and died in repulsing an enemy attack.

For the first time in the history of the great world war, casualty reports to-day chronicled the death and injury of women in the trenches. Five women of the "Legion of Death" were killed and wounded in their first engagement, in which they were called upon to resist with arms the invasion of their country. To-day Petrograd proudly realized the Russian women were capable of the supreme sacrifice of their lives for the new democracy. Great preparations were in progress here to-day, to care for the wounded girl soldiers. It was expected that those who could be moved would be brought here immediately from the front. Meantime reports from the front said those whom Teutonic bullets had struck were bearing their suffering with stoical fortitude.

LONDON, July 26. — The American sailing ship Augustus Welt was sunk June 24, the crew being saved, the Admiralty announced to-day.

The Augustus Welt was a four-masted wooden sailing ship of 222 tons.

PARIS, July 26.—No French ships were sunk by submarines in the week just past, an official statement to-day asserted. Six French vessels were unsuccessfully attacked.

LONDON, July 26.—A successful raid southeast of Armentieres during the night was all Field Marshal Haig had to report from the British front to-day. He said there was nothing further of special interest.

PARIS, July 26.—Suffering terrible losses, German troops nevertheless succeeded in a desperate attack last night in occupying part of first line French trenches east of Hurtebise to the ecuth of LaBoiselle. The official statement to-day declared the attack was in great force.

French forces pressed forward over unoccupied German trenches north of Auberville in the Champagne to-day, and met the enemy beyond, inflicting "appreciable losses." The enemy's retreat from the trenches was followed up in strong force by the French attackers.

The German assault was over approximately a three-mile front in the same sector which has been battered unceasingly and unavailingly by the Crown Prince for the last week. The French here hold the dominating positions on the Chemin Des Dames.

BANGKOK, Siam, July 26.—Siam seized all Austro-German steamers in her harbours to-day, the first step after her rupture with the Central Powers. Every ship was found damaged, mostly by internal explosions.

All male enemy aliens will be interned and all business firms in which Teutons were concerned will be closed up.

2,000 TEUTON PRISONERS TAKEN IN NEW DRIVE

PETROGRAD, July 26.—Two thousand Teutonic prisoners have been taken by Roumanian and Russian troops in their offensive in the Carpathians and Roumania, to-day's official statement asserted.

The Roumanians took 1,000 of the enemy, with 33 guns and 17 machine guns. The Russians captured the same number of troops and took 24 machine guns.

The Carpathians offensive of the Russo-Roumanian troops has now reached such a strength that it was hoped here the pressure there on the Teutonic lines would force some let-up in the drive against General Kerniloff's troops in the Stanislau-Tarnopol sector.

The Roumanian troops in particular have distinguished themselves in the fighting, performing prodigies of valor. Russian troops, thoroughly loyal, have ably aided in the drive.

ATHENS, July 26.—Premier Venizelos reappeared in Parliament to-day for the first time since the establishment of the new regime in Greece. The Premier personally conducted the convocation assembling th Chamber.

SAY TAX ON LARGE INCOMES IS TOO SMALL

OTTAWA, July 26.—That the tax on large incomes is too small and that tax on war profiteers is being lessened where it should be increased are two main lines of criticism at the capital against the income tax details.

FALL WHEAT RIPENING.

MILK SOURS EVERY DAY GOING TO CAMP BORDEN

Thermometer Runs Up to 104 in the Shade.

CAMP BORDEN, July 26.—With the thermometer running up to 104 in the shade to-day the provost-marshall says that if he could catch the weather man he would give him 28 days' detention. All the milk for the camp hospital for the last four days, seventy-five gallons, has been sour when it arrived.

WORK WAS BEGUN YESTERDAY AT CAMPBELLFORD

Will Require Six Months to Elevate the G. T. R. Bridge – Several Hundred Labourers From Quebec

MR. YARROW IN CHARGE

Mr. Thomas Yarrow, G.T.R. road superintendent began yesterday the preliminary work at Campbellford by which the railway bridge will be raised to permit boats to pass through the canal. This involves the straightening of the railway as it approaches the bridge which will actually be a new structure over the river at a short distance from the present bridge. The cement work will be done by contract but Mr. Yarrow will superintend the rest of the operations which will not likely be finished within six months. There is a great deal of grading necessary for the approaches to the new bridge, apart from the steel and concrete work. It is understood that the difficulty of obtaining labour will be overcome by bringing in men from Quebec.

Mine Disaster Victims Number At Least Sixty

A Number of Those Killed Were German and Austrian Prisoners

SYDNEY, N.S., July 26. —Thirty New Waterford homes are to-day plunged into grief as a result of yesterdays horrible disaster at No. 12 pit. Of the sixty who are known to have perished, thirty are natives of Cape Breton, 22 are Newfoundlanders, and ten foreigners. The majority of foreigners are Germans and Austrians brought to the colliers districts from the internment camps in Upper Canada and Amherst, N.S. Two of those whose deaths are reported were among the rescuers who worked so gallantly yesterday afternoon.

B. C. Fires Are Growing Worse

FERNIE, B.C., July 26.—Latest relayed messages announced that a forest fire was sweeping down the valley at alarming speed ,and that residents of the town of Corbin were beginning to vacate. Women and children are fleeing from McGillivray.

ECCLES WOULD NOT PRESS CHARGE

Charge Against William Faires Was Withdrawn

The charge against William Faires of assaulting Harold Eccles, has been withdrawn. Eccles, who has sufficiently recovered from his injuries to enable him to resume work, had no inclination to press the charge when the case was called in Police Court this morning. In the words of Eccles: "Both men were to blame." Faires claims that it was a firm stand-up fight in which Eccles took the count. Faires says he did not neglect Eccles after he fell and that all necessary steps were taken to look after the injured man until the doctor arrived.

TO-MORROW'S CONCERT BY THE WHIZZ BANG BOYS

Great interest is being taken in the appearance at the Grand Opera House to-morrow night of the Whizz Bang Boys, the returned soldiers from the Whitby Convalescent Hospital, who are billed to give an unusually attractive programme. The Whizz Bang Boys have all been overseas and done their bit, and are now helping to make things more pleasant for their comrades at Whitby by securing funds for amusements. There should be a big attendance.

Three Local Members Of Aero Club Committee Have Been Selected

Announcement in Examiner Last Night Has Aroused Much Interest and It is Expected That Peterboro' Will Supply a Number of Cadets For Royal Flying Corps--To-day's General Military News.

Great interest has been aroused by the announcement in the Examiner last night that the Aero Club of Canada had decided to establish a committee in Peterborough to assist in the selection of young men who desire to qualify for positions as flying officers in the Royal Flying Corps. Three well-known local men, Messrs. G. H. Logie, R. Denne and C. G. Graham have already consented to become members of the Peterborough Committee, and others will be added to the local board with which the Aero Club will co-operate in every way possible. Information as to the type of candidate desired and the qualifications required will be made in a day or two. The forming of a local committee will open the way for a number of Peterborough boys to enter this most attractive branch of the service.

Miss Grace Hartley has received the following letter from her brother, Pte. Stanley Hartley, formerly of the 93rd Battalion and now in France:

France, July 7th, 1917.

Dear Sister Grace,—I received two of your most welcome letters last night, which I was waiting for this last three weeks. I am glad somebody gave you two cents to buy some writing paper. The price of ink must have gone down, too. Oh well, anyway I am glad to hear, first of all that mother and father are keeping in good health and to learn that your friend is not seriously wounded. A trip to England will do him good. As these shells and other toys such as them are hard on your nerves. I will write Billy a letter to-morrow and give him your regards, as it only takes about three days to go to England. I see by the paper our modern city of Peterborough is growing greater every day. That new overhead bridge and the large Quaker Oats plant they are building will make quite an improvement on Peterborough. I expect, if ever I come back to Peterborough, I will have to have you take me around. I'll get lost with such a change. I see they are not sure of conscription in Canada yet. Well they will be later on I suppose. I expect in about five years from now we will need some reinforcements over here. That's about the way they are considering it now, but the first ten years of this war will be the worst. After that we will be kind of weak in the head and won't mind it so much. I am sorry to say we had one our best sergeants killed the other day also one private, and seven wounded. Old Frits got his Irish up and threw one of those 15-inch shells too close to us, and that was the result. One hit was Sapper Allen from Peterborough. He got a piece of shrapnel in his arm, not very serious. He transferred from the 93rd the same time as I did. We are having lovely weather over here now. We have not seen rain for a month to speak of, and we are in lots of sand. We have moved since I last wrote you. Of course I cannot say where, and mind you we are eating new potatoes and real ones, too, dug out of the soil. I suppose you have had new potatoes over in Canada yourself. What do you think of the war? Do you think it will end between now and next year at this time. By the looks of things over here I think it may. By the way, I received a parcel from mother last night, also a letter with her and Earl's photograph in it. I think she looks fine, so does Earl. Tell her I enjoyed her eats very much and the Old Chum tobacco, too. I wish I had more of it. I have two photographs now, one in the parcel and one in the letter, so tell her when you see her I received them all O.K., and I am still waiting for your picture—you promised to send me a photo of yourself; don't forget to do it. I will have to close for this time. I will write again soon. Love to all. Bye-bye.

Your loving brother,
STAN.

Ottawa, July 25.—At the night session of Parliament the bill respecting land settlement of soldiers was given second reading, and was moved into committee.

J. G. Turriff (Assiniboia) warmly opposed the idea of placing inexperienced men on the land. Men who had been living together in large numbers for the past few years would not do well when isolated twenty or forty miles from a railway.

The Minister of the Interior said no one would receive the grant unless recommended by the board. He said the bill did not apply to returned soldiers from India. He then moved an amendment providing that privileges be given to those British subjects in Canada before the war who served with any of the allied forces. The amendment passed.

Mr. Turriff urged that preference be given to Canada's returned soldiers, and Dr. Roche agreed that it would be the duty of the Dominion to look after her own men first.

In reply to Hon. Frank Oliver, who urged expropriation of land near railways which is held by speculators, Sir Hon. White said such an undertaking would be difficult at present.

Dr. Roche told S. Frank Glass (Middlesex) that soldiers aided by the Ontario Government to settle on the land could also take advantage of Dominion legislation extending aid to soldiers settling on the land.

Mr. Thomas McNutt (Saltcoats), urged that the soldiers be settled on lands adjacent to railways.

The bill was then reported and given third reading.

New York, July 25.—Brig.-Gen. W. A. White, in charge of the British Recruiting Mission in the United States, left New York yesterday for Chicago to attend the big recruiting rally for British subjects to be held there.

In a letter before leaving the General said:

"Before leaving for Chicago to take part in the recruiting rally in that city I would be glad to correct an impression which seems to have been created in some quarters that the mission was disappointed by the results of the recruiting rally in New York. This is far from being the case. Since the mission began work about six weeks ago, over 4,800 recruits have been accepted in the country, and, of course, a far greater number of men have come forward. Of these acceptances 3,800 have already been forwarded to Canada. In the New York office the acceptances continue at the rate of about seventy a day, a fairly satisfactory figure when the small field that we have to draw upon is taken into consideration. The effects of the recruiting week cannot fail to be far-reaching."

OUTING FOR CHILDREN FROM SHELTER TO-MORROW

Have Been Invited by St. John's Church to Go With Excursion.

By a happy inspiration or just plain considerateness on the part of the Excursion committee of St. John's church and Sunday school, the staff and children at the Children's Shelter have been invited to the annual outing to Bewdley to-morrow. This will doubtless provide a pleasure the little ones will greatly appreciate, and is a thoughtful act that deserves commendation.

GRADUATED INCOME TAX INTRODUCED IN COMMONS

Long Advocated by Liberals, Measure Has Been Brought Down —Will Give a Revenue of From $15,000,000 to $20,000,000 a Year.

HOW IT OPERATES

OTTAWA, July 25.—A graduated income tax, long advocated by the Liberals in the House of Commons and long refused by the Government, was introduced in the Commons this afternoon by Sir Thomas White, Minister of Finance, bowing to the insistent public demand that those who don't fight should be made to pay. The Government proposals, though they can hardly be called a real "conscription of wealth" are a long step in advance toward equalizing the financial burden and sacrifices of the war. Sir Thomas White gave a rough estimate of the probable revenue at from fifteen to twenty million dollars per year, although earlier in the session, when he refused the demand for an income tax, he had maintained that only some three or four millions per year might be expected from it. The Minister, however, explained that conditions had changed, and that his previous estimate was made on the basis of the then existing United States income tax.

Will Not Stop Luxuries of Rich.

To the principle of the tax no objection was raised by the Opposition. To the details of the Finance Minister's resolution some preliminary objections were promptly given. The chief objection was noted by Mr. E. M. Macdonald. The tax bears comparatively heavily upon men of moderate means now feeling the pinch of the high cost of living. But the men of big incomes are still left "to struggle along" with far more than they need. The man with an income of $20,000 has $18,740 still "unconscripted." The married man with an income of $4,000 pays $40 income tax under conditions which make that $40 a real pinch. The man with an income of $10,000 pays $320, but he still has $9,640 to gratify his needs. It will not, as Mr. Macdonald said, stop the luxuries or the extravagances of the rich, and consequently he believed it would not pacify public opinion as to the requirements of universal war time sacrifice.

Not Sufficient Difference.

The other main objection offered to the bill was that there was not a sufficient differentation between the unmarried and the married men in regard to the respective amounts they would have to contribute. The only differentation is that the tax, with the unmarried men, starts with incomes of $2,000 a year, while with the married men it starts with $3,000 a year.

The Scale of Taxation.

In brief, the bill provides for exemptions of all incomes up to $2,000 per year in the case of unmarried men or widowers without children, and $3,000 per year in the case of married men. After that, up to $6,000 per year, the tax is 4 per cent. per annum; between $6,000 and $10,000 per year, 6 per cent. between $10,000 and $20,000, 9 per cent.; between $20,000 and $30,000, 12 per cent.; between $30,000 and $50,000, 14 per cent.; between $50,000 and $100,000, 19 per cent., and over $100,000, 20 per cent.

Tax on Corporations.

In addition, all business firms and corporations, where the profits are in excess of $3,000 per year, are liable to a tax of 4 per cent. per annum, but if the business tax now in force ex-

ROUMANIANS WIN BRILLIANT VICTORY IN CARPATHIANS

Troops Under General Averesco Assume the Offensive and Occupy Two Villages, Capturing Several Hundred Prisoners and Nineteen Guns

FOE'S LINES BROKEN

PETROGRAD, July 25.—A report of the General Staff of the Roumanian army, received here to-day, says:

"In the south Carpathians troops under General Rofosa Averesco assumed the offensive and occupied the villages of Meresci and Volochancy, and captured several hundred prisoners and nineteen guns, including some heavy ones. We owe this success to the skillful manoeuvring and and close co-operation of the Roumanian and Russian forces, and also to the vigorous activity of our allied artillery.

"The powerfully organized enemy line has been broken on an extensive front. The bravery and devotion of the troops was incomparable. Among other incidents, one battery lost its entire personnel, except seven men, who continued firing without cessation, and finally succeeded in silencing the enemy's fire. Lieutenant-General Stcherbatcheff (Commander of the Russian forces in Roumania), decorated all these men with the St. George's Cross."

Mutinous Russian Divisions Receive Terrible Punishment

LONDON, July 26. — Under Gen. Kornieloff's drastic measures to restore order in the eleventh army, one whole division thereof was blown to pieces by their own artillery, to "avenge insults which all loyal troops have been enduring for the past four months from these traitorous rascals," says a despatch to the Post from Petrograd.

ALIENS MAY BE DRAFTED

United States is Negotiating With Allies Along That Line

WASHINGTON, July 26.—The United States to-day is negotiating with the allies to legalize drafting many thousands of aliens in this country to fight under the American flag. In every section of the nation an outcry against the "obvious injustice" of the present law as applied to non-citizens is rising. Already it has reached Congress and forced action.

At the Italian Embassy to-day it was stated diplomatic negotiations was under way to bring an 80 thousand Italians of military age in the United States under the provision of the draft.

In Chicago one-fourth of the entire registration is exempt as aliens. In one district of 2,823 registration, 2,709 are exempt as aliens, leaving only 815 Americans, from which to draw 577 soldiers.

THE WAR AND LITERATURE.

That the war has had its influence on literary taste in his country is not to be wondered at when we consider its sobering effect on the spirits of the nation.

In 1890 the people may be said to have been "novel mad." In that year twenty-four per cent of the books printed here were novels and every publisher was on the lookout for a "best seller." Historical novels, no matter how inaccurate chronologically cowboy tales, in which an English earl, disguised as a "puncher," won the heart of the brave young American and, incidentally, thrashed his rival, and stories of life in New York's slums were all sold in numbers previously undreamt of in the book trade.

The war brought with it a taste for more serious reading and a sharp decline in the "best selling" fiction market. As the nation grew more and more thoughtful the output of novels declined in volume until last year, when fiction represented but nine per cent. of the entire production. At the present moment a few novels are selling well, and these are for the most part the ones that, like "Mr. Britling" and "The Red Planet," deal with some phase of the war.—New York Herald.

EXTREMISTS BOTH.

Our French-Canadian confreres continue to cite in full column the foolish diatribes of the "Sentinel" against the Catholics and the French-Canadians. They parry very briskly the injurious shafts of the sectarian paper. All that is very well.

However, we read very often in the English newspapers expressions of opinion, sympathetic to our race, and we aver that those who are the most inclined to give prominence to the words of critics or to the insults of the "Sentinel" are in the least hurry to publish and to praise the articles of our English Protestant friends.

We aver also that in spite of the filthy words of the Orangist paper, there is in the province of Quebec, a whole school which gives itself over to an angry, harmful and lying campaign against the English and their institutions.

We understand also that one of the demagogues of this Province who is always notable for his ridicule of the English is treated with unbelievable regard by such papers as "L'Action Catholique," and by institutions which have just suffered from the counter effects of his dangerous and criminal invectives.

It is not only in Toronto and among the Orangemen that one meets fanaticism, extreme utterances and bad faith. There is too strong a dose of these poisons in the Quebec atmosphere. —L'Evenement, Quebec.

THE THIRD READING.

(From the Toronto Globe)

The military Service Bill has passed its third reading in the House of Commons with its support intact. The vote will reassure Liberal conscriptionists who had interpreted the report of the Ontario Liberal conference as a declaration against the principle of the Bill.

The measure now goes to the Senate freighted with the hopes of all Canadians who believe that it offers the only way of escape from repudiation of Canada's pledges to the great cause.

Men in the trenches who have been fighting for nearly three years are unable to get a furlough or even a proper rest behind the lines, because Canada has ceased to reinforce the reserves in England. Every Canadian should feel the reproach like a knife-thrust. Every public man should realize his special responsibility and take his political life in his hands, if need be. If taking his stand upon principle, if he believes that the selective draft is the just method and the only method of bringing the desired results, he should vote for his convictions and think nothing of the consequence to himself. Cynics may deride this as a pious aspiration, a counsel of perfection, too bright and good for the daily food of "practical politics," but heroism in the public life of Canada is as much needed to-day as heroism in the battlefield. The member of Parliament who would leave the decision of this vital issue to a referendum will forfeit his personal influence in moulding and guiding public opinion. No matter how sincere his motives may be, people will follow a man who shows the courage of leadership. They will not follow a man who merely trails after what he believes to be the prevailing sentiment in the narrow hearts of his own constituency. A statesman will first fix his course, and will then endeavour to persuade his fellow-countrymen to travel in the same direction.

GERMANY'S "CRISIS"

Whether Bethmann Hollweg has resigned or not, the wisest words that have been spoken about the German "crisis" are those of Acting Secretary of State Polk:

It is well not to exaggerate the real meaning of Germany's internal strife on her foreign policies or on her efforts in the war. Any changes that may take place there would be much more important if they affected the military rather than the civilian—if they reached men like Hindenburg and Ludendorff, for instance.

The present is the most serious and heated internal conflict that has arisen in Germany since the war began, but there will have to be much graver ones than this before anything can happen there which will have any effect on the war, or even upon German liberty. It makes no difference whether Zimmermann or some one else holds the post of Foreign Minister. The Foreign Minister in other and democratic countries is appointed by the people through their Parliaments or other representatives, is responsible to them, and does their will. The Foreign Minister in Germany is a mere head of department, a sublimated head clerk, carrying out the Kaiser's orders, responsible only to him. It makes no difference whether Bethmann or some one else is Chancellor, for the Chancellor is literally what he proclaims himself to be, the servant of the Kaiser. "I do not serve the Reichstag," said Bethmann himself on a notable occasion. It makes no difference whether the people obtain a larger representation in the Reichstag and the Junkers accept a smaller one. The Reichstag is an impotent body of public speakers and does not legislate; the legislation is done in secret by the reigning houses of Germany, meeting in the Bundesrath, and all the Reichstag can do is to talk. When it talks too much, the Kaiser ends its session.

It makes no difference, in short, what is done. It makes no difference what reforms the Kaiser grants, so long as he stops short of constitutional reform; and he will stop short of that. It makes no difference what officials he dismisses or what officials he appoints. Whatever he may do, the war will go on for the accomplishment of the Kaiser's aims, and the Kaiser's aims alone. True, there is a check upon those aims and upon the direction he compels Germany to take, but it is a check with which the people have nothing to do. The check is not in the hands of the people, but in the hands of his brother Princes of the royal German houses. That is the intent of the German Constitution and until that Constitution is swept away there can be no change that will mean anything to the world. And that Constitution cannot even be amended if the Kaiser prefers that it should not be, for he has a practical veto over anything in that direction that the other German monarchs might attempt.

Therefore the present "crisis" is no place to look for any real reform in Germany, any advance of democracy, or any change in war aims dictated by the people. The encouraging thing about it is that there should have been even such a crisis as this. It will lead the way, perhaps, to others, and each will go a little further, until some time in the future there may be a real crisis; and then there will be hope for Germany.—New York Times.

THE CENSORSHIP.

In replying to Mr. Oliver, the Prime Minister says that the Dominion censor, Mr. E. J. Chambers, has made a report giving reasons for censoring Arthur Mee's book "The Fiddlers." Another report is being prepared by the chief censor and the Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs. This report will come before the Government and the decision probably be communicated to the House. The reasons also ought to be communicated.

In the meantime two reasons are assigned—one that the drink interest in England is so powerful as to be able to enforce the suppression of facts—the other, that certain statements in the book would discourage recruiting. As to the first, it must be said in fairness that the book is not suppressed in England. It may be argued that the circulation of the book in Canada would be of no use, as we have no voice in any decision affecting the manufacture or consumption of intoxicants in Great Britain.

In fact, Canadians, being jealous of their own rights of self-government, have some delicacy in referring to a matter of domestic policy in the United Kingdom. Yet they cannot be prevented from thinking and talking, and it must be said that not only do temperance advocates feel strongly on the subject, but that outside the moral issue involved, there is some perplexity and surprise that in a time of great scarcity of food, and of means of transportation, so obvious an economy as the total prohibition of the manufacture of intoxicants is not adopted.

For the advocacy of thrift in Canada, powerful arguments are found in the threatened food famine in England, and in the severe economies there enforced and practiced in the use of food. Undoubtedly the latter argument would be greatly strengthened if the waste of grain, sugar, transportation, and labour involved in the manufacture of an article whose food value is negligible were stopped.

Those who entertain these views think it wrong that Canadians should not even be allowed to read what is said in advocacy of that course.

As to the second reason, it is likely that the statements regarding Canadian soldiers might discourage recruiting. But such an argument, if strictly and broadly applied, would leave Canadians in ignorance of much that is passing in England. In the earlier stages of the war its conduct was severely criticised, especially by what is known as the Northcliffe press. Practically it was contended that precious lives of soldiers were being wasted as the result of administrative bungling. All this had a tendency to discourage recruiting. But that danger had to be faced in order that pressure might be brought to bear with such force as to compel reform.

Largely in consequence of that retrom the old Ministry was replaced by that of Lloyd George, and the constitution of England radically changed to meet the exigencies of war. It is generally agreed, even by those who dislike the violence and unfairness of the Northcliffe papers, that the change was good and the agitation justified.

If the censorship had then been applied as in the case of "The Fiddlers," the London Times, the London Daily Mail, and other papers, would have been excluded from Canada, and anyone found in possession of or circulating those papers, would have been severely punished. Would public opinion in Canada have approved of that course? Should we not all have said that we had a right to read what was being read in England, and to form our own judgments?

Moreover, if the uncensored opinin a more vigorous prosecution of the war, is there nt reason to believe that a similar result would follow from the uncensored opinions of those who point out the dangerous waste of food and of alcohol for munitions involved in the manufacture of intoxicants?—Toronto Star.

LEIPSIG THREATENED.

The announcement of a movement to establish a national conservatory of music in New York threatens another blow at the delusion of German predominance in certain fields. To a committee, headed by Reginald de Koven has been entrusted the responsibility of naming a national committee to adopt permanent plans. There is a promise of success in the personnel of supporters, including Frank Damrosch, George W. Chadwick, Clarence Eddy, Albert Spalding, David Bispham and others. Among other retributive indemnities the war is likely to impose upon Germany is the passing of the prominence in musical culture of Leipzig and Berlin.

FOUR IMPORTANT IMPROVEMENTS ON GERMAN U-BOATS

NEW TELESCOPIC PERISCOPE USED.

Bubbles Obviated and Listening Apparatus more Efficient.

Washington. — Four important improvements are known to have been adopted by German submarines since April first, but the progress by this country and its allies in devices for the destruction of U-boats are declared to have been almost negligible in that time.

The four known developments since April 1 are:

1—Four small pumps, regulated by electrical devices so the hydrostate will indicate the depth of submersion, by which the submarine is enabled to remain motionless under the water. Formerly, the submarine was obliged to come to the surface; it planed up, assumed a level position on the surface, and to submerge it planed down for the dive, the operation requiring two and a half minutes. It was obliged also to continue in motion always unless anchored to the bottom, being in this respect like an airplane which has to keep going or fall to the earth. The submarine before the new device was installed, would either sink or rise to the surface if it stopped.

With the pumps, if the tendency is to rise, when the U-boat is motionless, more water is pumped in; if the tendency is to sink more water is pumped out. Thus the submarine is now enabled to visit any spot in the ocean, submerge to desired depth and lie perfectly still.

Before this device was installed, the throb of the submarine's propellers was heard by submarine chasers. Now the submarine may elude the pursuer by standing still under water. Formerly the submarine used up the power in its batteries and that meant fuel consumption in some form. Now, by being able to remain still they consume less fuel and are enabled to stay at their posts for a considerable longer time than formerly.

2. German submarines are using telescopic periscopes. The U-boat floats very near to the surface, then suddenly shoots up its periscope, in this manner being enabled to detect as quickly as being detected. The telescope in the same manner, may be withdrawn instantly and the submarine can change its position without leaving a wake. Heretofore the periscopes went slashing through the water, leaving a great white wake.

3—Now the German submarines are using the Diessel engine, it being supplied with oxygen and a mixture of strained gas which takes the place of air. The exhaust is broken up by a series of widespread, fine meshed nets, so that the gas is washed free of smoke and when the gas comes to the surface it is infinitesimally small bubbles which do not make any wake.

4. Remarkable improvement has been made in the German submarines telephone and listening devices, enabling them to hear and to locate a considerable distance away the direction and the type of vessel from the frequency of their propeller returns. This listening radius is usually about five miles.

These and other probable improvements in the submarine as employed by Germany, are increasing the difficulty of the American and Allied problem in protecting merchant ships and maintaining the lines of communication overseas. Despite various stories which have been published and alleging the discovery of effecting anti-submarine devices, it was asserted by an authority to-day that no real progress had been made, and that the Navy Department has quite on the contrary, settled upon a definite policy for fighting the submarines, comprising two features which have been known for months but which it was popularly supposed were being augmented and elaborated by new devices.

The policy was said to be, first, the naval type of vessels, and second, the 110 foot submarine chasers. A related part of the policy was said to be the construction of every merchant ship possible to offset the expected destruction of bottoms by German submarines.

Some naval critics asserted to-day that the true problem is the protection of floating craft rather than the construction of new merchant bottoms, holding that the building of fighting ships is more essential than immediate construction of other bottoms as the necessity is to bend every energy towards the destruction of submarines.

The criticism was based on the dictum that it is easier to preserve existing tonnage than to construct new, and a further advantage was said to be that the country at the end of a given period, would have not only the tonnage destroyed but also that which is now in addition to the newly built fighting craft with which to protect all of it.

FARMER INSTANTLY KILLED.

Fence Rail Strikes him on Head and Colt Jumps on Him.

Brockville, July 25. — John Landon, a prosperous farmer residing a mile from Lansdowne on the Mooretown road, lost his life under peculiar circumstances yesterday. It seems a neighbor's colt got into his field, and with his little boy, about 12 years old, he was trying to put it out. One of the rails on the fence flew off, striking him on the head, and the colt also jumped on him, killing him instantly. Besides his wife, he leaves two children, a son, Harold, and a daughter, Leone.

HORSE IS HEIR TO $1,000.

Sidney Shannon of Appleton, Wis., began his business life as a grocer. He won success by the canvass of his clientele with a horse and buckboard. His personally solicited business grew so that he soon became the leading merchant in the city of 30,000. A year ago Mr. Shannon died, still under forty.

Mr. Shannon had in the last years of his life used his delivery horse for a driving animal, for he looked the part after being curried and cared for properly. His will, opened recently, provided that $1,000 be set aside with which to buy hay and oats and provide good shelter for the horse for the rest of his life.

LORD BYRON'S PROPHESY SEEMS TO BE ON ITS WAY TO EVENTUAL FULFILMENT

Napoleon's prediction that in fifty years Europe would be Cossack or Republican failed as to time limit, but to the student of history to-day it seems to be on its way to eventual fulfillment, but along the line of democracy or republicanism, and not of the Russianization which the prisoner at Elba condensed in the one word Cossack.

Still another prophecy, somewhat similar in its purport, was made nearly a century ago by a contemporary of Napoleon, a man of splendid genius and, as shown by his glorious death, a lover of freedom and humanity. In his journal under the date of January 12, 1821, Lord Byron wrote:

> Dined—news come—the powers mean to war with the people. The intelligences seems positive—let it be so—they will be beaten in the end. The King-times are fast finishing. There will be blood shed like water, and tears like mists; but the people will conquer in the end. I shall not live to see it—but I foresee it.

The ancient name for the real poet was the seer and his powers of divination were supposed, and rightly even as we judge to-day, to be given from on high, whether we call their source the Muses, or the gods of the Greek or Roman Pantheon, or God as worshipped in civilized lands to-day. But, aside from all powers of divining future events, all readers of "Childe Harold" knew that Byron mused deeply upon the past of the splendid Empires of Greece and Rome, and it was the inspiration he caught from them that led him at last to a glorious death in the cause of Greek freedom. That such a student of history and such a seer in the old sense of the word was led by the events more or less clearly foreshadowed to him by the state of Europe in 1821 to confide such a prediction to the pages of his journal is certainly striking when his prophecy after the lapse of nearly a hundred years is read to-day. For never before in the history of the world was it so manifest as it is to-day that, as Byron wrote, "the King-times are fast finishing." And, read in the light of the events of the last three years, his prediction that blood will be shed like water, and tears like mists, is literally being fulfilled to-day. But beyond that torrent of blood and its accompanying mist of tears the poet caught a cheerful glimpse of the world that lies ahead. He foresaw, and his words are daily becoming more significant, that "the people will triumph in the end."

As to literal fulfillment of the prediction as to King-times, one has need but to turn to Europe and the world in general in recent days and at present. Brazil and China long ago deposed their Emperors, and though monarchy is again raising its head in China, there is reason to believe the Manchu dynasty cannot be restored. It certainly will take more than an edict to accomplish such a result.

In Europe he is a careful reader and student of the news who can tell where the Kings of Montenegro and Serbia are now holding their Courts. King Albert of Belgium deserves his Kingship, but he is now fighting to regain both throng and kingdom. King Constantine of Greece has been compelled to exchange his throne for a chateau in Switzerland, and the former Czar of all the Russias is a prisoner in a palace that is no longer his. Russia's revolution fits admirably into the philosophy of present events and in what Tourgenieff called "The slow and rhythmic progress of the world," so admirably, indeed, that it is impossible to believe that what has happened in Russia is a mere temporary phase in its history, but rather that it is in accordance with "the far-off divine event to which the whole creation moves."

Still further scanning the Europe of to-day we see other indications of the decline of Kingship. Unless political prophets of the day are mistaken, Spain will soon be following the example of Portugal and discard Kingship. The Kinglet of Saxony also sees his pasteboard crown in danger of being cast aside, and there are rumours that Norway may soon become a republic. Certainly there is abundant confirmation of Byron's prophecy in the Europe of to-day, and the great Central Powers may yet see the shortest and safest road where Russia has shown the way.—New York Times.

STOLE NEW POTATOES GROWN BY OLD MEN

From the House of Providence—Thief Took Only the Big Tubers.

A number of the old men at the House of Providence planted a lot of potatoes near their home and by careful cultivation have raised a promising crop. Last night some miscreant tore up many of the stocks, picking off the larger tubers and throwing aside the rest. It was not only petty thieving, but also a wanton waste of the potatoes that were not full grown and consequently were left on the ground. If the garden thieves are so mean that they steal from the inmates of a charitable institution, nothing is safe from them, especially the vacant lot crops that are now flourishing in many parts of the city.

LIFE'S WEAVER.

(William J. Robinson, in Boston News Bureau.)

I sit to-day at the loom of life and weave and weave and weave;
The warp is laid by hands Divine,
but the weft is where I grieve.
For every moment in every day, the shuttle flies through and through!
And the patterns I scheme with the dreams I dream,
Are made of the things I do.
I have naught to do with the warp I tread, the threads are already set.
But my duty lies, as the shuttle flies,
in the fabric I'm weaving yet.
Smiles and tears, kind words and fears, are wound on the bobbins I wind,
And every thoughtless word is there,
and every word unkind;
And every act I would fain forget,
And the thoughts that were dark and vain,
I view in the fabric of life I weave,
and I see them and see them again.
But I sit and weave with an aching heart, and a world of intense regret,
And tears fall fast as I view the past,
and I pray that I may forget.
But out of repining and soul recoil I look in the future and see,
My life stretch out in its future plan,
and a new hope comes to me.
I know not the length of the warp I view, I know not my given span,
But into the fabric I yet may weave
I'll put all the best I can,
Smiles, and kindness, and patient care, unselfishness, service and love;
Harmony ,sunshine, faith and hope and thus my contrition prove.
When the "throw" shall fall from my nerveless hand, and the shuttle lies at rest,
May I hear the Voice of the Master
say,
You've done what you thought was best!

EATS WAY INTO SEA MILITIA.

Peekskill Man, Under Weight, Dieted Persevering and Gets By After Three Rejections.

PEEKSKILL, N.Y., July 25.— Gilbert Heady, of Peekskill, returned here to-day in a Naval Militia uniform and boasted that, after being rejected three times because he was under weight, he had put on more flesh and had finally wheezed into the service.

He tried the Naval Militia several weeks ago and lacked five pounds. He began exercising and eating heartily and added two pounds before being examined for the National Guard. Again rejected he kept on dieting and still lacked two pounds when he tried the regular army. After more dieting he finally got into the Naval Militia.
